INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF REV. C. B. F——.

He first applied to me about two and a half years ago. He had then been ill for three months, with cough, blood spitting, night perspirations, and loss of flesh and strength. Had been under Dr. Q , then under a doctor at Manchester, who examined the expectoration, and discovered the germs of tubercle.

He paid me four visits, at intervals, during a period of twelve months, besides which, numerous letters of advice were written to himself or a lady friend. After which he went to Australia, and visited me again on his return, having had some relapse through trouble at the loss of a dear relative, great over-pressure of clerical duties (by which he was always disposed to over-tax his strength), and the trying weather of the Spring. A tonic prescribed for him, did him much good, in addition to the regular continuance with my medicine. So that the friend (who sometimes corresponded with me for him) last Autumn, reported him to be "quite well, with exception of a little cough from relaxed throat and uvula."

On the 22nd Feb., 1888, the patient writes:—"I am now thoroughly well, and have not a symptom of the illness. I do not fail to commend your treatment to others who need it."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days, Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A HUMANE TELEPHONE.—People who suffer from deafness and noises in the head will be glad to hear that an eminent Aural Specialist of London has hit upon a cure which is said to be absolutely efficacious, and may be applied at the patient's home. It is a miniature telephone, which fits inside the ear. It is not only a producer of sound, but also a cure for the distressing noises in the head. Being comfortable to wear, it will no doubt be a boon to mankind. A pamphlet describing its construction is printed, and may be had from the Publisher, 21, Bedford-square, London, W.C. Price 3d.

MR. MÜLLER IN NEW ZEALAND.

THE visit of Mr. George Müller to New Zealand in July last was greatly blessed. A correspondent writes from Auckland:—"The Lord's people generally were much benefited. Every school of thought was represented at the meetings, which were also attended by Jews and sceptics."

Another correspondent writes:—Mr. Müller spoke on various points of Christian life. With reference to Rom. viii. 28, he maintained that here is a definite and positive promise, unlimited in its terms, but limited as to those to whom it applies—those that love God. The very smallest particle of love to God brings one within the limits. To all alike this promise applies—that all things shall work together for their good. Not merely shall they be dragged through with no great harm happening to them, but all things shall bring them blessing. Mr. Müller then gave some illustrations from his own experience of the last sixty-two years. He stated that God had given him to see that this promise has been true in his case, in every one of the hundreds of instances of the trials and disappointments he has come through. He referred to one occasion as by far and away the greatest trial he had ever had (though he did not tell us the nature of the trial), and in this instance, he said, he had to wait eight years before he saw that it had been for his good. He then told us that on one occasion a donation of £1200 had been sent him, and he had sent it to his bankers; some days after the donor wrote, saying that her relatives had reproached her very strongly for sending him the money, and asking him to return it. Without the least hesitation, he sent back a cheque for the whole amount, feeling that God would have him do so; but of course, and also for special reasons, as he was just then leaving Bristol for the Continent, with great disappointment. Soon afterwards, however, he had great reason to be thankful that this money had been sent back, though he had not time to go into the reasons of the matter. Speaking generally, he said that, for such seasons of great disappointment, he usually had the greatest reason afterwards to thank God for his dealings.

Proceeding, Mr. Müller said he had been asked how he knew really what was the mind of God in certain matters—how he decided as to whether God would have him do this thing, or not do it—go to such a place or remain away. He said he had found great numbers of Christians perplexed as to this matter, and therefore he would relate how he acted. The first thing in this was to be sure that we were willing to follow the leading and to do the will of God, when we knew it. This "state of heart" is the first necessity; it is no good to go like the Jews went to Jeremiah, having already made up their minds to go (or send) to Egypt, whatever the prophet might declare as the mind of the Lord. Next we must consider what Scripture principles bear on the matter. In the case of a direct precept, of course there would be little difficulty, but the absence of this might leave us still perplexed. Then we have to take into consideration natural circumstances. For instance, if I had an offer of a situation requiring great strength of mind or body, while I was weak and feeble, God certainly did not call me to this situation, and I might take it as positive proof that He did not. He had a few times used the method of drawing lots, but he did not think that was the way in which God would have his people get direction, as there was no example in the New Testament (except one) of the lot being used, much less any direction to use it. In the one case, of the place of Judas being filled, it was before the Holy Ghost had been given. Then again, we should never be hurried into any decision of importance, as he believed that Satan desired to hurry us to do things and form decisions in a hurried way, before we had time for prayer and consideration. He mentioned a case of a brother, who came to him for counsel one morning at nine o'clock, as to whether he should buy a large business. Mr. Müller, being very much engaged, said, "I cannot advise you now, but I will be delighted to consider it with you to-morrow." The brother replied, "I cannot wait till then, as I have to give an answer at noon, and if I do not accept it then, someone else will get the business." "Why," said Mr. Müller, "this cannot be of God, that you should have no time for prayer and consideration, and that you should invest all the money you have earned in your life without seeing the books of the business to prove the statements you have heard." The brother, however, left him, and bought the business at twelve o'clock, with the result that he was bankrupt in six months, and lost all his own money, and also a very large sum that he had borrowed from his friends, having been deceived entirely by the statements of those who sold him the business.

Mr. Müller told how he bought the first of the land on Ashley Down for building the Orphan Houses upon. At that time, he said, there was a mania for building all round Bristol, and as he looked about, he could not find anything suitable at all within his means, land going at £1000 and £1500 per acre, and he required seven or eight acres. So he placed the matter before the Lord for thirteen weeks; he would have gone on praying for thirteen months, or thirteen years, if needful; but the Lord showed him where to go, in thirteen weeks. He heard that a certain merchant had land for sale on Ashley Down, and he went to look at it. It proved the most suitable he had seen, and the price was only £200 per acre, instead of £1000 to £1500 or £2000. He was told, "If you go to the gentleman's house at 7 p.m., he is sure to be home, and you can see him then." He went, and was informed that the gentleman was not at home, but in his counting-house. Going to the counting-house, he found that the gentleman had just gone to his residence. Discerning the finger of God in this, Mr. Müller said within himself: "I will do no more this evening, but see about it to-morrow." Went to office next morning at 9. The merchant said, "Oh, I have heard of you; you want land to build an orphanage. During the night I was unable to sleep between 2 and 5 a.m., and God told me that if you came again about the land, I should let you have it, and as it is for an orphanage, I was not to charge you £200 per acre, but only £120." So, said Mr. Müller, in ten minutes the contract was signed, and I saved £560 on the seven acres, because I was willing to wait for God to act between 2 and 5 in the morning of February 7 so many years ago.

Mr. Müller also related about his first call to go to the United States, and the letter from five pastors of five churches of five different denominations. The letters were laid before the Lord. There was a dread of the Atlantic and sea-sickness. He told the Lord he was willing to be sea-sick, to suffer all discomfort, to be wrecked or drowned, if in obedience to God's will. He went. Had never been sea-sick since he has been to sea—sixty times—to all parts of the world, and is able to wait on his wife, who suffers badly.

Now, said he, I will tell you something more to illustrate what it is really to trust in God. When I started the work, many said, "Oh, Mr. Müller gets the money because of enthusiasm. When the fanaticism dies off, the work will collapse." It has not collapsed yet. Then they said, "Oh, it is because of the novelty." The novelty is gone long since, but the money still comes without asking any man for anything. Then they said, "It is because Mr. Müller is a foreigner," but surely that reason would work the other way. At last they said, "Oh, it is because of the reports, they bring the money." So one year we had been very poor all the year—had to pray for supplies day by day, and very often meal by meal; obliged to have a prayer-meeting after breakfast for the dinner, and again after dinner for the third meal, and this continued almost all the year, and we very rarely had supplies for three days at a time; so, at the end of the year, I decided that I would not publish any report. The second year was gone through the same way exactly; and I then said I would not publish a report this year either, lest it should be said that poverty had driven us to make the case known, as we could not go on any longer. So I charged every one not to let any account of the state of poverty get abroad, and thus the third year was entered upon. The first month, same state of things; second month, ditto; third month, no change—still prayer, day by day, for daily supplies; but in the middle of the fourth month a large donation was sent, and then I said, "Now we will publish a report to make known the Lord's goodness to us."

In a most impressive manner, which you could feel affected everyone to their souls, Mr. Müller declared, as an honest servant of Christ speaking before God: Believe me, or believe me not, I state most solemnly, in the presence of God, that if anyone had offered me a thousand sovereigns to make known our state of poverty I would not have taken the offer. I did it for the honour of God; it was not the money that I studied, but the honour of God. And now (continued he, in the most simple and affecting way) I go about all over the world, and Christians in every place are glad to see me, and treat me with the greatest kindness. They have heard of me, and are glad and delighted to see me and listen to me, and honour me in every way; God thus honouring me, because I have desired and endeavoured to honour Him.

It did me good to hear the dear old believer speak, and thus relate how he had tried and proved that the Lord is good, for more than half a century.

TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATIONS.

DURING the past five weeks the General Committee of the "Gospel Temperance Movement" have taken a new departure in the work of evangelising the East-end masses. Every Saturday evening, Mr. William Noble, accompanied by a large corps of fellow-workers, headed by bands and banners, parade the districts around Hoxton, holding brief open-air meetings. The processionists having arrived at a suitable spot, a temporary platform is placed in a prominent position, surrounded by a choir, which is led by a brass band in singing favourite hymns. Short addresses are delivered, and in every case listened to with attention.

The outcome of these proceedings has been a large increase in the gatherings at the headquarters of the movement. Mr. Noble proposes to continue the work, weather permitting, through October; he will gladly welcome friends from a distance any Saturday evening at 5.45 at Hoxton Hall, where the procession is formed. A large number of pledges have been taken.

On Sunday last, Mr. J. F. Shorey (late of New York) and Mr. Noble gave earnest addresses, and at the close some three hundred persons remained to the after meeting, which was of an impressive character.

THE DECAY OF FAMILY PRAYER in England (says Mr. Spurgeon) is a serious sign. We frequently hear professors argue that it is a mere expedient, and that they have not the time for it, and so forth. Others plead that it is difficult to select suitable portions, and that the children and the servants don't understand what is read. If there is a will, there is a way. As to diffidence and timidity, no one has a right to indulge those luxuries at the expense of duty. Father, begin family prayer at once! And if you will not, we trust mother will resolve to attend to it herself, rather than leave the house without a roof, and the family without an altar.

Personalia.

Rev. Samuel Pearson, the newly settled pastor of Highbury Quadrant Church, began his stated ministry on Sunday last.

Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff, has promised £100 per annum for three years, towards the support of lay evangelists in South Wales.

Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson resumes his special monthly sermons to young men in Islington Presbyterian Church, Colebrooke-row, N., next Sunday evening.

Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, after attending the Pan-Anglican Synod in England, lately visited Miss De Bröen's Paris Mission, and bore a warm testimony to its value.

Rev. H. Pelham Stokes has been appointed to the vicarage of Isleswerth. The work that Mr. Stokes has done in Wareham and neighbourhood is widely known and valued.

Mr. Henry Varley is in the midst of a deeply interesting mission at Torquay, South Devon. On Sunday next he begins a mission at the Victoria Hall, Sunderland.

The Bishop of St. Albans, who has been detained at Argyll Lodge, Kensington, by weakness of the heart, for some time past, is reported to be making steady progress towards recovery.

Mr. J. N. Rees, of the Y.M.C.A., Bridgwater, is about to enter on mission work in Germany. He intends leaving Bridgwater about the third week in September, and England early in October.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse, writing from Algiers, ask their Christian friends to pray for them; for health and strength of body and soul, and that they may be still used in service to the Lord, for his glory.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has gone to the Continent for a month. Correspondents will be good enough to forgive delay in reply to their letters. It will be impossible for him to add to the list of engagements for this year.

Mr. Robert Anderson, LL.D., barrister-at-law, the well-known author of "The Coming Prince," "Human Destiny," "The Gospel and its Ministry," &c., has been appointed Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, in the room of Mr. James Monro, resigned.

Mr. George Clarke has been charged by a Melbourne critic with emptying the churches, but this The Southern Cross declares to be a wild inaccuracy. No evangelist who ever visited Victoria, it says, has worked with greater loyalty and zeal as the helper of all the churches than Mr. Clarke.

Miss Edith O'Gorman (Mrs. Auffray), the "Escaped Nun," has arrived in London, after a very successful lecturing tour in Australia and New Zealand. She intends lecturing in England, on behalf of the Protestant cause, during the coming winter. She has won for herself hosts of friends in every class of society in Australia and New Zealand.

Mrs. Joseph Lucas, the well-known temperance advocate, has left Sunderland in consequence of continued ill-health, and has been induced to seek the more genial climatic conditions of Hitchin, in Hertfordshire. Her friends will ardently wish that she may soon be restored to health; whilst temperance reformers will hope that the cause they have at heart may long have the support of her powerful advocacy.

Pastor W. J. Mayers, who is leaving Bristol, and coming to London, will conduct a Gospel temperance mission in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, during the week commencing October 1. "Mr. Mayer," says Mr. Spurgeon, "who can both speak and sing very sweetly, never goes off holy ground in temperance work. We want friends in Southwark and Lambeth to hunt up the people and bring them in, that with a full house and the Divine blessing we may see sinners saved."

Mr. B. Short, the Australian evangelist, will deliver three special addresses in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings next, at eight, using as an object-lesson his beautiful and complete model of the Tabernacle of Israel in the Wilderness. Mr. Short has spoken twice at the week-night meetings at the Tabernacle. Mr. Spurgeon speaks highly of his teaching on the lessons of the Jewish Tabernacle. Mr. Short is leaving for New South Wales on September 21.

Hon. Neal Dow intends to revisit England, and will probably be in the "Old Country" in a few weeks. He is now in his eighty-fifth year, is hale and active, and as enthusiastic as ever in temperance work.

Sir Charles Aitchison, late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab, in a recent address on missions, asserted that Christianity in India is spreading four or five times as fast as the ordinary population, and that the native Christians now number nearly 1,000,000 souls.

Rev. F. B. Meyer hopes to resume his ministry in Regent's Park Chapel, Park-square East, on Sunday next. In the morning, at 11 o'clock, he will give the first of a series of sermons on the Epistle to the Hebrews; in the evening, at 7 o'clock, the first of five sermons on "'What think ye of Christ?' His sublime character." Visitors are welcomed; gallery seats are free and open. Prayer-meeting every Monday at 7.30.

Dr. Andrew Bonar.—A testimonial is to be presented to this venerable Scottish pastor. It is desired to raise £5000 to hand over to him on the occasion of his jubilee. This would give him leisure to prepare for publication the further results of his lifelong study of Scripture. Notwithstanding the enormous circulation of Dr. Bonar's memoir of McCheyne, we believe (says The British Weekly) he himself has derived no pecuniary advantage from it.

Mr. Charles Cook (of Hyde Park Hall, London, W.) purposes leaving England on the 21st inst., on a visit to the prisoners in Morocco. He is anxious to provide the inmates of these dungeons with copies of the Scriptures in Arabic, and is also hopeful of doing something towards mitigating the wretched condition of these prisoners. He asks prayer for guidance in this mission, and would be thankful for the co-operation of our readers in the work of distributing the Scriptures.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe is failing in mind as well as in body. She is being affectionately cared for by her children at a quiet farmhouse in Long Island. She seldom speaks; any kind of mental exertion is distasteful to her, and she can take no solid food. Recently a visitor spoke to her of her great book, and she freely replied, "I did not write it. God wrote it. I merely did his dictation." It may be of interest to note that Mrs. Stowe's famous book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is about to be published by Mr. Nankivell in phonography.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are about to commence a twelve months' mission in connection with the London churches. A list of their engagements will be announced from time to time, and the progress of the work reported. It is hoped that many will remember them in prayer, and heartily co-operate with them as far as possible. They are now labouring at Penge, and the results are very encouraging; they will next conduct a mission at Bromley, Kent, and afterwards in the West of London. Mr. Spurgeon has written an open letter warmly commending their efforts.

Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, pastor of East Finchley Congregational Church, has recently introduced a distinctly missionary element into his Sunday evening services, which is much appreciated by his congregation. After the opening exercises, he has devoted about ten minutes to giving information respecting the condition of Africa, and the nature and outcome of the work being done on that continent, thinking it wiser to concentrate attention for some Sundays on one country than to select a different field week by week. Mr. Tinling dwells on the work of agents of different societies, and hopes to secure a large missionary map of the world, to be hung on the wall near to his pulpit, for the better illustration of the information he seeks to impart.

Professor Delitzsch, of Leipsic, takes a deep interest in Christian missions to the Jews. One of his most recent writings is entitled, "Earnest Questions to the Educated of the Jewish Religion," and is a friendly address to the Jews, in which he proves the Messiahship of Jesus. In order to have a correct view of Christianity, Delitzsch enjoins it upon the Israelite to examine the New Testament, and to see what Jesus says and what his Apostles say. Moses and his people have done nothing for the conversion of the Gentile world; whereas the Apostolic preaching has overcome the heathenism of the Roman empire, and is still exercising its influence in every direction. The like Judaism has not to show. Christianity has created a new time, has opened a new era.—British Weekly.

PHILIP PHILLIPS IN ENGLAND.

Last Sunday evening, Philip Phillips, the "Singing Pilgrim," conducted an illuminated song service, under the auspices of the Lancaster Temperance Society, in their large Temperance Hall, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. This was his first Sunday night's service in England on the occasion of his present visit, having arrived but a few days since. It being the bi-centennial anniversary of the death of John Bunyan, he took for his subject "Salvation," as based upon the first paragraphs in "Pilgrim's Progress." It was an entirely new song service; the readings were a beautiful blending of the Bible and Bunyan on the subject of salvation.

Mr. Phillips sang several sacred songs, all of which, together with the reading lessons, were most beautifully illustrated upon the screen under a most powerful lime light. There was rapt attention throughout, and it may be hoped that not a few in the vast audience left with the determination of leaving the "City of Destruction" for Mount Zion and the "Celestial City."

Mr. Phillips, who is well known all over the civilised world, has come again to England, to spend several months, conducting his Services of Song, and also to introduce, for the first time in Great Britain, his new entertainments, to which he has given the taking title, "Around the World in a Chariot of Song," and "Picturesque America, including British Columbia." In these entertainments, which are most unique and novel, he projects upon the canvas (by means of a Royal Photo Opticon) clearly defined coloured pictures of the most interesting scenes and places he has visited during his perigrinations throughout the world, graphically describing the pictures, and also interspersing his travels by singing descriptive and sacred songs. He gives three services in each of the towns he visits, with an entirely different programme on each occasion. His entertainments, as usual, are given in aid of Christian objects. Till the end of the year he will be in Scotland and the North of England, and he will visit the metropolitan districts next year. Mr. Phillips intends this to be his farewell visit to Great Britain.

REV. JOHN BAIN.

Rev. John Bain, of Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, who has been absent through illness, writes to us:—

> As not a few have written to us in anxiety about my health, will you kindly state that I am daily regaining strength of body, which I have been deprived of for some months now. I trust to return to London in September to resume the work from which the Lord has seen fit to lay me aside. The thought that comforted me most was that the hand that held the rod that smote me was a pierced hand, on which our names are engraved. These sleepless days and nights were seasons of wondrous revelations of Himself. I look back upon them with deep gratitude to the Lord, for truly his songs in the night were so unutterably sweet, and the lamps of his promises fed from the infinite fulness in his broken heart never went out, but shed such cheering light upon my soul's pathway, that I now feel like Godly Rist, who said one day, "Thy dear cross, Lord Jesus, has bruised many a sweet song out of me." Kindly remember me, and the work of the Lord, in your prayers, and commend me to the earnest prayers of all the readers of your paper; ask them to pray for a great baptism of power to come upon us in our Clapton work this winter.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for September 10 (Isaiah liv. 10): "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on evangelistic meetings at Airdrie, N.B., to be conducted by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, commencing Sept. 16.——For blessing on an effort to be made to bring the Gospel home to the hotel servants in Paris.——For blessing on a Gospel mission at Malvern, to be conducted by Mr. William Sampson, from Sept. 2 to 11.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.*

The Lost Daughter. By Charles Hill. 2s. Partridge & Co. The observance of the Lord's Day is here enforced in the form of a story. The incidents recorded are worthy of the important subject, and the book is rendered attractive by a number of illustrations.

A Manual for Church Members. By Rev. Charles Williams. 4d. Baptist Tract and Book Society, Furnival-street, Holborn. An excellent little book. Every page is full of light as to the duties and privileges of church membership. It is hoped that many Christian people will read this manual.

Life and Labours of Rev. W. E. Boardman. 1s. 6d. Bemrose & Sons. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse writes a warm-hearted preface to this high-toned book, which is now in its second edition. The pages are full of teaching on themes of absorbing interest, and we trust many will be blessed by reading them.

A Method of Meeting Roman Catholicism. Rev. Henry Fishe has compiled a little book of questions and answers on the first fifty of the "One Hundred Texts" taught in the schools of the Society for Irish Church Missions. The book will doubtless prove useful in the hands of loving labourers. (Kensit.)

Crime, Pauperism, and Intemperance.—Penological and Preventive Principles. By William Tallack. 8s. Wertheimer, Lea & Co. We have here a full treasury of information and reflection on subjects of vast practical importance. There are chapters on crime, pauperism, and intemperance, prisons and their substitutes, habitual offenders, sentences, neglected youth, parental responsibility, police, and very many other related topics. Not only, however, have facts relating to penal practice, ancient and modern, British and foreign, been carefully brought together, and impartially discussed; moral and economic principles have also been fully considered, and they are stated with much wisdom and clearness. Studious philanthropists will regard it as a privilege to read a book by the secretary of the Howard Association. The subject is certainly one which must receive increasing attention at the hands of politicians. It gives us pleasure to observe that the tone of the book is decidedly Christian, although, in the face of plain Scripture teaching, we fail to see the cogency of the author's occasional arguments in favour of "the larger hope."

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

FROM "HOME WORDS" OFFICE.

Home Words, The Day of Days, and Hand and Heart (1d. each), conducted by Rev. Charles Bullock, are always full of healthful reading, accompanied by pictorial contributions. Under the same editorship The Fireside (6d.) is published, and it enjoys a well-merited popularity.

MESSRS S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.

The Welcome (6d.) is a magazine which does great credit to its publishers. The contents are varied and of a high class. In The Mothers' Companion (1d.) there is always much to interest those who love children. The Family Friend (1d.) is what it professes to be, and The Infants' Magazine (1d.) and The Children's Friend (1d.) are bright as well as useful in their special sphere. The Friendly Visitor (1d.) in large type, and The British Workman (1d.), half illustrations and half wholesome reading matter, have long held a wide popularity.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Among popular monthlies Friendly Greetings (4d.) occupies a useful place. The reading matter is good and simple, and the illustrations are always attractive. The Tract Magazine (1d.) contains instruction in various forms for young and old. The Cottager and Artizan (1d.) is an excellent publication. Of serials for the young, Our Little Dots (1d.) and The Child's Companion (1d.) leave nothing to be desired. The Girls' Own Paper (6d.) has a timely and useful article on type-writing as a profession for ladies; a sketch of a holiday in Norway will also be acceptable. In The Boys' Own Paper the practical element is judiciously mixed with the adventurous and the descriptive.

A PHONOGRAPHIC MONTHLY.

Mr. Nankivell begins a new volume with the current issue of his splendid Reporters' Magazine. He has introduced some new features, and provides greater variety of reading matter. A very fine portrait of Mr. Isaac Pitman is given, with brief biographical note. Young phonographers should take this opportunity of becoming subscribers to a serial which has no equal in the shorthand world (4d. 5, New Bridge-street, E.C.).

A SAVAGE CRITIQUE.

The Expositor contains some attractive articles, but closes with an unnecessarily savage review of the second part of Professor Friedrich Delitzsch's Assyrian Dictionary. Competent judges generally agree that Delitzsch exaggerates the relative importance of Assyrian studies. But neither that nor the fact that Delitzsch has made manifest mistakes, can justify a reviewer in abusing the Professor for "not possessing the power of copying Assyrian inscriptions," and for "not knowing Semitic languages." A writer who is so reckless in his insinuations, as well as frequently intemperate in his language, may gain a cheap reputation for smartness, but he cannot expect to command the confidence of impartial scholars.

MISSIONARY PUBLICATIONS.

The Church Missionary Intelligence and Record (6d.) is full of information, much of it highly important, and all of it having great interest at the present time. The Church Missionary Gleaner (1d.) is also well worth reading; its illustrations are excellent (Mission House, Salisbury-square). Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. publish Woman's Work in the Great Harvest Field (4d.), The Illustrated Missionary News (2d.), and The Friend of Missions (1d.), each of which well serves its special purpose. The ever-encouraging story of the progress of work in China is told in China's Millions (1d.), published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor's retrospect is continued in the September issue. Rest and Reaping (1d.), same publishers, is a record of Christian work and workers in the home and foreign mission fields. All the World (2d.), the Salvation Army monthly, has for a frontispiece, a portrait of Mr. T. A. Denny, who is a hearty supporter of many movements in connection with General Booth's work. The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society (1d.) is replete with well-digested intelligence, adequately illustrated. Another penny monthly on work abroad as well as at home is the London City Mission Magazine (Seeleys). There is much to interest in the Church of Scotland Mission Record (1d. R. & R. Clark, Edinburgh), and the Free Church of Scotland Monthly (1d. Nelson).

Scribner's Magazine is a good average number. "Scenes in Cyprus," by W. H. Mallock; "Railway Passenger Travel," by General Horace Porter; and "The Modern Greeks," by Thomas D. Seymour, are articles of special interest and well illustrated.

The Jewish Herald (1d. Snow & Co.) is an excellent record of the operations of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. The Jewish Intelligence describes the work of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. (1d. Nisbet & Co.)

Young England (4d. Sunday School Union) is a capital serial of adventure and instruction. Our Darlings (3d. Shaw), edited by Dr. Barnardo, is always bright. Our Boys' Magazine (1d. 13, Warwick-lane), edited by University men, is a spirited monthly for lads. Three magazines recording Y.W.C.A. activity are: Our Own Gazette (1d.), edited by Mrs. S. Menzies, and published at 62, Ludgate-hill; The Home Friend (1d. Partridge); and The Y.W.C.A. Monthly Journal, edited by Mrs. B. A. Bannister (2d. 316, Regent-street, London).

The Sword and Trowel (3d. Passmore & Alabaster) is a grand repertory of evangelical teaching and progress. Footsteps of Truth (3d. Shaw) maintains a high spiritual tone in the presentation of pure instruction in faith and virtue. The Life of Faith (2d. Marshalls) contains many of the papers read and speeches delivered at the recent Keswick Convention. Service for the King (2d. Shaw) tells of much important work at home and abroad. A special interest attaches to the reports concerning the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments on the Continent and in Africa, now proceeding under the direction of Rev. John Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

The Missionary Review of the World contains a valuable letter by Rev. Dr. Pierson on the late Conference in London, a number of articles on questions of practical importance, and a budget of information on missionary progress. Christians who wish to make missions a real study should read this monthly. The price in America is two dollars a year. The London publishers are Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Congregational Review opens with a stirring article on Christian Brotherhood. Speaking of the place of brotherly affection in aggressive religious work, the Editor says: "Love to God and man must be the ruling motive. It must inspire the teaching of the pulpit, but even more necessary is it that it should govern the action of the members of the Church themselves. It is not necessary to lay down any plans for its action, for its strength will depend largely upon its spontaneity, and its methods must be varied according to the diversity of circumstances. Love needs no instructions, and it is an essential of this comradeship that it should be rooted and grounded in love. A church which is filled with this spirit must be a power."

The Gospel Magazine (6d. Collingridge) possesses much of its old vigour under the continued editorship of the venerable Dr. Doudney. The Christian Treasury (6d. Marshall Brothers) has taken on the sub-sitle of "Missionary Review." The matter is of a high order, with occasional illustrations. There is ample variety in the contents of "A1" (6d.) edited with much ability by Mrs. Stephen Menzies (62, Ludgate-hill). Other useful periodicals are:—The Christian Worker (1d. Partridge); Open Doors (3d. Stock), devoted to the interests of Mrs. Meredith's many institutions; Divine Life and International Expositor (2d. Marshalls); Toilers of the Deep (2d.), the monthly record of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

Among other monthlies to hand are The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-School Magazine (2d. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union); The Home Visitor (1d. Hunt & Co.); The Band of Hope Chronicle (1d. United Kingdom Band of Hope Union); Our Own Magazine (1d. Children's Special Service Mission); Old Jonathan, The District Parish Helper (1d. Collingridge); The Church Monthly (1d.) an exceptionally attractive paper issued from 30 and 31, New Bridge-street, London; On and Off Duty, a monthly journal for policemen (1d. 18, Adam-street, Adelphi), is ably conducted; The Hospital (6d. 38, Old Jewry) contains much that cannot but interest doctors, nurses, and philanthropists; The British Messenger (1d.) is a welcome publication of the Stirling Tract Enterprise.

OBITUARY.

MR. G. J. STEVENSON.

Many will regret the death of this well-known Methodist writer, chronicled in our last issue. A contemporary says: "He was a man of great simplicity of character, and had accumulated an immense store of miscellaneous information on Church history. One of his last labours was to prepare for the press a Religious Census of London, a work for which his tastes and acquirements specially fitted him." Besides contributing constantly and largely to many English and American newspapers and magazines, Mr. Stevenson was the author of several important volumes.

MR. J. A. VICARY has visited Puckle Church, Bristol, with a tent. After his departure, the work was taken up by Mr. W. Pugsley. There were large congregations night after night, and a number of persons confessed Christ.

A TEACHER'S PREPARATION CLASS, for the study of the International Lesson, under the auspices of the Rochdale Sunday-school Union, is held weekly in the Rochdale Y.M.C.A. Much interest is taken in the class, which is largely attended.

THE SWEATING SYSTEM.—At the triennial conference of the Amalgamated Society of Tailors of Great Britain and Ireland, in Belfast, a resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that the direct cause of the existing sweating system is the non-provision of workshop accommodation by employers of labour; and urging upon labour representatives in Parliament that in order to suppres the evil compulsory legislation is required, whereby all employers will be compelled to provide workshops for their employés.

DISHONESTY.—PROV. xxi. 6, 7.

LYING is dishonesty in speech, stealing is dishonesty in act. Both these sins are included and are seen to be associated in our lesson. We shall notice briefly the evil of dishonesty, and the way in which it is to be most successfully overcome.

(1) THE EVIL OF DISHONESTY.—The verses we are to consider clearly denounce theft as a sin which brings no permanent advantage to the one who steals (ver. 6), and which tends to his destruction (ver. 7). It will be well to consider what there is in this sin that gives it so bad a character. There is: (a) A breach of the law of God. God has said, "Thou shalt not steal" (Exod. xx. 15). The law of God is "holy, and just, and good" (Rom. vii. 12). It is holy, and therefore cannot be broken without sacrilege. A breach of a holy law is an attack upon the holiness of God. The law is just. There is perfect justice in the requirement that one person should not appropriate, without satisfactory compensation, what is the property of another. The law is also good (see distinction between just and good in Rom. v. 7). It is for the good of the individual and for the race. The beneficence of the law of God has been recognised in most civilised countries. Alfred the Great formed his statutes, to a large extent, on the model of those of the great Law-Giver of Israel. (b) An invasion of the Divine right of property.—The commandment which forbids the theft of another man's property is a proof that he is regarded as having a right to it. God gave Solomon riches (1 Kings iii. 13), therefore he had a right to them, and if Solomon had a right to hold property, any man has a right to hold it, if he has honestly come by it. An act of theft is an invasion of that right. (c) An encouragement to indolence.—If men could live by stealing, many would leave off working, and this would be an injury to individuals and to society. The idler is often a trouble to himself and a social bore. Paul found it necessary to write to the Thessalonians upon this matter, and he said, "If any would not work, neither should he eat" (2 Thess. iii. 10). (d) A certain development of selfishness.—He who steals the property of another, seeks to benefit himself by a method which injures another. This applies to gambling, which has about it some of the worst features of stealing. The sin of theft is closely related to that of covetousness. Covetousness is an unholy desire to be possessed of that which belongs to another. It arises from selfishness and from a sense of dissatisfaction with the ordering of providence. It is called idolatry (Col. iii. 5), possibly because it sets too high an estimate upon material good, and allows it to take the place which God alone should occupy. (e) A weapon for the destruction of mutual confidence.—Men cannot trust those who are watching for opportunities to defraud them. The rich man in the parable could no longer confide in the steward who wasted his goods. Where there is no confidence, there can be no love. A population consisting entirely of thieves would be a pandemonium. (f) An incentive to other sins.—This sin is associated in one Scripture with murder and adultery (Jer. vii. 9), and in the case of Judas, it led to the betrayal of the Lord (John xii. 6).

(2) THE REMEDY FOR DISHONESTY.—Just a few hints must suffice here. (a) A renewed nature.—The spirit of truth dwelling in a man will make war against all dishonesty. (b) A sensitive conscience.—If conscience is to be of use here it must not be tampered with. Petty pilfering will deaden conscience with respect to this and all other sins (1 Tim. iv. 2). (c) A realisation of the dignity of labour.—Jesus toiled at the bench, and Paul "worked with his own hands." (d) A due estimate of the value of human possessions.—No earthly thing is worth so much that it is worth the while of any human being to steal it (Mark viii. 36). (e) A consciousness of the Divine presence and oversight.—(Comp. case of Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 9). (f) A remembrance of the damaging nature of property dishonestly acquired (Proverbs xxi. 7).—The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. An act of theft often destroys self respect, peace of mind, bodily health, and the soul itself.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, September 16.

THE SMITTEN ROCK.

NUM. xx. 1—13; GOLDEN TEXT, 1 COR. x. 4.

THE PLACE.—"The desert of Zin" (ver. 1). The words that follow, "and the people abode in Kadesh," have led many to conclude that Kadesh, or its immediate neighbourhood, was the scene of this event. But Kadesh lay in the desert of Paran, directly to the west of the desert of Zin (Num. xii. 16. and xiii. 26), and so could not have witnessed this event. We must locate this scene farther to east, somewhere amid the rocky wastes of Zin. The most natural explanation of the words, "And the people abode in Kadesh" (ver. 1), is that Kadesh was their central camp. While one tribe and another might wander from time to time into the surrounding country, the headquarters remained at Kadesh. But the time had now come to break up the camp at Khadesh, to unite again into one company ("the whole congregation," ver. 1), and to make a new start for Canaan.

TIME.—While the notes of time are not quite clear, they seem to support the generally accepted idea that more than thirty-seven years separate this lesson from our last, and that it occurred at the beginning of the fortieth year after the Exodus.

THE PEOPLE'S TRIAL.—"And there was no water" (ver. 2). It is hard for us to imagine what suffering and horror this brought. A countless host entangled amid the burning rocks of Zin, and no water! Moreover, there seems to have been no earthly probability of relief. If our date is correct, this was a sudden trial to which the new generation of Israelites were subjected before they were called to enter Caanan. The trial was fierce and terrible; one, too, in which every earthly hope failed. It was, indeed, "man's extremity." Just so. God tries all his people.

THE PEOPLE'S FAILURE.—They might have remembered that He who led them into the trouble was pledged to deliver them. They might have made their very helplessness a plea—that now was "God's opportunity." But they did not: so they grieved God; tempted Moses to sin, and lost a splendid opportunity of proving how faithful and kind God is to those who trust Him. How unjust and cruel their complaint. "They chode with Moses," &c. Yet they knew that he was but the servant, doing only what God bade him. They blamed Moses as though he were their enemy; and yet how he loved them! No doubt their complaint was really against God, though they would hardly dare to own this, even to themselves; just as we grumble at the things God sends us, forgetting that we therein complain against God. Why did they murmur thus? Because of unbelief. But whence came their unbelief? Why was it so hard for them to trust God, and so easy to think ill of Him? The answer is—their pride. If they, or their fathers, had only trusted and obeyed God thirty-seven years before, they would have been delivered from the desert and its thirst. So this very trouble has come from their sin; but, as they will not or cannot own this, the natural thing is to blame others—Moses and Aaron, or God Himself. A grumbling, distrustful spirit is a sure sign of pride and impenitence. People often complain of being hardly dealt with, as though God were unkind to them. If they were humbler, they would see how they had brought the trouble on themselves by their own sin.

NOBLE INTERCESSION.—How natural it would have been for Moses and Aaron to have defended themselves before the people. They had a first-rate case, and had been cruelly treated. So far as we know, they answered nothing again, but went at once to the appointed meeting-place, and laid the case before the Lord. "The people sinned, but Moses and Aaron prayed." Their faith was honoured by an immediate and double answer—(1) "The glory of the Lord appeared" (ver. 6); a sign both that He heard, and also that He was on their side against their accusers. (2) "The Lord spake," &c. (vv. 7, 8).

THE SMITING OF THE ROCK.—Question scholars whether Moses had ever smitten a rock and brought water from it before, and turn to Exod. xvii. 5—8. This occurred thirty-nine years before the story of our lesson. What was the chief difference in the two incidents? Ans. In the first, at Horeb, God told Moses to smite the rock, and he obeyed; but in the second, in Zin, God told him to speak to the rock, and he disobeyed. He spoke to the people, instead of to the rock, angry words that dishonoured God, his Lord; and he smote the rock instead of simply speaking to it as God told him. His words were hot and bitter: "Hear now, ye rebels." Point out the tremendous provocation offered to Moses (Ps. cvi. 33); but show also that he was not excused because of it. We learn from ver. 24 that he himself was acting rebelliously, at the very time when he was upraiding them. A wholesome warning to us all to be far more careful to find and correct our own faults, than our neighbours'. Observe that Moses sinned this sin just after his intercourse with God in prayer. Some people think that if only they pray about a thing, they must do it without a fault. But, while there is nothing so helpful as prayer, we may fall even after prayer—even after such effectual prayer as this of Moses.

NOTE.—It is not safe to lay emphasis on the "we" in ver. 10: "Must we fetch you water," &c., as though they were usurping the place of God. The pronoun "we" does not appear in the Hebrew, and therefore should not be made emphatic. Bishop Hall thinks the sentence implied doubt: "Is it likely that we shall fetch water out of this hard rock to satisfy your thirst? This we are required to do, but is this a thing possible to be done?" It is quite as likely, however, to have implied impatience and want of sympathy, something like Jonah's at the deliverance of Nineveh.

THE SIN AND PUNISHMENT OF MOSES.—The sin is described as: (1) Rebellion (ver. 24); (2) Unbelief (ver. 12); (3) Misrepresenting God (ver. 12, "to sanctify Me," &c.); (4) Disobedience (cf. "speak ye, &c.," with "he smote the rock twice"), and (5) Sinful speaking (Ps. cvi. 33, "He spake unadvisedly with his lips"). It is not possible for us exactly to analyse this offence. We know that distrust of God—either of his power or willingness—was the root of it. We know, too, that it manifested itself in a disobedient and rebellious spirit towards God, and in a spirit of anger and bitterness towards the erring people; also that God was misrepresented by his servant.

Note how Moses failed in his strongest points. The man of God fell into disobedience and rebellion; the man of faith into unbelief; and the patient, unselfish leader, "the meekest man," into anger. Note the similar case of Peter and Elijah; but note also that a tendency to hot, indignant anger was probably natural to Moses.

The punishment of Moses must have been terribly heavy, for probably his dearest desire for himself was to enter that land towards which he had been striving for forty years. But the sins of great and conspicuous men are greater in their evil power than the same sins in lesser men; so they need to be punished more conspicuously. God's treatment of Moses shows his holiness. He will not cover sin, though found in one so well-beloved, and though committed under such provocation.

Observe: Moses was punished, but there was no lessening of God's favour towards him.

SOLDIERS IN BRISTOL.—On August 31, the first meeting of this branch of the Soldiers' Christian Association was held in Horfield Barracks. The work of the Association was explained by Sergeant-Major Morris, 10th Royal Hussars, who urged the men to take Jesus as their Saviour. Some of the men joined "Our Soldiers'" Bible and Prayer Union. We ask prayer that the work may be much blessed. The visit of Sergeant-Major Morris has done much good.

CECIL G. SMITH, Secretary.

THE STERN MEMORIAL LOAN FUND was established three years ago, as a tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Stern, who, for a long period, laboured in Eastern lands, as well as in England, to bring Jews to the knowledge of Christ. The object is to grant small loans, without interest, to needy Hebrew Christians of good character, repayment to be made at easy rates. When Jews embrace Christianity, they often have to give up a great deal, and sometimes they are unkindly treated by their co-religionists, and deprived of those means of subsistence of which they have previously been glad to avail themselves. The Stern Fund has, so far, only reached about £50, but it is desired to extend it as rapidly as possible, so as to apply the money for the timely relief, and not the pauperisation, of needy Jewish converts. Donations may be sent to Rev. J. A. Barraclough, 46, King Edward-road, South Hackney, E.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church of England Sunday-School Institute recommend that Sunday and Monday, October 21 and 22, be set apart as days of prayer on behalf of Sunday-schools.

The foundation-stone of a new mission church, to provide in a measure for the ever-growing needs for the Cotton-lane district of Derby, was laid on Saturday week. The church will accommodate about six hundred people.

Rev. H. Darling, curate of Christ Church, Brighton, Miss M. Goodall, and Miss M. L. Holmes, the latter as an honorary missionary, have been accepted for service abroad by the Church Missionary Society. Miss Goodall will go to West Africa as Principal of the Lagos Female Institution.

Rev. E. C. Gordon, the missionary detained in Uganda by King Mwanga, in his latest letters received, reports that matters there are in much the same condition, although, he says, on the whole, perhaps there is a brighter outlook. The king perpetually persecutes the native Christians, more than one of whom are in his own household. Mr. Gordon says, "The Psalms of David are full of comfort at all times." And again, "We are daily protected by the prayers of the very many in England and elsewhere."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers Town Presbyterian Church, received forty new members into the fellowship of the church on Sunday last; 146 souls have been drawn out of the world, and added to the membership of this church during the past nine months.

Rev. A. Campbell, of the Free Church of Scotland's Mission in Santhalistan, baptized forty-one persons from nine families at Pookhurea, Zemindari of Tondee, on Sunday, July 22. Five families more have appeared for baptism, and travelled a long way through the jungle to make known this request.

Rev. Dr. Lindsay and Rev. J. Fairley Daly are about to visit the Free Church of Scotland's missions in the East. They will also probably visit the mission stations in India of the Irish Presbyterian Church and the U. P. Church of Scotland, besides other Presbyterian missions.

Rev. Alex. M. Sutherland, of Orwell, has conducted services with much acceptance at Grindelwald, during July and August. This is the first time that Presbyterian services have been held there. The numbers who attended have been gradually increasing each Lord's Day, showing the importance of the station.

Letters, dated Blantyre, East Africa, June 14, lately received by the Church of Scotland Foreign Mission Committee, report that all goes well with the staff and the work of the Mission; that the troubles with the chief Chikumbu have been peacefully settled; and that there have been baptisms and requests for baptism.

Islington Church, which has been closed for a few weeks for repairs and decoration, was reopened on Sunday, by the pastor, Dr. Thain Davidson, who has just returned from his holiday in Wales. The Islington congregation, during the interval, worshipped in the Royal Agricultural Hall, where large congregations were addressed by Rev. Dr. Scott, of Saltcoats.

METHODIST.

Mr. Pinnock, a Joyful News evangelist, who is shortly going out to Western Africa, has concluded a series of Gospel services at Braunstone, with good results.

The Methodist New Connexion Foreign Missionary Committee have issued a special leaflet for use in missionary meetings, telling of "A Great Work of God in Shantung." Rev. G. M. H. Innocent writes that thirty-four Chinese converts have been baptized.

At Woodhouse-lane Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Leeds, on Tuesday week, a meeting was held to bid farewell to Miss Waller, who is shortly leaving for China. Miss Waller, who is the first lady missionary sent to China by the Connexion, goes out to the institution for girls and Bible-women, which the Conference ten or twelve years ago decided to establish.

A special mission has been held at Towcester by Mr. W. Sampson. A number of persons were brought into the light of the Gospel. One of those who sought and found the Lord on the Sunday evening was in his employment the next day, exerting himself very earnestly to be in time for Mr. Sampson's meeting in the evening, when an accident befel him, which proved fatal.

The heroic wife of Rev. W. B. Luddington, Primitive Methodist missionary, of Fernando Po, has been called to her rest after a comparatively brief period of service in Western Africa. Little more than a year ago, after resting for a time, they returned to their labours in Africa. A few weeks back Mr. Luddington and his noble wife were attacked by fever, and compelled to leave for England. They landed here early last month, both worn and ill, but three weeks had not gone ere Mrs. Luddington passed away.

The annual pastoral address of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, signed by Rev. Joseph Bush as President, and Rev. D. J. Waller as Secretary, is in circulation among the Methodist churches. The pastoral at some length deals with the spiritual life of the Connexion, and argues that, as the organisation of Methodism is largely the production of piety at a white heat, it can only be easily and successfully worked by the same temper of spiritual life; that when commerce, science, politics, and pleasure are moving quickly, Methodisim must not be slow-paced, but must move more quickly than they.

SALVATION ARMY.

A Training Home has been started in Jamaica, and the first cadets admitted.

In 1878, the Salvation Army employed eighty-eight officers. In 1888 the number has risen to 6502.

On Sunday evening, August 6, 54,500 persons are reported to have attended Army meetings in Canada.

A universal "week of self-denial" has been fixed for October 6 to 13, in order to raise money for extending the work.

Seven hundred junior soldiers' corps are now at work in the United Kingdom, under officers specially set apart for that purpose.

A Zulu chief has "found salvation" at the second meeting held in his kraal. Many of his tribe have followed their leader's example in confessing Christ.

BAPTIST.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon have presented the Beulah Church at Thornton Heath with an organ.

Rev. W. J. Mathams, of Falkirk, has accepted an invitation to succeed Rev. J. Jenkyn Brown in the pastorate of the church in Bristol-road, Birmingham.

Rev. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, sets sail for Australia on September 21. A special meeting of his congregation is to be held on Wednesday next to wish him "God-speed" on his journey.

By invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer, a conference, in connection with the Baptist Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Union, is to be held at Regent's-park College, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next.

Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, preaching at Skipton from the words: "But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him" (1 Cor. viii. 6) said: This was a real Apostles' Creed. It was a short creed, and the shorter the creed—the fewer the articles it contained—the better. There were in that creed two articles of belief.

Park-street Church, Luton, lately celebrated the thirteenth anniversary of the settlement of its pastor, Rev. J. H. Blake. The report presented stated that eighty-five have been added to the church during the year, and the roll-book shows a membership of 700. The village stations are in a healthy state, and the present is full of hope for another successful year of prayer and work. This church was founded by Thomas Marsom, fellow-prisoner of John Bunyan.

Rev. H. Williams, of Petersbury, Virginia, U.S., writes to The National Baptist, mentioning that on ten days, within two hours' time each day, he immersed altogether 1052 candidates in the Appotomax River. He says that "during baptizing, on very hot days, the people around the baptismal waters were shielded from the heat of the sun by a cloud. When the ceremony was ended, the cloud dispersed." He concludes from this experience that on the Day of Pentecost each Apostle could have easily immersed 250 candidates.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Revs. H. M. Dauncey and F. W. Walker have sailed for New Guinea, where they go to join Rev. James Chalmers in mission work amongst the cannibals.

On Rev. W. Tucker, Congregational minister, leaving Gloucester for Gravesend recently, a letter apologising for non-attendance at the farewell meeting was read from the bishop of the diocese (Dr. Ellicott).

The library of the late Rev. Samuel Hebditch has been presented by Mrs. and Miss Hebditch to the Congregational Union of South Australia. There are about 900 volumes, many of them valuable. The library is said to be specially rich in all that relates to the history of Congregationalism.

Rev. John Yonge has completed twenty-five years' service in the ministry, twelve of which have been spent at Wycliffe Church, Warrington. During his pastorate, 315 members have been admitted into fellowship, and the church roll has increased from 171 to 280; there are 700 scholars in the Sunday-school, in addition to 500 at the Cockhedge mission room.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

H. G. E. St. Dalmas, writing from Sohagpur, India, gives a very interesting account of the reception of four converts into the church there by public profession of their faith in Christ. The work grows.

Interesting reports come from Robert J. and Mary J. Davidson, China. They have sent home an urgent appeal to the young men of the Society of Friends to come over and help them in that dark land.

William V. Wright, and wife, have just left Toronto, Canada, to join Joseph Cosand and wife at Tokio, Japan. Recently there have been thirteen requests to join the church there, and very much blessing is following the labours of Friends there.

At the Rock Fountain Mission, South Africa, Elbert S. and Emma Clarke, having returned from a year's rest and change in England, report progress and blessing in their absence. Their children are in England at school. Many converts have recently confessed Christ, left off their heathen ornaments, and are taking part in meetings.

Rev. Dr. Post, of Beirut, gives a very favourable report of the Friends' Mission on Lebanon. "Young men are being educated in schools, and becoming Christians and doctors; they meet with thousands of Mohammedans, treat them for disease, and teach them, and thus have a marvellous influence." At Ram Allah, too, near Jerusalem, the work is sustained.

In Madagascar, William and Hannah Wilson have left the capital, and gone to live at Mandridrano, a country station. He does much medical work, in addition to preaching and teaching, and H. W. says: "After the opening of the school next week, I hope to begin classes for women and girls. A great many say they want to come and learn." General prosperity is reported.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Christian conference for the promotion of the spiritual life was held last week in Millrow Presbyterian Church, Antrim. There was a very large attendance.

During the last fortnight Gospel meetings have been conducted by Mr. W. C. Dilworth, of the Church Army, in Kilclooney Parish, near Markethill. The meetings were well attended, and are believed to have resulted in much good.

The wooden hall belonging to the Irish Evangelisation Society is at present pitched at Seapatrick, near Banbridge, in the midst of a dense working-class population, and is attended night after night by large congregations, who listen with evident interest to earnest Gospel addresses.

Meetings on behalf of the Ulster Society for Promoting the Education of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, are now being held in various parts of the country. This Society is worthy of generous support; during the past year about 130 deaf, dumb, and blind pupils received the benefits of the Institution.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Dr. John Edwards, senior minister of Greenhead U.P. Church, Glasgow.—Mr. Thomas Smith, who from the second year of its commencement down to a recent period was the editor of The Methodist Recorder.—Rev. J. T. C. Saunders, of Cheltenham, an evangelical Protestant clergyman.—Rev. Geo. T. Payne, for several years rector of Drumbeg, Ireland.

COMPARATIVE THEOLOGY.—In reviewing a recent theological work, Mr. Spurgeon says:—The very notion of comparative theology is abhorrent to our mind. Sennacherib was a professor of this science when he placed Jehovah with the gods of Hamath, and Arpad, and Sepharvaim. All that he had to say was regarded by the servants of God as spoken against Jehovah. "They spake against Jehovah as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of men." False religions are not the breaking out of light, but the beclouding of it. They are not to be compared with the true, but are to be contrasted with it.

EVANGELICALS AND THE MASSES.—In the course of an unkind and discourteous attack upon the Bishop of Liverpool, The Spectator of Saturday week says that "the school of doctrine and worship to which Dr. Ryle belongs has lost its hold on the educated classes, and has scarcely any influence over the masses." The sacramentarian balloon in which Mr. Hutton has of late years taken his seat, is now evidently so high in the clouds that its occupants can scarcely see the little island from which they started. The paragraph which we have quoted is absolutely erroneous in every particular. The evangelical school never had so strong a hold on the educated classes as it has to-day. And as for its having "scarcely any influence over the masses," why, Mr. Spurgeon, Mr. Moody, and General Booth—to take only three men out of many—have more influence over "the masses" than all Mr. Hutton's party put together.—Methodist Times.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

PAUL GOING TO JERUSALEM.

ACTS xxi. 4.—"And, finding disciples, we tarried there seven days, who said to Paul through the Spirit that he should not go up to Jerusalem."

Does this, taken in connection with Acts xxi. 10—14, imply that Paul went to Jerusalem in spite of warning sent him by God, and therefore contrary to the will of God? or is it simply to be regarded as a prophecy?

NON-RESISTANCE OF EVIL.

MATT. v. 39.—"But I say unto you that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also."

Will any spiritually-minded reader of THE CHRISTIAN undertake to explain upon what principle of justice or love the teaching of the Lord Jesus in Matt. v. 39 is to be carried out?

F. H. H.

[The life of the Lord Jesus on earth is in itself an all-sufficient explanation of the above and every other precept in his teaching. Compare Matt. v. 39 with Isa. l. 6. Contrast also John xviii. 23 with Acts xxiii. 3, where, in circumstances very similar, the perfectness of the Master and the unperfectness of his servant are made manifest.]

SIN.

SIR,—As a young man, I belong to a Bible-class, held on Sunday afternoons, and conducted by a Christian gentleman. Some of the members also meet by themselves during the week for prayer and reading God's Word, and we sometimes meet with passages which we cannot understand, and questions are asked which we cannot satisfactorily answer (our ages vary from fifteen to twenty, and we are working lads).

Last week the subject of sin was under consideration, and some said that there was sin in every word or deed; that even in the Sunday afternoon Bible-class every word that the conductor spoke was sinful, and every thought, word, or action needed to be cleansed by the blood of Christ. Others thought this was straining the matter of sin too far, and, while acknowledging that defilement might generally be in even our holiest acts of devotion, that God did not brand every word as sinful. We shall be glad if you will kindly help us, and throw some light on the question of sin.

JAMES ASCOT.

[Actions done and service rendered in the fear of God and with a desire to do his will cannot be described as sins. But "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one" (Job xiv. 4). Therefore, because "the best obedience of our hands" is tainted by the sin that dwelleth in us, we need the blood of Christ to cleanse us from the sinfulness which attaches to our holiest service. The sin-offering made a typical atonement on account of positive sins; the burnt-offering atoned for the worshipper as falling short of God's perfect standard of holiness and righteousness. The sin-offering represented Christ as made a curse for us; the burnt-offering represented Him as in Himself the Lamb without blemish and without spot. But in each relation He made atonement for us.]

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—At a recent meeting in connection with this Society, held at the Mildmay Mission House, King's Cross-road, two of the missionaries gave encouraging details of the work, and of the success that follows its operations among Roman Catholics.

THE METHODIST NEW CONNEXION MISSIONARY SOCIETY has done a wise thing. Good news has been recently received from the Chinese mission field, and, without waiting for the ordinary issue of its bi-monthly organ, Gleanings, the Society has sent to the ministers a special circular, entitled "A Great Work of God in Shantung," by Rev. G. M. H. Innocent—"For use in the missionary meetings." "You will be glad to hear," says Mr. Innocent, "that since Mr. Turner and I returned from the district meeting, thirty-four converts have been baptized in this circuit." And then Mr. Innocent relates in detail the way in which these Chinamen were turned from idols to the worship of the living God, and publicly testified to the glorious change.—Methodist Times.

FRANCE.—The "Société Evangélique de France" has done much good work since it was founded in 1833. The report just published contains many statements that are very cheering, and the balance-sheet shows good management. Copies can be obtained from Pastor Mouron, 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris. Among the incidents mentioned is the following:—A Bible-woman, a convert from Romanism, in Aurillac, Cantal, was charged with being out of her mind. Her reply was, "I only wish that the whole town had my folly." She does all she can to spread that "foolishness" which is wisdom in God's estimation.

Appeals.

Mr. John Denning, Ebenezer Cottage, Saxeweimar-road, Southsea, writes that his Gospel tent on Southsea Common has been wrecked by wind and weather; to replace it, after five years good service, he asks for £50.

Walthamstowe Hall, Sevenoaks.—In November, this Institution for educating the daughters of missionaries completes its 50th year. During that long period it has been the means of great usefulness. It is desired to mark the event by special gifts towards the school. Donations received by any member of the Committee. The cash secretary is Miss MARY TOWNE, 28, Walford-road, Stoke Newington, London, N.

The High Alps.—Miss HENRICA KIDDLE, 15, Clarence-square, Cheltenhem, writes asking for help for the poor parish of Arvieux, Hautes Alpes, of which M. Sebrat is pasteur. He has recently written telling of the distress of these poor people, who have never been able to recover themselves from the effects of a disastrous fire which took place in 1882. Last year their harvest was a failure, and again this year the prospects are very bad, that he does not know what will become of them without a little outside help.

Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

"THE CHILDREN'S BREAD."

September 3, 1888.

Dear Christian Friends,

I have now a larger family to support than ever before. Nearly THREE THOUSAND Homeless "Waifs and Strays," the majority of them orphans, are at present under my care.

God has sent to my doors very literally of late, "the lame, the halt, and the blind": some of them mere Infants, crippled for life, quite blind, or afflicted with incurable disease, have been rescued from the common lodging-houses and the lowest purlieus, not only of London, but of large towns throughout England and Scotland. Many little girls have quite recently been snatched from nameless degradation, and boys from the custody of thieves and evil persons seeking their ruin.

Throughout the summer months this BLESSED WORK OF RESCUE has never ceased, day or night, and now, as I have said, my family is larger than ever before, and, as may be imagined, it is no easy or light thing to supply their daily wants. God's goodness has been unceasing, but I have learnt that He uses the instrumentality of even such a statement as this, to unite the hearts of His people everywhere in increased love for, and sympathy with, HIS LITTLE ONES under my care.

For FOOD ALONE our daily need is quite £100, and during the past three weeks I have on many days been sorely pressed to meet the numerous claims which cannot be avoided.

The month of September is always one of special burden-bearing, I will not say of anxious care, but of more than usual exercise and trial of faith; and this year, owing to the larger numbers to be provided for, the sense of need is even more deeply felt.

ONE HUNDRED LITTLE GIRLS will, I hope, leave for Canada on the 20th of this month. This will be my last party of Emigrants for the year, and will bring the total number of trained boys and girls Emigrated to Canada during 1888 up to about 510. I have not yet all the means required to pay the travelling and outfit expenses of this last party, and I shall indeed be thankful if it is laid upon the hearts of some of God's people to send me the £9, which will defray the entire cost of a single child's emigration.

For all God's goodness to my large family, I would give Him, now and always, grateful praise, and to the thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN who for years have encouraged me by loving and generous help, I desire to express my cordial acknowledgments, while at the same time I seek a continuance of their prayerful sympathy and loving remembrance of my poor bairns.

Ever sincerely yours,

In the Service of Christ's Little Ones,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

REV. JOSHUA CLARKSON HARRISON,

Park Chapel, Camden Town.

WE present to our readers this week the portrait of one whose successful ministerial career and wide spiritual influence may be said to be, through the power and blessing of God, the fitting complement of a holy and active life. It is useless to speculate as to the advantage accruing to a minister from a fine, tall presence, rich but gentle voice, and that spontaneous though dignified courtesy which is usually the outcome of a noble character. These, however, Mr. Harrison undoubtedly possesses, and a general feeling was simply expressed by a humble admirer when asked why she was attracted to his ministry: "Sir, his face is a sermon."

No stranger looking at Mr. Harrison would guess that he was born so far back as 1813. His father having a pastorate at Woburn, he was sent to be educated at the Lewisham School for the Sons of Congregational Ministers, and he has ever taken a deep interest in that institution, speaking as an "old boy" at the opening of the beautiful new building at Caterham not long ago.

His entrance into the counting-house of Messrs. J. & R. Morley in 1831 was an important epoch in his life, and soon after he was called to pass through the bitter experience of losing both father and mother, who died within a fortnight of each other. Mr. and Mrs. Morley and their sons showed him great kindness at that time of sorrow, and an especial intimacy grew up between Mr. Harrison and their younger son, the late Samuel Morley, M.P., which continued until the death of the latter in 1886. Besides being in the same business department, these young friends had an opening spiritual life in common, and frequently discussed with great eagerness the truths so eloquently proclaimed by their pastor, Rev. Thomas Binney.

The knowledge of business life and its peculiar temptations gained in the house of Morley has been of great value to Mr. Harrison, whose audiences as a popular London minister always include many business men.

While engaged in business and active Christian work Mr. Harrison broke a blood-vessel, and was compelled to go to the south of France, where he was brought into contact with Adolph Monod, to the great deepening of his spiritual life. Having regained his health, he returned to London, and studied at Homerton College under Dr. Pye-Smith.

After his ordination at Tottenham Mr. Harrison was called to the pastorate of Park Chapel, Camden Town, then newly built. When he commenced his ministry there in 1846 the church roll contained only 47 members. Now it musters 610, and during the forty-two years of his pastorate 2300 members have passed through the church. Peace and harmony have been preserved there to a wonderful degree, Mr. Harrison being regarded not only as the minister but as the friend, sympathiser, and helper of all.

As a preacher he has the power which an extemporaneous delivery affords. Although his discourses are carefully prepared, he seldom refers to his manuscript. It seems like a personal narrative, the preacher's soul being wrapt in his message, which also tells of his intense love to Jesus as his Friend, and adoration of Him as his Lord and King. No uncertain sound is heard in his proclamation of Christ crucified as the basis of atonement and regeneration, while the agency of the indwelling Spirit is set forth as the inspirer of faith and the medium of all spiritual life and power. These phases of his ministration become increasingly beautiful and effective as the evening of life advances. His ministry to the young has been eminently successful. He was one of the earliest to adopt the plan of preaching a short sermon to children on Sunday mornings before the longer discourse to the congregation.

In June, 1848, Park Chapel was destroyed by fire. The present building was opened in November of the same year, when Rev. James Parsons and Rev. Thomas Binney officiated. Mr. Harrison often refers, with gratitude to God, to the blessing then conferred, by which an enlarged place of worship was provided for the rapidly increasing church.

He enjoys in a high measure the esteem of his ministerial brethren. The Congregational Union of England and Wales has twice appointed Mr. Harrison as the preacher of its annual sermon, and elected him to fill the chair during the year 1870.

His services have also been required by the Church in wider spheres. He has visited America as a delegate of the Evangelical Alliance, and he worthily fills the position of one of the vice-presidents of the British & Foreign Bible Society. In the operations of these associations, and also in the work of the London Missionary Society, he is deeply interested, while many other benevolent institutions receive his continuous help and attention.

Mr. Harrison has been very happy in family life, although a full share of bereavement and anxiety has been allotted to him. His wife is the sister of Sir George Grove, of musical fame.

Our notice of this eminent servant of God must not be closed without reference to his most distinguishing characteristic, viz., a peculiar gift in prayer. His deeply devotional nature gives him exceptional excellence in this respect, and among public audiences as well as in the gatherings of his brethren he is frequently requested to offer thanksgiving and supplication.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.—1.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

> "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."—Rev. xx. 4—6.

These words form part of a brief description of God's triumph, and the earth's peace. The great harlot, who profaned the truth, and persecuted the servants of God, has been judged. The worldly power, on which she leaned, and which sought to crush Christ's cause, has been shattered and annihilated. The dominions of the world have come to an end, and Daniel's vision has been fulfilled. The stone cut out of the mountain without hands has fallen upon them and crushed them to powder, and the whirlwind of the Lamb's wrath has swept them away like the dust of the summer threshing floor.

There is an end to tyranny and oppression, to heartless and thoughtless wrong, to all man's inhumanity to man. And the dominion, which has fallen from the hands of sin, the Lord takes up. It is his inheritance, and the earth has waited for Him. The world is filled with his glory. And they who were partakers of his sufferings, who followed in his path of self-denial and of shame, will share his triumph. They will hold the earth for Christ and for God. The Apostle does not describe Christ's throne; he sees only theirs; for Christ apparently will reign in and by his people. They are his vicegerents in the earth: "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them."

It may seem to some that to take these words as the subject of meditation is to enter upon dangerous ground, and that snares and pitfalls await our every step. As for others, to speak seriously to them of the predictions which are contained in this book, and which map out the world's future, is to raise a smile, or to beget a doubt of our intellectual capacity, or of our sanity. They are quite of the opinion that Revelation either finds a man mad, or makes him mad, and they have what seems to them a wholesome dread of prophetic studies. I have no desire to conceal the difficulties which abound in the pathway of those who explore this domain, or to deny that deplorable mistakes have been often made—mistakes which have brought the study of prophecy into undeserved contempt. But it may be well to ask whether, in putting aside all consideration of these things, we are not robbing ourselves of the very highest power.

The predictions regarding Christ's first coming were obscure enough to the Jews. There was much that they could not reconcile, and we know that they made mistakes. But they, nevertheless, laid hold of a mighty truth, or rather that truth laid hold of them. They knew that Christ would come, and each line they read, and each text they studied—no matter how dark it was—deepened that conviction. This hope gave depth to their joy, and fervour to their praise. It strengthened them to bear contempt and shame, and the fiercest storms of persecution. It clave gulfs of separation between them and the idolatries and the hideous vices of the heathen. It drew them from the midst of the allurements of sin, from worldly ambitions, from selfishness and pride. It made them haste along the way of righteousness to meet the Promised One. If they had said: "No man can understand these things fully. They lead to endless theories, and the absurdest dreams," and if, in consequence, they had treated the Prophets as a sealed book, then all that power would have been lost to them. The sense of that mighty destiny would no longer have held them, and separated them from the peoples of the earth.

Are we then losing nothing through neglect? We desire that this good, to which we look onward, should make its appeal to us. We have entreated that it might hold us, and separate us for itself. But how can it do so if we turn away from God when He would speak with us regarding it? It would appear as if our Lord, foreseeing the discredit which would be cast upon this branch of Divine teaching, had specially warned us against the danger of neglecting it. This is the only Book of Scripture which has a special promise attached to its study. A blessing is to rest upon him that readeth (that is, who reads in the public exercise of his ministry), and upon them that hear (that is, who attend to his teaching, i. 3). We accomplish the Lord's will, therefore, not by turning away from this book, but by turning to it, however deep our consciousness may be of inability to penetrate its mysteries.

Those who seek to land upon an unknown shore do not turn to where beetling crags forbid approach, but to where the shelving beach permits of access. Such an entrance seems offered to us here. However startling the doctrine may be, which is here taught, there is no darkness nor uncertainty about the statement of it. This is full and explicit. Let us look at the twofold hope of which it speaks:

CHRIST'S TRIUMPH, AND OUR TRIUMPH IN HIM.

The former of these may be called a commonplace of Scripture. The predictions regarding Jesus, with which the Bible teems, are as yet only half-fulfilled. They speak of his birth, his humiliation, his suffering and atoning death, his victory over the grave, but they do not end there. All his enemies are to be put under his feet. Iniquity is to be judged and cast out. The world is to be covered with the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea. No man will any longer require to say to his neighbour—"Know the Lord," for all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest. Oppression will cease. "He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." The prayer which the Lord taught us to offer shall then be fulfilled. God's kingdom will have come: his will shall be done on this sin-stained earth even as it is done in heaven.

Some have imagined that all this is to be accomplished through the preaching of the Gospel. We cannot limit the Spirit's power; but those who indulge this hope should ask themselves on what it is based. If it is entertained on the ground of experience, the past certainly encourages no hope of such a future as the result of evangelisation alone. We speak of England as a Christian nation. It is saturated with Christian truth, and there is no lack of Christian profession. But has sin been swept away? Have we no longer any knowledge of what iniquity means? Does the land know nothing of grinding oppression? Is there no cry rising from the pale lips of poverty and need, that smites the heart of God, and that lifts its appeal to the pitiful Redeemer to gird his sword upon his, thigh? Now, if the result of our missions be to make the world what England is—if the preaching of the Gospel will transform China, Japan, India, Africa, into the likeness of our own land, will that be the full salvation, the perfect righteousness, the unmarred joy and peace that we have been taught to look for?

But if the hope is founded upon the promises of Scripture, there are some passages which have surely not been pondered. He who bids us to carry the message of peace to earth's furthest bounds and preach the Gospel to every creature, has told us that it is for "a testimony" to them. Mercy runs before the car of judgment. Before Christ comes to visit for the earth's iniquity, "this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). There is a note of warning there that to the end there will be rejection as well as acceptance of our message. Then we have distinct predictions that in the last days there is trouble in store for the Church, and not triumph. They who hold the strength of the nations will make a final attempt to resist the Divine decree. "The man of sin," of whom more than one Scripture has spoken, will strive to stamp out God's work in the earth, and then the Lord shall come and smite him with the breath of his lips. All the dominions of the earth will be banded together in the impious attempt. "These have one mind, and shall give their strength and power to the beast. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them" (Rev. xvii. 13, 14). The thrones of to-day will be swept away for ever from the earth, which they have so long saturated with blood. Their guilt will mould their punishment. As they have risen in blood so will they go down in blood.

Man's sin will thus pave the way for God's triumph. That awful judgment of the world's iniquity and rebellion will melt the souls of people everywhere with holy fear. And from the bosom of that fear will spring holy love. Low ideals will perish, and the knowledge of Christ's will shall be a perpetual inspiration and joy. The earth, so long and so deeply defiled by sin, shall be made glorious by righteousness. The place where God has been so terribly forgotten shall resound with his unceasing praise. We know how this day of the Lord, in which He shall see, even here upon the earth, of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied, was the hope of the early Church. They strengthened one another with the assurance that it was at hand. They looked on to that as the great event in the world's history, and they rejoiced in the conviction that it was nigh, even at the doors. They were not the victims of an amiable and salutary delusion. They knew that much must happen ere then. Paul warned the Thessalonians, in one of the first Epistles which he wrote, that the day of the Lord should not come till the apostasy had taken place, and the man of sin had been revealed. And yet, though much had to transpire ere the Lord should come, that coming of the Lord, which was the one grand event of the future, for which they waited, and which every hour was bringing nearer, that event so overtopped every other that they ever thought and spoke of it as at hand. The hour of death, even the entering of the spirit into the unseen glory—the being present with the Lord, which is far better than the earthly walk by faith—were only incidents in the story. They looked beyond to the risen life with the risen and triumphant Lord. The mighty mountain, as one has said, though far away in point of space, is ever nigh by reason of its very greatness. It fills the eye, it awes the spirit, of the beholder. There is much that is nearer, and much that in itself is really great, but all is dwarfed and blotted out in the presence of that stupendous majesty. Or, say that we are expecting the arrival of a much-loved and long-absent friend. He is to come by a certain way, and on the far distant rising ground we have marked what seems to be his approach. From that moment, distant though he is, there is for us but one event—his coming. There are various nearer objects of the deepest interest for those around us; they have little or none for us, because he is near. The nearer he comes the more absolute is his hold of our heart and mind.

And the Lord comes—the Son of God, who loved us, and gave Himself for us. We have marked his approach; we know that He is nigh. The Scripture spoke of the apostasy which should precede his coming; it has taken place. This book has described the great harlot, whose seat was to be Imperial Rome, the city of the seven hills: she has appeared. It speaks of a false prophet, who should also delude the nations of the earth: he, too, has been manifested. The Revelation of the Old Testament—the Book of Daniel—predicts that the one Empire of Rome should be broken up into ten kingdoms, and that "in the days of these kings" the kingdom of God should be established. The Roman Empire has been divided, and these ten kingdoms are with us now almost in their completeness. How can we fail to note the Lord's approach? What interest is able to compete with that excited by the thought that the Desire of all nations draws nigh? How can we fail to hear, and to be thrilled by the cry, which was never louder than it is to-day: "Behold the Bridegroom cometh! Go ye forth to meet Him!"

Points for Preachers.

A TESTIMONY.

JOHN ANGELL JAMES, of Birmingham, said in one of his lectures:—If I have a right to consider myself a Christian, if I have attained to any usefulness in the Church of Christ, I owe it in the way of instrumentality to the sight of a companion who slept in the same room with me. He bent his knees every night in prayer, and that roused my slumbering conscience, and sent an arrow to my heart; for although I had been religiously educated, I had neglected prayer, and cast off the fear of God. My conversion followed, and my preparation for the work of the ministry. Nearly half a century has rolled away since then, but that little chamber and that praying youth are still present to my imagination, and will never be forgotten, even amidst the splendours of heaven, and throughout the ages of eternity.

ON HAPPINESS.

Can we think of anything that could make us more completely and perfectly miserable than an attempt to secure our own happiness by the anguish of another? If I were a homeless wanderer, hungry, wretched, ragged, perishing, and unable to go a step farther in the bleak winds and piercing cold, and I sink at your doorstep—what if you should come forth and lay your hand upon my shoulder, and bid me come in and sit by your fire, and eat your supper, and rest in your chair; and you would go forth to take my place in the bitter cold. Do you think I should feel happy! Never. I tell you your fire would scorch me; your supper would choke me; the comforts would be less bearable than my previous discomforts; and I should come forth and say, "Sir, either you will come in and share my good things, or I will come forth and share your evil things. I am not such a mean creature as to be made happy at a cost like this." Ah, my Lord, thou hast spoiled my happiness. I take Thine hand, and therein I do feel that dreadful wound-print. I look into thy face, and thereon I do track that cruel crown of thorns. I rest me against thy side, and I remember how it was pierced and torn for me. My Lord, now is there but one satisfaction that can ever be mine. Take me and lift me up, and let me hang with Thee upon thy Cross, that I may say—I am crucified with Christ. My happiness is spoiled by the pain and agony and shame and awful curse of Calvary.—Rev. M. Guy Pearse.

COMFORTED OF GOD.

An eminent physician, who, in visiting the sick, sought to administer to the soul as well as to the body, one day called upon a poor widow, whom, on a previous visit, he had found in great darkness of mind. She was now in a happy frame, and on asking her what had been the means of her comfort, she said it had been these words in Isa. liv. 5: "Thy Maker is thine Husband; the Lord of Hosts is his Name.' On asking her what she had felt to cheer her, her answer was, "I've been thinking that if that be true, I should be beginning to live up to His income."

SERMONS IN SHOES.

I have known a poor sick girl to become a "means of grace" to a whole family by her quiet patience, her serene trust, and her tranquil joy under severe suffering. Jesus Christ shone out through her lovely character as a night-lamp shines through a transparent porcelain vessel, and fills the apartment with a gentle radiance. A fearless Christian clerk of my acquaintance makes himself felt in the same way among his fellow-clerks in the store. Without any Pharisaic pretensions or assumptions, he gives them some admirable "object-teaching," almost every day, by his square, manly style of conscientious conduct. Preach every day, everywhere, by letting Christ shine out of every chink and crevice of your character; so shall your whole life be full of light. The sermons in shoes are the sermons to convert an ungodly world.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

SEASONED WITH SALT.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." We are not told to let our speech be salt entirely, totally. To take a whole mouthful of salt will choke one, and turn his stomach. We may in spiritual things disgust and repel men by a too raw and excessive and unmixed use of religious conversation. A pious, but very refined and sensitive minister recently declared that the greatest provocation to anger and intemperate speech that he had ever encountered was in the conduct of a rough and boisterous Christian, who used to shout at him across the street or in the cars, or wherever he chanced to meet him, "Well, brother, how's your soul?" He declared, that he was sometimes afraid of backsliding under these greetings. It was difficult, no doubt, for him always to answer the salutation "with grace." And the reason is obvious. This man's speech was not delicately seasoned with salt, and so was nauseous and intolerable, and produced disgust, when it might, if fitly seasoned, have proved refreshing. It is a great art to temper one's Christian conversation exactly to the occasion.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

THE MORMONS, tired of struggling against United States legislation, have, it is said, bought some land in Mexico. A hopeful sign of their decadence is that one of Brigham Young's grandsons has become an evangelical minister.

SCEPTICISM BEGINS in estrangement of the soul from God. A clear experience of the love of God in Christ, and a life full of Christian work will be the best defence from those utterances of unbelief which abound in our land. We affectionately entreat you not to give any of them a place in your thoughts—"no, not for an hour." We beseech you "flee these things." Never barter away the holy triumph of faith which our fathers knew, for the barren life of living "without Christ," "having no hope, and without God in the world."—Wesleyan Methodist Conference Address.

Mohammedanism and Missions.

An interesting article on the influence of Arab traders in West Central Africa, contributed by Lieutenant Wissmann to the current issue of the "Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society," throws considerable light on the question of Mohammedanism and missions, raised by Canon Isaac Taylor at the last Church Congress. The writer's experience of Mohammedan influences upon the native populations is in direct contrast with the assertion that the creed of Islam is that best suited to their needs. He gives a graphic account of two visits to Bagna Pesihi, and certain villages of the Bene Ki, a division of the Basonge, in Central Africa, before and after the arrival of a gang of Arab traders on the scene.

On the first occasion, in 1882, he was welcomed by a prosperous and contented tribe, whose condition and occupations bore ample evidence to the existence of its villages for decades in peace and security, free from the disturbing elements of war and slave-hunts, pestilence, and superstition. The huts of the natives were roomy and clean, fitted with shady porches, and surrounded by carefully kept fields and gardens, in which were grown all manner of useful plants and fruits, including hemp, sugar, tobacco, sweet potatoes, maize, manioc, and millet. A thicket of bananas and plantains occupied the back of each homestead, and shady palm groves supplied their owners with nuts, oil, fibres, and wine. Goats, sheep, and fowls abounded, and no one seemed afraid of thieves. The people all had a well-fed air, and were anxious to trade, their supplies being plentiful, and extremely cheap. A fowl could be purchased for a large cowrie shell, and a goat for a yard of calico. Everywhere the visitors found a cheerful, courteous, and contented population, uncontaminated by the vices of civilisation, and yet not wholly ignorant of its arts.

Four years later Lieutenant Wissmann chanced to be in the same district, and after the privations of a toilsome march through dense, inhospitable forests, rejoiced as he drew near to the palm-groves of the Bagna Pesihi. A dense growth of grass covered the formerly well-trimmed paths.

> As we approach the skirt of the groves we are struck by the dead silence which reigns. No laughter is to be heard, no sign of a welcome from our old friends. The silence of death breathes over the lofty crowns of the palms, slowly waving in the wind. We enter, and it is in vain we look to the right and left for the happy homesteads and the happy old scenes. Tall grass covers everything, and a charred pole here and there, a few banana trees are the only evidences that man once dwelt here. Bleached skulls by the roadside, and the skeletons of human hands attached to poles tell the story of what has happened here since our last visit.

It appeared that the notorious Tippoo Tib had been there to "trade," and in the course of that process had killed all who offered resistance, carried off the women, and devastated the fields, gardens, and banana groves. Bands of destroyers from the same gang had returned again and again, and those who escaped the sword perished by the small-pox and famine, which the marauders left in their train. The whole tribe of the Bene Ki ceased to exist, and only a few remnants found refuge in a neighbouring State.

Such must be counted amongst the results of Arab "trading" in Africa, and if it is at such cost that the blessings of Mohammedan civilisation are purchased by the native races, it is no wonder that they are not always considered a desirable acquisition. Even if it be true that Christianity is sometimes tardy of operation in its beneficent effect upon the blacks, Christian missionaries and Christian traders can at least boast that they have never wittingly acted otherwise than beneficently towards them. In their case the perpetration of such atrocities would be impossible. With the followers of the false prophet it is different. Their religion is merely a superstition, adapted to the needs of aggressive and militant tribes, and does not profess to inculcate tenderness or humanity, much less the loftier teachings of the Gospel of Christ.

It must continue a heart-searching question for all thinking Christians, how the spiritual needs of unregenerate Africa can best be served, and how the light of Christ's Gospel may be brought to illumine the darkness and blindness of that Continent. Much good work has already been done by the labour and self-sacrifice of our missionaries on the coast, but in the interior the task is well-nigh hopeless. Until some sort of security for lives and property can be established there, the work of years will always be liable to absolute overthrow in a single moment by exterminatory raids or savage wars. Some sort of law or government must be enforced, and then missionary effort may hope to accomplish some permanent good. Until then it will find more profitable employment in other directions.

"OPEN DOORS IN JAPAN."

Dear Sir,—Your readers will be glad to hear that many have written responsively with reference to my appeal on this subject; especially young ladies who are certificated teachers, and who seem to be in every respect qualified to enter by the open doors. I regret that I cannot see my way to offer myself to them as a guide and helper, and take them at once into this field, which cannot fail to afford scope for the most sanguine hopes and enterprising zeal both religiously and educationally. But may not this fact of my way being thus hedged up for the present be a voice to some Christian sisters, or party of sisters, or families to whom the Lord has entrusted the silver and the gold, to go and make a home in the field for those who are saying, "Here am I, send me"?

I am very glad to be here in order to be helpful to any Japanese I may be brought across in this great city. Yet my longing heart would lead me to that land where the Lord so manifestly owned and blessed my labours among the Japanese as well as English and American sailors. Would God's children everywhere regard it to be their part in this great work to pray that "His light shall shine on my way."

SEAMEN IN ANTWERP.—While visiting Antwerp recently I was struck with the need of a Seamen's Rest. There is a Seamen's Institute, which is a green spot in the moral waste, where the Gospel is preached in English on Sundays. There is a good reading-room, and there are two or three missionaries to seamen. But in a place like Antwerp, where cafés, and drinkshops, and haunts of vice and infamy abound, a Sailors' Home or Rest is greatly needed, where seamen of all nations could find a harbour of refuge; where they could board and lodge while in port at a moderate cost, and would be under the influence of loving hearts, whose aim would be to make known to them the glorious truths of the Gospel. Would any friend of the sailor carry out this idea?

ONLY A WORKROOM GIRL.

The light is dim in the small bare room,
So dim that the shadows scarcely show:
As the oil lamp which makes plain the gloom
Flickers to and fro.

A scanty reach of blank grey wall,
A bed, a chair behind the door;
A hanging dress, a well-worn shawl,
These—and nothing more.

"Mother, my dear,"—then the voice was jarred
By the sobs that would break out between,
For, oh, it is sometimes hard—so hard—
To die at seventeen.

"Mother, my dear, it is not death:
Why should we poor ones fear a friend?
For rest may follow the failing breath,
And weariness have an end.

"But oh! it is hard to die and know
That the few poor shillings my life is worth
Give the dear ones left an added woe,
To suffer here on earth.

"Mother, it's that, that makes me cry:
That want should have such an awful power,
That the poor will suffer and fear to die
For the loss of a penny an hour.

"Mother, don't cry: you know, Jenny is tall,
And the master's so kind—I'm sure if you speak
And tell him I'm dead—and the children and all—
He'll give her four shillings a week.

"I fear she will find it so hard at the first,
Ten hours and never a mouthful of air;
But she'll get over that, if her heart doesn't burst
With the endless grinding and care.

"Ten hours with never a mouthful of air,
Through the length of the summer's stifling heat;
Ten hours, and—oh, mother, it's hard to bear—
Never enough to eat.

"Till want, and strength, and youth are gone,
And the eyes so tired they scarcely see,
And the weary months creep on and on,
Then—Jenny will die—like me.

"But mother, go quick with the morning's light,
Tell the master I'm dead, and what you seek,
For there are hundreds to struggle and fight
To earn four shillings a week.

"God help the poor, I've heard folks say,
But I've thought as the hours dragged, stitch on stitch,
That we who are poor should sometimes pray
That God would help the rich.

"For I think God holds us as dear as they,
And I think perhaps they don't understand
That He may require on the judgment day
Our souls at our sisters' hand."

Children's Hospital, Jerusalem.

This work, carried on by Dr. Sandreczki, has received the blessing of God, and its labours have touched the hearts of mothers and children. During 1887, 196 persons were admitted to the Hospital. All of these patients, with the exception of four Russian-Jews, were subjects of the Turkish Empire, and all excepting four were peasants. There were 128 Mahommedans, 50 Christians, and 17 Jews. In the out-patient department 324 children were treated.

Writing in July last, Dr. M. Sandreczki says:—"We need particular help this year, as by want of rain last winter and last spring, the crops have been very bad; worst of all, water is wanting in the town and in many villages. As a great deal of foul and dirty water is used, there is much illness. At the same time the heat is excessive. Corn and vegetables are very dear. Pray for us, for our work, for Jerusalem, for Palestine, where Rome and Russia are extending their power in an astonishing manner."

On Winning Souls to Christ.

BY GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

(Concluded.)

THE measure of our success in the service of God is according to the measure of our faith in God. But true success is not known by worldly tests. The Divine standard is beyond human ken. Enough to know that those who co-labour with God can never fail. Work for Christ is not only a labour of love, but also a work of faith. And faith is neither fanaticism nor presumption. When faith is simulated, disaster follows; where faith is real, difficulties vanish and success is ensured. "By faith the children of Israel passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians essaying to do were drowned." The ten spies walking by sight saw giants, and regarded themselves as mere grasshoppers. Joshua and Caleb who walked by faith saw no difficulties which could not be overcome. "Have faith in God." Material things are ever changing. That imposing marble monument at Washington is slowly sinking; its foundation has deepened three inches in as many years. But he who builds a fairer monument of consecrated deeds need never fear. His confidence is in the Word of the Lord, which liveth and abideth for ever.

1. He that winneth souls must have confidence in the purpose of God. Assuredly we know that God hath chosen those who respond to the preached Gospel, before the world began, "having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." The Scriptures declare that God has a people; that they will believe the Gospel; that it is our exalted privilege to co-operate with God in his purpose, and to preach salvation through Christ freely and fully without an iota of fear regarding its predestined mission. For as in the material universe, stars and suns and systems move in obedience to his will, and so fulfil the purpose of their creation; and as He who made them still controls their movements in their respective spheres, each world revolving in light or shadow while ministering to its Creator's pleasure, even so, in the spiritual world the fortunes of the Church are in the hand of God, ordered in all things and sure. And whether she walks in noonday brightness, or in midnight darkness, whether in full-orbed shining, or in temporary eclipse, the Church of Christ will hold her pre-ordained place in the economy of the ages, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against her. God, in the covenant of grace, provides no pillow for a lazy head, yet thereon is a resting-place for the loving heart. And to his beloved confiding saints He giveth songs in the night in the house of their pilgrimage. Yes, of this we are well assured, that all whom the Father gave the Son shall be redeemed from among men, and will forever join in the new song of thanksgiving to the Lamb in the coming ages.

Let the Christian worker then, as an agent employed by the Holy Spirit in bringing to successful issue the Divine decrees, in the conversion of sinners, have implicit confidence in the all-wise, all-glorious purpose of the blessed God.

2. The soul-winner must also have confidence in the promise of God. Fourteen hundred and fifty years before the birth of Christ, Balaam, the son of Beor, by special Divine inspiration, thus addressed Balak, the son of Zippor: "God is not a man that He should lie, nor the son of man that He should repent: hath He said and shall He not do it; or hath He spoken and shall He not make it good." Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, fifteen hundred years after Balaam, echoes the same testimony: "In hope of eternal life which God that cannot lie promised before the world began." We may well, therefore, have confidence in the promise of God regarding the work of human salvation. The earnest preacher or teacher can surely believe that what God hath promised He is able also to perform. His word will prosper in the thing whereto it is sent. But how careful must we be lest we deposit chaff in the sinner's heart, instead of the good seed of the Word. For this must ever be a prime condition of soul-winning that we sow the incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth for ever. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. It is this Word which has life in itself, and imparteth life to those who receive it. It is the engrafted Word, able to save the soul. Go forth, then, thou soul-winner, in the morning sowing thy seed, and in the evening withholding not thy hand, not knowing whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both shall be alike good. He who soweth the word shall not labour in vain in the Lord. Be you therefore steadfast, immovable, and ever abounding in the work, while your confidence in the promises of God to bring to fruition the seed sown shall never waver.

3. Finally, there must be confidence in the power of God. Blessed is that Christian worker who has fully learned the lesson that for spiritual service human wisdom is but a fancy and human power a farce. This knowledge will keep the believer from presumptuous attempts to manufacture results. There is a boundary line around human agency beyond which lies the prerogative of God. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses before Pharaoh, by mimicking his miracles. But when they beheld inanimate dust quickened into insect life at the command of Moses, they confessed their own inability to perform a like deed. "This," said the scientific magicians, "is the finger of God." There is a limit to human power and human ingenuity. Inventiveness can form a resemblance, but cannot make a fly. The scientist can galvanise a corpse into spasmodic action, but cannot give life to a dead mouse. So in the religious sphere, the sensationalist can produce a commotion, but cannot make a convert. This is surely the work of God. The Spirit breatheth as he listeth; and by the breath of the Almighty, life eternal is given to the soul.

To know our own weakness is therefore necessary, but we also need to recognise the power of God. Who but the Christian believer understands this sublime philosophy, "When I am weak, then am I strong"; "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." O wonder, ye heavens, and be astonished, O earth. Jesus, to whom all power is delegated, both in heaven and on earth, attaches his omnipotence to our weakness. Hear Him say, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." To this pledged assurance, O fellow-labourer, shall we not joyfully respond, "Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me"? Have proof in yourself that the grace of Jesus Christ is all-sufficient for all things to every good work. Let your self-sufficiency wither as the grass, that you may more fully realise the resources of the eternal Spirit equipping you for every service; then shall you neither fear nor falter. And as you hasten to the rescue of the perishing, give ear to the Divine decree uttered with distinct enunciation, and in clearer tones than the siren songs of carnal pleasure; the empty gabble of worldly society; the warning cry of "fanaticism," from friend or foe; the jarring, urging calls of greed, or the threatening roar of hell's enraged lion. "The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that winneth souls is wise."

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Much interest is shown in the services carried on in the tent which is pitched in a capital site in the Tower Hamlets district, Dover. The tent is filled each evening, and some have professed conversion through the preaching of Mr. Clark, the evangelist. At Margate the work in the tent on the Fort has been very encouraging. There have been large attendances at each service, and many pleasing instances of the Spirit's work have appeared.

AFRICA'S OPEN SORE.

IN a painfully interesting article on the subject of African Slavery, a correspondent of The Daily Chronicle writes:—

Slavery is rampant as ever in many parts of the world. It broods like a curse over Africa in particular, and is the fertile source of bloodshed, rapine, and murder in the lonely places. Daily and hourly thousands of victims are suffering unutterable pains from it, while under our own flag it is in a measure practised and recognised in the case of the Kaffir women, who are sold regularly in Natal, Transvaal, and Zululand. Another name has been found for the infernal transaction, but nevertheless it is slavery. Any man may purchase a native girl by paying her father or her guardians the required number of oxen, and that independent of any consent from the one most interested. This course is countenanced by the Roman-Dutch law in force in the South African colonies and Republics. When voices have been raised against it, the official answer has been, "We cannot risk a general war by infringing the rights of the male Africans who shelter under our flag and government."

During the course of a twenty-three years' sojourn in Africa, I have seen much of the Arabs and their methods, and can safely say that 900,000 victims per annum is not an over-estimate of the numbers who suffer. Until very recent times (1873) terrible atrocities were to be seen, openly practised by the Arabs in the market places of Zanzibar, Johanna, and other islands on the east coast of Africa. It was no uncommon thing to see dense throngs of unhappy wretches, chained together, with open and undressed wounds on their shoulders, stand waiting to be sold, while here, there, and everywhere, hook-nosed and keen-eyed Arabs jostled each other in their eager bargain making. Now and again an over-driven prize would sink where he or she stood, and expire through weakness or fever incurred during the long and fearful march across the deserts or swamps of the mainland; while at frequent intervals a sob or wail could be heard, coming straight from the heart of someone whose powers of endurance had given way. I have walked through such a market, and know what it is to be blinded and maddened by a state of things against which I was powerless. It was about this period that Sir Bartle Frere went out, commissioned to treat with the Sultan of Zanzibar for a cessation of the traffic. While ostensibly agreeing to all the English demands, the Arabs have contrived, by a hole-and-corner policy, to carry it on even to this day, much to their own profit and our discomfiture.

During my recent travels in East Africa I had an opportunity of watching the game of "hide and seek" which was being played between our bluejackets and the Arabs, while, by knowledge of the African languages, I picked up a considerable amount of information about how the iniquitous trade is carried on. The usual course is to ascertain by means of spies how many likely subjects are to be had in a certain village. Should the number prove tempting enough, the Arabs, armed with modern rifles and followed by halfbreeds, stealthily approach by night, and, with a rush, storm the place. Lighted firebrands very soon set the ghats flaming, and, in the confusion and terror consequent on being so rudely awakened from sleep, the aged are slain, and the suitables captured, bound, and dragged towards the boats. More than once I have come across the charred remains of villages, where but a few days previous a happy throng sang their quaint wordless melodies as they laboured in the cornfields or idled in the sun. Should this crusade go on, it is to be hoped that something more than mere reason may be brought to bear on the heartless and cruel monsters who to-day are laughing in their beards at the feeble attempts of Englishmen to stop a traffic which is as profitable as it is sinful, and as debasing as it is cruel.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XXIV.—I HAVE GOOD NEWS FOR YOU.

Some years ago, there lived in an old Abbey House in the country, a colonel and his wife. They had no family, but in the place of children were surrounded with dogs and horses—occasionally with company staying at the house.

These two lived as if there was no eternity, and as if the pleasures of the world were all that they need care for. They were happy in their way, and appeared to have neither care nor anxiety of any kind to trouble them. God had provided them with abundance of everything, but they made no acknowledgment of his providence. They had no family prayer for the household, nor did they even give thanks at their table.

Literally, God was not in their thoughts at all. Certainly they went to their parish church on Sunday morning, if the weather was fine enough, and came back as they went. It was well for them that there were occasional evangelistic services held in the town hall and other places.

One day there was an announcement in the newspaper, that Mr. B—— would give a Gospel address in the hall of a neighbouring town. The Colonel said, "I used to know that man once."

"Yes," said his lady, "so did I; I have danced with him very often. I should like to go and hear him preach."

"So we will," said the Colonel. "Order the luncheon half an hour earlier to-morrow, and we will go."

Away they went, and found the hall pretty well filled, with country as well as town people. It was a somewhat novel kind of service they thought, but very interesting, and the singing was hearty.

The Colonel and his wife did not venture to renew the acquaintance of their old friend, but speedily returned home. Evidently, they had heard enough, and so betook themselves to their carriage, and drove home in silence.

When they met in the drawing-room before dinner, the Colonel said, "I have good news for you, my dear," and before he could finish his speech, the wife began a similar speech. She had good news for her husband.

"Henceforth, I am the Lord's," said the Colonel.

"So am I," added his wife; "that address has quite decided me."

It was so, these two worldly persons had a great deal to learn; but they had heard enough to decide them to give up the useless worldly lives they had been leading.

That evening, after dinner, was spent in a novel manner for them, it was in reading together the New Testament.

"What chapter was it that Mr. B—— recommended us to look over?" asked the Colonel. "Was it not the third of St. John? Let us turn to that."

"Yes," answered his wife, "and he told us to read the concluding verses of the preceding chapter as well."

They read these portions of Scripture, which might as well have been in Greek for all these benighted people understood. They were as far off as ever.

The wife, however, drew her husband's attention to the third verse, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Observe," she said, "there are three things here, born again, see, and the kingdom of God."

"Well, yes," said the Colonel, looking anxious, "but what are they? What is it to be born again?"

"Why," answered his wife, "I used to be taught that being born again was being baptized."

"Yes," was the Colonel's reply, "I have heard that too, and I have been baptized, but I do not see anything yet. What is this kingdom of God? It is hard lines to be shut out of heaven for not being born again. What in the world is it?"

Being unable to help one another, they at last gave it up in despair, and shut up the book.

Presently they began to talk of the people who were at the meeting in the afternoon. "How they listened, did they not?"

"Happy thought," suddenly exclaimed the Colonel, striking his knee with his hand, "I will send over for Dick, the blacksmith, he knows about this new birth."

The thought had scarcely come to his mind before the Colonel had despatched his servant in search of the man in question. He soon returned, bringing the blacksmith with him.

The man was ushered into their presence at once. "Now, Dick," said the Colonel, looking at him, "are you born again?"

"Yes, bless the Lord," replied the blacksmith, "that I am, sure enough."

"What is it?" inquired the Colonel eagerly.

"Well," answered the man, "I be glad to hear you ask about this; but how can I tell you what it is? It's the new birth, ye know, that's what it is, and a very blessed thing it is to have your sins all pardoned, and your soul saved! That's what it is."

"How did you get to know about this?" asked the lady.

"Why, ma'am, I'll tell you. It was through Mr. Haslam preaching in the barn yonder, that opened my blind eyes. He told me I was a-going to hell, and I saw it plain enough. So I cried to the Lord to have mercy on my soul, and He just did it; you know, that's how it was. I tell you what," he continued. "Mr. Haslam is a-coming to-morrow evening to preach, now do you come and hear the gentleman."

After a little further conversation the Colonel dismissed the blacksmith, and he and his wife determined to go to the barn meeting the next evening.

Not knowing anything that had passed, I came to the appointed service, and was led to dwell upon the necessity of the new birth. I remarked: "As we cannot see natural things without a natural birth into this world; in like manner, we cannot see spiritual things without a spiritual birth. At this new birth we are endowed with spiritual faculties without which we are not fit for God's presence, either here or hereafter."

The Colonel and his wife had made arrangements that I was to sleep at the Abbey that night. Accordingly, they brought me home with them, and we sat long into the night talking about spiritual things.

They told me all that had passed the day before. It was easy to discern how the Lord had already laid hold of these two, and made them willing. Their eyes were opened to see their danger, and now all that they needed was to be brought from the darkness of ignorance into the light of salvation, from the power and devices of Satan to God, to receive forgiveness of their sins. We went to prayer, and after I had prayed the Colonel spoke out his mind and burden in earnest supplication; and with many tears his wife did the same. What had I to say now, but to assure them that all was done and finished by Christ upon the cross.

"Have we nothing to do?" inquired the Colonel.

"No," I said, "you have nothing to do for your salvation, but to accept it. It is God's gift to you for Christ's sake; but you may work as hard as you please for love of God, who has done such great things for you."

After this, it was a joy to see these two new-born souls hungering and thirsting to know more of the Word of God. The simplicity of their questions, and the earnestness of their devotion was most cheering. They came straight from the world to their Bibles, and helped each other greatly in the study of the Word, and they were not behind in their testimony to their worldly friends.

EDUCATION IN CEYLON.

An important centre of Christian activity in Ceylon is the Jaffna College for the training of native helpers. This institution originated in a spontaneous effort on the part of the native Christians in 1867. About £1700 towards its cost was raised in Ceylon, and £6000 contributed by American friends. In 1872 the College was opened under a board of directors securing its undenominational character. Nevertheless it is a distinctly and decidedly Christian institution, and has from the beginning been presided over by Rev. Dr. E. P. Hastings.

There is a flourishing preparatory school. All students reside on the premises, and are thus separated from heathen associations and brought under Christian influence. Every year there have been conversions, and the majority of those who graduate do so as Christians. There is a Y.M.C.A. in connection with the College, and many of the members are good workers in the town and neighbourhood. A goodly number of the graduates have become pastors, catechists, and teachers, not only in Ceylon, but also in India. Some of those who might have been receiving salaries of from 80 to 150 rupees per month in secular employment are content to preach the Gospel and conduct mission schools for from 15 to 45 rupees per month. They have made this choice out of love to Christ, whom they greatly desire to serve.

It is now proposed to enlarge the College, add to its staff of professors, and extend its course of study. The additions will include a fully equipped medical department, with hospital and dispensary. Bursaries will also be founded in aid of poor students professing the Christian faith.

The rising generation demands the higher education, and it is hoped by this means to provide it in connection with Christian precepts, sanctions, and influence. There is reason to believe that Jaffna College will yet be a great blessing to the Indian Empire. The directors have appealed for £30,000, and it is gratifying to know that £8000 has already been subscribed. Altogether the work is intensely interesting and highly important. Contributions towards the fund are received by Mr. G. C. Maclean, 4, Dean-park Crescent, Edinburgh; or by the Misses Leitch, 19, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

Sailors' Welcome Home,

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

On Tuesday week the monthly meeting of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" was held. Miss Child, unfortunately, was unable to be present through ill-health. Captain Tottenham led the meeting, and gave a short address, followed by Rev. Mr. Fowler, who spoke of the Master's choice of fishermen as the first disciples, and of their bravery, energy, and plain speech.

Miss Grimston, from Smyrna, spoke of the work among sailors in that place. Several testimonies were given as to the Divine power to save the lowest and most ignorant, and to keep them saved. A letter was read, telling of conversion work at one of the last meetings held by a band of the crew, in a distant part of London.

AUNTY PARSONS' STORY.

I told Hezekiah—that's my man. People mostly call him Deacon Parsons, but he never gets any deaconing from me. We were married —"Hezekiah and Amariah"—that's going on forty years ago, and he's jest Hezekiah to me, and nothin' more.

Well, as I was saying, says I, "Hezekiah, we aren't right. I am sure of it." And he said, "Of course not. We are all poor sinners, Amy, all poor sinners." And I said, "Hezekiah, this 'poor sinner' talk has gone on long enough. I suppose we are poor sinners, but I don't see any use of being mean sinners; and there's one thing I think is real mean."

It was jest after breakfast; and, as he felt poorly, he hedn't gone to the shop yet; and so I had this little talk with him to sort o' chirk him up. He knew what I was comin' to, for we hed had the subject up before. It was our little church. He always said, "The poor people, and what should we ever do?" and I always said, "We never shall do nothin' unless we try." And so when I brought the matter up in this way, he jest began to bitin' his toothpick, and said, "What's up now? Who's mean? Amariah, we oughtn't to speak evil of one another." Hezekiah always says "poor sinners," and doesn't seem to mind it, but when I occasionally say "mean sinners," he somehow gets oneasy. But I was started, and I meant to free my mind.

So I said, says I, "I was going to confess our sins. Dan'l confessed for all his people, and I was confessin' for all our little church.

"Truth is," says I, "ours is allus called one of the 'feeble churches,' and I am tried about it. I've raised seven children, and at fourteen months old every boy and girl of 'em could run alone. And our church is fourteen years old," says I, "and it can't take a step yet without somebody to hold on by. The Board helps us, and General Jones, good man, he helps us—helps too much I think—and so we live along, but we don't seem to get strong. Our people draw their rations every year as the Indians do up at the Agency; and it does seem sometimes as if they never thought of doing anything else.

"They take it so easy," I said. "That's what worries me. I don't suppose we could pay expenses, but we might act as if we wanted to, and as if we meant to do all we could.

"I read," says I, "last week about the debt of the Board, and this week, as I understand," says I, "our application is going in for another year, and no particular effort to do any better, and it frets me. I can't sleep nights, and I can't take comfort Sundays. I have got to feelin' as if we were a kind of perpetual paupers. And that was what I meant when I said, 'It is real mean!" I suppose I said it a little sharp," says I, "but I'de rather be sharp than flat, any day, and if we don't begin to stir ourselves we shall be flat before long, and shall deserve to be. It grows on me. It has jest been 'Board, Board, Board,' for fourteen years, and I am tired of it. I never did like boardin'," says I, "and even if we were poor, I believe we might do somethin' towards settin' up house keepin' for ourselves.

"Well, there's not many of us; about a hundred, I believe, and some of these is women folks, and some is jest boys and girls. And we all have to work hard and live close; but," says I, "let us show a disposition if nothin' more. Hezekiah, if there's any spirit left in us, let us show some sort of a disposition."

And Hezekiah had his toothpick in his teeth, and looked down at his boots and rubbed his chin, as he always does when he's goin' to say somethin'. "I think there's some of us that shows a disposition."

Of course I understood that hit, but I kep still. I kep' right on with my argument, and I said, "Yes, and a pretty bad disposition it is. It's a disposition to let ourselves be helped when we ought to be helping ourselves. It's a disposition to lie still and let somebody carry us. And we are growing up cripples, only we don't grow.

"'Kiah," says I, "do you hear me?" Sometimes when I want to talk a little he jest shets his eyes, and begins to rock himself back and forth in the old arm-chair, and he was doin' that now. So I said, "'Kiah, do you hear?" and he said, "Some!" and then I went on. "I've got a proposition," says I. And he sort o' looked up and said, 'Hev you? Well, between a disposition and a proposition, I guess the proposition might be better.'

He's awful sarcastic sometimes. But I wasn't goin' to get riled, nor thrown off the track; so I jest said, "Yes, do you and I get two shillin's worth apiece a week, out of that blessed little church of ourn, do you think?" says I. "Cos, if we do, I want to give two shillin's a week to keep it goin', and I thought maybe you could do as much." So he said he guessed he could stand that, and I said, "That's my proposition; and I mean to see if we can't find somebody else that'll do the same. It'll show disposition, anyway."

"Well, I suppose you'll hev your own way," says he, "you most always do." And I said, "Isn't it most allers a good way?" Then I brought out my Subscription Paper. I had it all ready. I didn't jest know how to shape it, but I knew it was something about "the sums set opposite our names," and so I drawed it up, and took my chances. "You must head it," says I, "because you're the oldest deacon, and I must go on next, because I am the deacon's wife, and then I'll see some of the rest of the folks."

So 'Kiah sot down, put on his spects, and took his pen, but did not write. "What's the matter?" says I. And he said, "I am sort of 'shamed to subscribe two shillin's. I never signed so little as that for anything. I used to give that to the circus when I was nothin' but a boy, and I ought to do more than that to support the Gospel. Two shillin's a week! Why, it's only a shillin' a sermon,* and all the prayer-meetin's throw'd in. I can't go less than fifty cents, I am sure." So down he went for fifty cents, and then I signed for a quarter, and then my sunbonnet went on to my head pretty lively; and says I, "Hezekiah, there's some cold potato in the pantry, and you know where to find the salt; so, if I am not back by dinner time, don't be bashful, help yourself." And I started.

I called on the Smith family first. I felt sure of them. And they were just happy; Mr. Smith signed, and so did Mrs. Smith; and Long John, he came in while we were talkin', and put his name down; and then old grandma Smith, she didn't want to be left out; so there was four of 'em. I've allers found it a great thing in any good enterprise to enlist the Smith family. There's a good many of 'em. Next, I called on the Joslyns, and next on the Chapins, and then on the Widdie Chadwick, and so I kept on.

I met a little trouble once or twice, but not much. There was Fussy Furber, and bein' trustee he thought I was out of my sphere, he said; and he wanted it understood that such work belonged to the trustees. "To be sure," says I, "I'm glad I've found it out. I wish the trustees had discovered that a leetle sooner." Then there was Sister Puffy, that's got the asthma. She thought we ought to be looking after the sperritooalities. She said we must get down before the Lord. She didn't think churches could be run on money. But I told her I guessed we should be jest as spiritual to look into our pocket-books a little, and I said it was a shame to be 'tarnally beggin' so of the Board.

She looked dreadful solemn when I said that, and I almost felt as I'd been committin' profane language. But I hope the Lord will forgive me if I took anything in vain. I did not take my call in vain, I tell you. Mrs. Puffy is good, only she allers wanted to talk so pious; and she put down her two shillin's, and then hove a sigh. Then I found the boys at the cooper-shop, and got seven names there at one lick; and when the list began to grow people seemed ashamed to say no, and I kept gainin' till I had just an even hundred, and then I went home.

Well, it was pretty well toward candle-light when I got back, and I was that tired I didn't know much of anything. I've washed, and I've scrubbed, and I've baked, and I've biled soap, and I've moved; and I 'low that a'most any one of that sort of thing is a little exhaustin'. But put your bakin' and movin' and bilin' soap altogether, and it won't work out as much genuine tired soul and body as one day with a subscription paper to support the Gospel. So when I sort 'f dropped into a chair, and Hezekiah said, "Well?" I was past speakin', and I put my check apron up to my face as I hadn't done since I was a young, foolish girl, and cried. I don't know what I felt so bad about; I don't know as I did feel bad. But I felt cry, and I cried. And 'Kiah, seeing how it was, felt kind o' sorry for me, and set some tea a-steepin', and when I had my drink, with weepin', I felt better.

I handed him the subscription paper, and he looked it over as if he didn't expect anything; but soon he began saying, "I never! I never!" And I said, "Of course you didn't; you never tried. How much is it?" "Why, don't you know?" says he. "No," I said, "I ain't quick in figures, and I hadn't time to foot it up. I hope it will make us out this year three hundred dollars or so."

"Amy," says he, "you're a prodigy—a prodigal I may say—and you don't know it. A hundred names at two shillin' each gives us twenty-five dollars a Sunday. Some of 'em may fail, but most of 'em is good; and there is ten, eleven, thirteen, that sign fifty cents. That'll make up what fails. That paper of yourn'll give us thirteen hundred dollars a year!" I jumped up like I was shot. "Yes," he says, "we shan't need anything this year from the Board. This church, for this year, at any rate, is self-supportin'."

We both sot down and kep' still a minute, when I said kind o' softly, "Hezekiah," says I, "isn't it about time for prayers?" I was just chokin', but as he took down the Bible he said, "I guess we had better sing somethin'?" I nodded like, and he just struck in. We often sing at prayers in the morning; but now it seemed like the Scripter that says, "He giveth songs in the night." 'Kiah generally likes the solemn tunes, too: and we sing, "Show pity, Lord," a great deal; and this mornin' we had sung "Hark, from the tombs a joyful sound," 'cause 'Kiah was not feelin' very well, and we wanted to chirp up a little.

So I just waited to see what meter he'd strike up to-night; and would you believe it? I didn't know that he knew any sech tune. But off he started on "Joy to the world, the Lord is come." I tried to catch on, but he went off, lickerty-switch, like a steam engine, and I couldn't keep up. I was partly laughing to see 'Kiah go it, and partly crying again, my heart was so full; so I doubled up some of the notes and jumped over some of the others, and so we safely reached the end.

But I tell you, Hezekiah prayed. He allers prays well, but this was a bran new prayer, exactly suited to the occasion. And when Sunday come, and the minister got up and told what had been done, and said, "It is all the work of one good woman, and done in one day," I just got scared and wanted to run. And when some of the folks shook hands with me, after meetin', and said, with tears in their eyes, how I'd saved the church, and all that, I came awful nigh gettin' proud. But as Hezekiah says, "we're all poor sinners," and so I choked it back. But I am glad I did it; and I don't believe our church will ever go boardin' any more.

For the Young.

INDIANS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

During the last winter, in New Mexico, we have seen many children among the Pueblo Indians coming to Christ, and learning to trust in Him. I wish you could have seen their happy faces. I wish to speak of the "Flathead Indians" in British Columbia. Do you know why they are called "Flatheads"? When they are very young, their mothers take them and press their heads between two boards or stones, till they are flattened out, so that afterwards they are known as "Flathead Indians."

Their heads and faces have been distorted, but we have seen many of them trusting in Jesus, and then with tears in their eyes, tell of the great love of Jesus in giving Himself to die on the cross for us. Their words have often moved the hearts of the young and old, as they told, in the large audiences, of the way in which they were led to give up heathenism, with its wicked practices, and to live the life of a Christian.

A few years ago, a number of Christian people in Victoria, B. C., determined to do what they could to lead the Indians around them to the Saviour. Many members of the church to which they belonged said it was of no use. Still they persevered, and at length secured a room and gathered in quite a number, and began to teach them to read. One Sunday, however, there was not an Indian present, and two of the teachers went over to the Indian "rancherie" to find why there were none of them at the school; and what do you think they found them doing? When I say they were "making an Indian doctor," I fear you will not know any better than before. I must, therefore, tell you what kind of process the man went through to fit him, in their estimation, for healing the sick.

As the gentlemen approached the "rancherie," they heard a terrible shouting, and saw about seventy-five in a circle, making a most hideous noise with drums, rattles, and kettles, and dancing around the man, who stood in the centre, holding a dog. This man was taught by the Indian custom that if he could tear the dog to pieces with his teeth, eat him, and then go into the woods, without any blankets, and come back alive after three days, he was fitted for an Indian doctor. They looked like evil spirits; they were painted and covered with tar and feathers, so that they did not look like human beings. The poor dog was soon torn limb from limb, and half eaten.

Among those same Indians are numbers who, to-day, are earnest Christians. "Amos" was the first one converted. His eyes filled with tears as he spoke of the love of Jesus in giving Himself to die for a savage like himself. He and others helped to build a nice church, in which we found them singing God's praises. None of the Indians felt they were too old to study the word of God. There were more adults than children in the Sunday School. They were much overcome as they told the story of their conversion. Our Saviour's words are indeed true: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all unto Me."

Yes, the poor Indians, when they saw how Jesus had loved them, felt their hearts going out in love to Him. At our farewell meeting in Victoria, five or six hundred people walked across the platform to bid us good-bye, as we were on our way to Alaska. Among them were thirty or forty of these Indians, who wept as they did so. At Nanaimo, in an Indian village of several hundred, we found a church and many houses, built by Christians, in which everything was clean and comfortable; but in the same village we saw the wretched abodes of the heathen Indians. In buildings made of rough boards lived from fifty to two hundred. As there is no chimney, all the smoke finds its way through the roof and sides. When the Indians fill them at night, and fires are burning in different parts of them, they look like dark caverns filled with evil spirits. The first Indian who was converted in this village took us out fishing in his canoe, dug out of a log, but I was more interested in hearing the story of his conversion than in catching salmon and trout.

As you, my young friends, have been reading about these converted savages, have you been able to say, "I, too, love that same Jesus who is so dear to them"? If not, I entreat of you this very hour to make Him your friend and Saviour. He bids you come to him just as you are. He will change your heart, and make you happy in his love. Sinners, old and young, often run away from Jesus, their best friend, though He bids them come to Him, that He may make them happy here and hereafter. I pray that you may not be among that number.

A LION TALK.

AN INCIDENT OF THE HOP-YARDS.

We were tired, very tired. We had been out all day visiting the hop-pickers in Herefordshire, and, having reached the small country railway station an hour before the arrival of our train, we proceeded to make ourselves as comfortable as the bare bench of the waiting-room would permit.

Presently we were disturbed by the entrance of two little girls, one of whom commenced to read every bill upon the walls. "Birmingham Onion Fair." She read about the fair, the fare to the fair, and the whole affair, down to the printer's name at the bottom. Suddenly her eye caught a brightly coloured advertisement, representing a lion in a net, and a little mouse nibbling at his bonds to set him free.

"Look!" said she to her companion, "that is what we have in our primer at school. Don't you know—the mouse that got the lion out?"

My friend, somewhat rested, was wide awake, and watching for an opportunity of saying something about Jesus to this intelligent little soul.

"See," she exclaimed, "he will soon escape."

"Mind he does not have you for his first meal."

"O-o-o-o-h!" said the child, with a shudder.

"I hope he will take the mouse back to Africa with him, when he is restored to freedom," interposed my friend; adding, "What would you think of a lion coming all the way from his distant land to die for mice, that he might set them free?"

The little girl looked astonished.

"I know a lion who did that. Jesus, 'the Lion of the Tribe of Judah (Rev. v. 5), died for us mice, to deliver us from the net of Satan, who had us captive at his will. We are only as mice compared to Him; yet He came to free us. And ought not the freed mice to thank the good Lion?"

"Yes, sir."

"Of course they ought; and we ought to thus thank Jesus and love Him. But suppose this lion was gentle, and loving, and tame, and was willing to walk with us day by day, always at our side, ready to protect us. Should I be afraid to go through the dark woods, if I had such a lion with me? Oh, woe be to any robbers who might happen to be waiting! Now, that is just my experience this evening. I am not afraid. Do you know why?"

"'Cos you've got Jesus with you."

"Yes, dear, that is it. So I can say, as David did, 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me'" (Ps. xxiii. 4).

Then, as a further illustration, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego were instanced. The Lord was with them, so that the king, looking into the fiery furnace saw four men, and said "The fourth is like the Son of God" (Dan. iii. 25). The Lion was with them.

The lion is the king of all beasts of prey. "What is stronger than a lion?" (Judges xiv. 18). "A lion which is strongest among beasts" (Prov. xxx. 30). Thank God, even he who goeth about "as a roaring lion," seeking whom he may devour, has his master here (1 Peter v. 8).

"Why do you think Jesus is called a lion?"

The child thought, and looked very serious, as it was explained that He was coming back with fierceness and terror to rend his enemies. He came first as a lamb to be a sacrifice and to put away sin; but He is coming again, "taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel" (2 Thess. i. 8). Then He will be as a lion.

The dear girl seemed frightened at the thought.

"You like to think of Jesus as the gentle lamb, don't you? Well, trust in Him, and let Him set you free, then have Him to walk with you as your protector, and you will not need to fear his coming again."

The train was due, so our lion talk had to end.

Was my friend right in speaking of Jesus coming in terror and power? Yes; for if "the fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion; whoso provoketh Him to anger sinneth against his own soul" (Prov. xx. 2), much more is it true of the King of kings, who has said, "Consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver" (Psalm l. 22).

William Luff.

BALAAM.

He knew the right, but did the wrong,
  As thousands have beside;
An enemy to God he lived,
  An enemy he died.

Yet what a learned man he was!
  How widely was he known!
Princes to do him honour came
  With presents from the throne.

Yet, though so rich, still, still he craved
  For more of worldly store;
The wages of unrighteousness
  He fondly gloated o'er.

For gold, alas! he even sought
  To curse God's chosen race,
And would, had not God made his tongue
  That very people bless!

And so he lived, and so he died,*
  God's enemies among,
The fate of one who knew the right,
  But still would do the wrong.

A lesson, surely, for us all
  To ever keep in sight,
That we may always shun the wrong,
  And always do the right.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Scarborough and Filey, till September 16; Mr. Josiah Spiers, Dover.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Sept. 16, Mark xv. 33—47; Monday, Sept. 17, Mark xvi. 1—20; Tuesday, Sept. 18, Ezekiel iii. 1—9; Wednesday, Sept. 19, Ezekiel iii. 10—21; Thursday, Sept. 20, Ezekiel ix. 1—11; Friday, Sept. 21, Ezekiel xv. 1—8; Saturday, Sept. 22, Ezekiel xviii. 20—32.

THE ANIMALS' INSTITUTE, which was only opened this season for the reception of patients, has more than verified its founder's fears that much suffering amongst the animals of the poorer classes existed without proper surgical treatment. The gratuitous advice daily given is taken full advantage of, and the hospital accommodation for the worst cases is now too small to admit the great number of horses, dogs, cats, and other animals requiring treatment.

Ceylon's Great Need.

During a compulsory stay in England I have been reading with intense interest of the work of zenana missionaries among our Indian sisters. A long residence in India enables me to realise very deeply the need which exists for such efforts, and to thank God with all my heart for those who have been willing to go forth, and to bear the light of Gospel truth into homes where the darkness of heathenism and Mohammedanism has hitherto reigned. I have seen the labourers at work, I have gone with them to several zenanas, that I might be able to judge from experience of what they were doing, and, myself a missionary, I can bear the highest testimony to their zeal and devotion.

But while I thank God for what is being effected in India, I cannot help looking away from that vast continent to the little island which almost seems to touch its southern coast, and grieving over the fact that no society for sending forth female missionaries has included it in the sphere of its operations. One or two ladies unconnected with missionary societies have at various times worked in Ceylon, some missionaries' wives have laboured and are labouring faithfully to win women and girls for Christ, and some admirable female boarding schools exist; but the zenana societies have left it out of their sphere. My object in now writing to you is to interest your readers in the island of so much and, if it may be, to lead some to consecrate themselves to the Lord's service in this special field. Ceylon, I believe, offers opportunities for reaching the women of the higher, as well as the middle and lower, classes, such as are found in hardly any part of India. The zenana system, which excludes females from all contact with the outer world, has hardly any place there. No English lady would find the least difficulty in obtaining access to the homes of the best Singhalese families, both in the Kandian highlands and in the low country; and no one possessing the judgment and true wisdom which should ever characterise the missionary will fail, in time, in winning their confidence and friendship. I have myself found very few who were not willing to give a patient hearing to the Gospel; and even in cases of seeming rejection their gentleness has invited further effort, and made us long to be able in repeated visits to tell the same blessed story of love, and to point constantly to the crucified Lord, till the timid eye should be raised in faith to Him, and the burden of heathenism and sin should fall from the hitherto hopeless heart.

I recall one bright, intelligent young matron, clothed in garments of spotless white, a gold braiding running through the cloth telling of her position as one above the ordinary class, who, with her maidens, came to see and speak with me as, perhaps, the first English lady who had visited her village. Her face was full of thoughtful brightness, and we longed that the Lord might touch her heart. She listened attentively, and then said, "Do not let the lady be angry, but my fathers and my fathers' fathers have all been Buddhists. I cannot leave them. The religion which has been theirs is all I need." Our work never again took us in the direction of her village, but how much might repeated visits have done, had they been possible, in removing her objections and leading her to rest in Christ?

Another I remember so well,

THE WIFE OF A KANDIAN CHIEF,

one of the sweetest-looking young women I have ever seen, whom we visited in her village home far in the deep jungles of the North Western Province. She had some time previously submitted to the rite of baptism at the hands of one of the chaplains, though with very little knowledge of Christianity, in order that she might be married according to the service of the Church of England. A professing Christian, she was to all intents and purposes a Buddhist, for she had never been shown the falsity of that system; and while belonging outwardly to the Church, she had never learned to see her own sinfulness, or the preciousness of the Saviour who had loved her, and given Himself for her. With her there was the freest opportunity for converse, and in such cases the frequent visits of a lady in whom the love of Christ was strong, and the desire of saving souls a constraining principle, would be of the greatest value.

From almost any of the important towns as a centre it would be possible for ladies to make excursions on horseback into wide districts thickly populated. There would be little difficulty in obtaining shelter and food at the homes of the village headmen, or inferior chiefs; and the village amblam, a covered shed for travellers, would afford temporary shelter, and an opportunity of speaking to many persons, when a longer stay in the village was not possible.

SCHOOLS FOR GIRLS,

both in the towns and villages, would be thoroughly practicable if means and suitable teachers could be provided; a good many even now are in operation. Indeed, the openings for usefulness are almost without limit.

One of our greatest needs in Ceylon just now is a school for high-caste girls of Kandian families, the daughters of the old aristocracy of the island. It is a sore blank that none such exists, and our young men trained in the Church Missionary Society's Kandy College, after making, perhaps, a profession of Christianity, end by marrying heathen wives, for there are no others for them. My memory recalls two, at least, of such sad falls, and in both cases the young men were not mere professors, but, we believe, humble followers of the Saviour. Shall we blame them? Let us rather see that we place no stumblingblocks in the paths of God's little ones; and oh! that He may touch some heart among those who read this appeal to go out for Him, and rescue those He would save! Will there be serious hardships to encounter? does anyone ask. I say emphatically, No. The school would require to be in Kandy, and the climate there is certainly preferable to foggy London, temperature varying from 75 to 85 degrees, the scenery an Eden, and the people willing, waiting, eager.

I VERY EARNESTLY PLEAD FOR VOLUNTEERS

for this important and blessed work; not merely ladies willing to go, but able and willing to go at their own charges. The circumstances require that those willing to undertake it should lay not only themselves, but also their gold and silver on the Lord's altar. The Church Missionary Society recognises the need, but feels that it is unable to provide either the agents or the means for their support. It replies to every appeal, but the claims of the larger and apparently more important fields are so urgent that Ceylon cannot at present be reinforced, or the sphere of the Society's operations there be extended. We feel the force of the answer, but at the same time we see, as even the Church Missionary Society Committee cannot see, the openings which exist in our little island, and the imperative necessity that missionaries full of faith, and love, and power, should enter in before the door closes, as at any time it may do, or before others enter in whose teaching would not be calculated to lead souls to Christ. Let me say we appeal only for those who have learned the preciousnes of forgiveness of sin by having themselves experienced it; only for those who have thorough confidence in the power of the simple Gospel of Christ to reach and quicken dead souls; and those who are determined to know nothing among those to whom they go save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

If any such among your readers feel drawn towards the blessed work I have described, it will give us great pleasure to on any point concerning which they may desire it. And should any volunteer to go forth, it will be a joy to my dear husband, who has been working among the Cinghalese since 1857, to help in the acquisition of the language, and in any other necessary preparation for the undertaking. Need I add that good general health and ability to bear a certain amount of roughing and fatigue are essentials in all who go forth as missionaries? Where these are combined with the higher qualifications already mentioned, there is every prospect of labour both useful and happy, bringing glory to our great Master, and rich blessing to the souls of many of the women of Ceylon. I know that former appeals for help in various parts of the world, which have been published in your pages, have met with hearty response. If it be God's will, I trust that this may produce similar fruits, and that the answer to our many prayers may in this way be granted.

A GOOD STOCK.

In some deeply interesting recollections of the church of her youthful days, near Rochester, N.Y., Miss Frances E. Willard gives these particulars as to her ancestors:—

In 1829, my father, then a handsome, popular young man, while he was noted for good morals, had never manifested any interest in Christianity. He went to the neighbourhood prayer-meeting in the "stone school-house," now demolished, and rising in his place asked for prayers. So set back were the people that for a moment nobody moved, whereupon he fell on his knees in the midst of the group and poured out his soul with strong crying and tears. This was in the midst of harvest time, that busiest season of the Western New York farmer, but so great was the resulting interest that a "reformation" broke out involving more than thirty heads of families. Almost without exception the older households of Willard and Hill, my father's and mother's kindred, were already members, and from that time on, the younger were strong adherents of the faith. The neighbourhood was of the best; a profane word would have marked a man as "below the pauper line," in brain and social status. A drunkard was unknown. My father's only brother, Zophar Willard, now seventy-nine years old, for sixty years a leader in the community, assures me that he never saw a drunken man until he was seventeen, and he was an importation.

My uncle says of grandfather Hill:—"He was a wonderful exhorter, and, when imbued with the Holy Spirit, the tears would run down his cheeks and a holy unction inspired his very tones. He was never satisfied except when thus broken down by the Spirit. Once he felt that he was not as helpful in the meetings as he wished to be and he went home. That night the power of God rested so mightily upon him that his whole household, wife and eight children, joined with him in a most memorable prayer-meeting. He was a marvellous man in prayer. His wife was one of the Lord's saints. She was goodness itself, and a mighty power in talking." She was so spiritually minded that she would talk out loud to herself about God's beautiful world, for she heard his breathing in all his works. Her son James was herself over again, and his daughter Morilla, was so spiritual that she didn't seem to belong to this world, and when she died she was perfectly aware of the presence of angels in her room.

THE NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

(Concluding Notes).

In closing the Bible Conference, on August 10, Mr. Moody said he did not wish to make any comparisons with previous convocations; eternity alone would tell just what had been accomplished. The gathering has, as usual, been happy in the utter obliteration of all denominational lines, and in the exaltation of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Never, even on these hills, has the thought been brought out more beautifully or forcibly that there is but one Book, the Bible, than during the unfolding of its blessed truth, in the realm of the Holy Spirit, for the past ten days. As one speaker said, While we diverge again into our respective paths, not to converge again until they meet at the Golden City, the fruits of this Conference of Christians will be witnessed around the globe. The stimulation to renewed growth and development in Christian activity has been most marked. There has been a leading up of Bible study, prayer, songs, and conferences, towards missionary work, which will fructify in years to come.

The proceedings have assumed an intensely practical form. It has not been simply the hearing of the thrilling stories of the scarred veterans, which are so frequently accepted with sympathising tears; but individuals have cheerfully given themselves for the evangelisation of foreign countries, and funds have been freely contributed for this purpose. The example of college students at their recent gathering of establishing living links with heathendom has been supplemented by Mr. Moody and his co-labourers. At one of the closing sessions twenty-five men and women came forward as volunteers for the foreign field, and others will follow. After Mr. Charles W. Shelton had graphically pictured the religious impoverishment of the poor Indians on the western frontier, Mr. Moody asked how much it would cost to erect neat mission houses. When told they would cost 700 dollars each, he promptly called for contributions, and in a few minutes 2500 dollars were pledged. When the cry came over from Japan through Sho Nemoto, a native of that country, who is soon to return to labour for the Master, Mr. Moody stated that last year he had sent out four Christian young men to teach in the Government schools, and he was soon provided with funds to continue the good work. This excellent work went on until about 10,000 dollars had been contributed to this purpose. One young woman not having any money, took off her necklace and offered that as a sacrifice, for which someone promptly gave 50 dollars to be put in the Lord's treasury.

The unselfishness of Mr. Moody, and his earnest desire to spread the Gospel, are most noticeable at these gatherings. Many would think that when such a large number of Christian people are here, he would take occasion to promulgate the needs of the great educational institution he has founded on these beautiful hills. Not so. Two or three times, out of gratitude and thanksgiving for all that he had been doing for them, the people tried to raise a fund to aid the work; but, in his brusque manner, he turned the funds into other channels, saying, "O friends! I want you much more than your money."

Not only spiritually, but financially, the visit of Mr. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, to this country, has been a marked success. The Lord has opened the way to an enlargement of his work. He has impressed all by his deep spirituality. Indeed, he seems to live in an atmosphere of prayer, and takes every opportunity to reach individuals. He held, at the close of the sessions, a meeting in the dining-hall for those who had been the efficient helpers during the Convention, which was much appreciated. The help has been mainly from Mount Hermon and the Seminary. The young women from the latter have "served tables," and thus have done the Master's work. While Mr. Taylor did not tell how much money had been placed at his disposal, he intimated that the work would be greatly extended as soon as he could go to China and prepare the way. After speaking at a few places in this part of the country, he will proceed to China, expecting to return to America again in a few months.

His companion, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, has won all hearts by his simplicity and modesty, his consecration of talents and time to the Lord. His familiarity with the Bible, apt quotation, and tender earnestness have impressed all. He has had many opportunities, on hillside or lawn, in parlour or hall, to meet little groups, with Bible in hand, and has most delightfully opened the Scriptures till all hearts burned. Mr. Radcliffe is anxious to do something before his return to England towards the establishment of "Strangers' Rsets" in Montreal, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. These temporary Homes, with their relays of consecrated men and women, are important links which are lacking in American ports, and it is sincerely to be hoped that his prayer may be answered in this matter.

Evidences have constantly been given of the great power for good which has resulted from previous Conventions in the anointing of workers for service. Mr. J. T. Swift wrote from Nikko, Japan, that they were going to start a summer school in that country, and said: "The blessing I received last year at Northfield abides with me, for it was the gift of the living water." Rev. George Constantine, from Greece, told in the Convention that, while he had preached for seventeen years as a missionary, he had received no fruit for his labours, until he came to Northfield some years ago, and received the enduement of the Holy Spirit, upon which subject Mr. Moody preached with such moving power.

There was a culmination of blessing during the closing three days of the Conference. Mr. Moody discussed in turn the Gospels of Luke and John, ending very appropriately with the Book of Acts. After explaining the Book, and that what was needed was witnesses for Christ, he went on to speak about the Spirit's power, and said: "There are many ministers who would be in an awful position if they should have Pentecost in their churches, and men should cry out, 'What must I do to be saved?' It would be a great pity if they should have to pull out a manuscript to tell them." Touching upon the subject of obeying the commands of the Holy Spirit, he said, "Get your sickle, and go about it, that is all. There are business men here who, if they would go back into their town and preach Jesus Christ, would do more than any five ministers I ever knew. Laymen are dwarfed and crippled, because they have the idea that a man has to go through a theological seminary before he can preach.

Preliminary to the closing session at Stone Hall, Christ's Sermon on the Mount was impressively read on Round Top, at the back of Mr. Moody's house, by Professor Hawes, of Louisville, while Rev. George Constantine offered the Lord's Prayer in Greek, the language in which it was originally written. A great concourse attended the final services, when the yearning cry again went up for unction from on high, and several very touching addresses were given. Brief remarks were made by Mr. Moody, Mr. George B. Studd, of London; Mr. Sidney Bridgman, of Northampton; Dr. H. L. Wayland, of Philadelphia; Mrs. S. B. Capron, from Madura, India; Rev. George Constantine, of Smyrna; Mr. H. M. Moore and Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston; and Miss M. Morgan, of Persia. Thus closed one of the most soul-uplifting seasons ever experienced on these Northfield hills.

We favoured ones who remained after the Convention meetings had a grand good time. After Sunday morning devotions, Mr. Moody's "church waggon," made for the express purpose of conveying those who live at a distance, and also "the lame, the halt, and the blind" to church, carried us, notwithstanding the deluging teardrops from the clouds, to the Congregational Church, to listen to a carefully written sermon. The most impressive feature of the service was the singing by Messrs. Sankey, Towner, and Stebbins. Our hearts were touched by the beautiful music rendered by these consecrated voices. We truly felt that it was good for us to be there.

In the evening about fifty of us gathered together around our cheerful cosy corner, in Marquand Hall, and spent a happy hour in singing and prayer to God, who had brought us together as one family on that cold and stormy evening. During the meeting there was a very impressive silence; then a sweet old Quakeress of eighty-three years knelt by her chair and offered prayer. And such a prayer! So simple, so childlike, and so beautiful! We shall never forget it. Apart from all at the Convention, this dear little woman, in her quiet Quaker dress, and with her winning ways, stood as the queen. She never will be forgotten by the many who considered it a great treat to chat with her.

GOSPEL TENT, UPPER CLAPTON.

This work, which, under the superintendence of the Upper Clapton Local Evangelistic Mission, was started some six years ago, has been continued during the summer months of this year, and has been greatly blessed to many souls. Gospel services have been held each Sunday afternoon and evening, and nearly every week-night. In addition, there have been special meetings for believers and Christian workers; Gospel-temperance services, meetings for women, and early morning prayer-meetings.

The friends conducting the mission have been most ably supported by Revs. F. B. Meyer, H. O. Mackey, Mr. Henry Varley, Mr. J. S. Harrison, Mr. E. P. Telford, Mr. William Noble, Mr. George Nokes, "Gipsy" Smith, and other evangelists whose earnest and powerful addresses have been blessed by God to the salvation of many precious souls.

At the close of the Tent Mission, a special service of praise and thanksgiving was held, when many publicly avowed their love to Christ, and bore testimony to the great blessing received through the medium of these special services.

FULHAM.—On Friday last, Mr. Henry Varley spoke to a crowded meeting of men at the Fulham Congregational Lecture Hall, on "The Curse of Manhood." The meeting was under the auspices of the Fulham Y.M.C.A. The members of the Association made good use of the occasion, in bringing under the notice of those present the importance of attending Bible-classes, and everything was done to get the men interested in the work.

CHINESE BLIND.—Mr. and Mrs Murray, of Peking, settled down to the work before them on returning to China last autumn, and soon all the beneficent machinery in connection with the Mission to Chinese Blind was in full swing. Mrs. Murray's heart was gladdened by an early opening for work among the women. "If only the women could be won for the Gospel," says Mr. Murray, "they would be a power; it is they who keep up the idolatry of China." The most recent offer of help comes from a blind woman in England, who urges that she should be sent out to teach the blind Chinese. Perhaps the most cheering news of all is the information that a missionary in South China is now teaching a blind man to read St. Matthew's Gospel with the help only of Mr. Murray's primer. If this can be done, there is every hope that "this thing will grow." The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mr. William J. Slowan, 224, West George-street, Glasgow.

CAFES OR COFFEE-BAR, WHICH?

By the Hon. LADY BEAUCHAMP.

WHILE much is being done for our 30,000 deep-sea fishermen, in order to save them from the evils of intoxicating drink, it may be well for us to inquire if any necessity exists for similar effort being made for our 300,000 merchant seamen, much further away from their homes, and the greater part of whom are constantly frequenting foreign ports. Imagine a fellow-countryman landing in a foreign port, where the enemies of sailors know that within twenty-four hours of his setting foot on shore he will receive wages varying from £5 to £60. Therefore, before he leaves his ship, the one object is to make him helplessly drunk. From that time forward the aim of these harpies is to keep him in a state of intoxication. Whichever way the poor duped fellow turns, he sees nothing but the spirit shops (which go by the name of "cafés"). Sailor-like, as soon as he has his money, before he does anything he must treat his "chum" and friends, receiving in return the same marks of friendship, the only rendezvous for such friendly (?) acts being the so-called café, where coffee is rarely seen, and, if ever called for, is invariably handed over the counter with the "fire-water" as its accompaniment.

As many readers of THE CHRISTIAN have taken an interest in our sailors at Havre, it may be well for them to know that in that port (numbering over 110,000 inhabitants), where many hundreds of British seamen are paid off, and also many thousands continually trading, there is not such a place as a Temperance bar. It being a common saying among the French people, "it is only the wicked who drink water," we cannot expect our foreign neighbours to take the initiative in seeking to remedy this evil: besides which, ought not Christian England to show the same practical sympathy for her merchant seamen as her fishermen, whose condition has been so much improved through counteracting the evils of drink?

An English barmaid, who was engaged in a French café in order to decoy our seamen, was visited a short time since, and said that the barmaids were engaged with the understanding that the sole object was to make the sailors drink as much as possible, and to urge them, even when drunk, to continue treating their chums, and also to take drink themselves from the poor fellows: in fact, anything to get money out of their victims, however drunk they made them. Well might the proprietor of one of the cafés most frequented by sailors say that "it was a foul business, both for himself and the sailors."

The question, then, that presents itself to us is, What can be done to counteract this foul business? A Home has, through God's goodness, been established to counteract the robbery and evils of the boarding of the sailors. Surely God would have us bestir ourselves to make a further effort, and fit up some place where our sailors can meet and treat their "chums," without flinging away their hard-earned wages, and becoming a disgrace to our so-called Christian England. When the Sailors' Home was started three years ago, it was much wished to place a temperance bar under the same roof, but it was impossible to do so without incurring debt, the income proving only just sufficient to cover current expenses. After four years' experience in this place, and waiting on God for guidance, all are agreed that the addition of a temperance bar will greatly help the work among the sailors. It has therefore been decided that a room adjoining the game-room should be opened at once, where coffee and non-intoxicating drinks can be had from eight a.m. till midnight. If kept open for all these hours, it is hoped that many from outside the Home may be induced to come in, so as to make it a temperance rendezvous for hundreds of sailors.

The prayers of your readers are asked that the needful means may be sent; also that a Christian woman may be led to offer as barmaid, and that this first effort in the cause of temperance in the heart of such a stronghold of drink may redound to the glory of God, through the salvation of many of the sailors, not only from the condemnation of sin, but the power of it.

AMONG THE KABYLES.

AMID much that tends to discourage the Christian missionary in Mohammedan lands, there are not wanting at present tokens of a harvest which will yet be reaped among the Kabyles inhabiting Algeria. I endeavour to make short voyages, from time to time, to the scattered villages of Kabylia, besides doing work in the locality where I reside. Recently, when on a visit to a missionary brother, I had occasion to pass the night in a Kabyle village, where, close to the mosque (place of prayer), I had quite a large gathering of men listening to the Gospel story; possibly for the first time in their lives. After speaking for more than an hour and feeling exhausted, I retired into the place of assembly adjoining the mosque, and there, in semi-darkness and partial silence, knelt down and poured out my heart to God in prayer, in my own language; this gave the natives matter for conversation, as they think that it is only Mohammedans who pray.

On continuing my journey on the following day I passed through another village, in which there is a large native college, called "Thimâmerth," where Kabyle youths reside while learning to read the Koran, the Bible of the Mohammedan. A Kabyle of the village having conducted me to one of the entrances to this seat of Mohammedan learning, I sat down awaiting the arrival of the principal of the college. As he came forward, there was nothing remarkable about him to distinguish him from the Kabyles around, though he was the Cheikh of the college. Two other Kabyles sat down beside him, the one a youth, and the other an elderly man. To these and to the Kabyle who accompanied me thither, I read a portion of the Gospel and spoke to them plainly but lovingly of the errors of the Koran, making some comparisons between the teaching of the Saviour and that of their prophet. I was listened to with attention, the youth alone venturing to maintain the infallibility of the Koran, but soon he gave place to me and listened without further interruption. When I observed that none of their good works, prayers, fasting, &c., could remove sin, the old man broke in, "Prayers do not take away sin!" This was said in such a thoughtful, inquiring tone that I was struck with his interest in the subject. I went on to show that repentance, faith in Jesus, is the divinely appointed way.

Giving the Principal of the college a portion of the Scriptures in Arabic, I rose to take leave of them, but was accompanied by these men out of the building and through part of the village. On our way the old man said to me, "I would like you to come and stay here." On my asking why, he replied, "Because that which you have just been telling us is good words." How grateful I felt for these few simple words from that old man, spoken in the presence of the principal of that Mohammedan college, and with such earnest simplicity! Fain would I respond to the invitation, but for the present that seems impossible. The youth who had endeavoured to contradict me, then asked me to come and eat with him, but I was obliged to refuse with thanks and hurry on my way.

Yesterday, our market day here at Akbou, I had several precious moments of speaking of Christ. Four youths about eighteen years of age came on to the verandah, and sat down a little to avoid the rain then falling. I went to them and found that three of them were students (tolba) from the very same college I had visited. The fourth youth was from Moknea, where one of our brethren with his wife is witnessing for the Lord Jesus Christ. They could all read Arabic. In fact, the three students carried with them portions of the Koran. I gave them each a copy of one of the Gospels, and sat down beside them and read to them from John's Gospel in Kabyle, making remarks as I went along. Soon we had a considerable number of Kabyles around us listening to the truth. I was deeply touched in looking upon the three students specially, to see how they listened with evident interest to statements made in reference to Christ and his teachings, as compared with the teaching of their prophet.

Having had a very intelligent young Kabyle helping me recently with the language (he himself being a teacher of Arabic in Algiers), I was deeply interested in what took place the other day when talking over the question of the judgment of the sinner, &c., which happened to come in for remark in the course of our study. Turning to me he said, "J'aimerais connaître comment devenir un Chrétien." (I would like to know how to become a Christian.) This led to my telling him "what he must do to be saved;" and never before did I feel so great the need of giving the simplest and most correct statement of the way of salvation. The young man remarked that since he had commenced to mix with Europeans he had laid aside his religion, had neglected prayer and fasting, although he was himself a marabout, and knew what the Koran enjoins. He felt he must get pardon or do something to atone for his sins, and he added that if salvation could be had through Moses, or Mohammed, or Jesus, he must have it through one or other. He is still visiting me, but is yet in darkness, deeply exercised in mind.

WORK AND WORKERS.

THE Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, was the scene on Friday evening of another of those happy monthly gatherings where workers and sympathisers meet in happy fellowship. The chair was taken by Mr. Edward K. Hett. Mr. Isaacs, in giving a brief statement of the work, said several sailors had recently been led to accept Christ, and are now bearing the Gospel seed to other lands. It was stated that £400 is annually required to defray the expenses of the work. Mr. Isaacs made an earnest appeal for additional workers, especially amongst the lads.

Lieut. Mandeville gave an address on Revival according to Scripture. All present must have enjoyed his instructive and stirring words, which were with power. Many precious thoughts were gathered.

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.—An extremely graphic and interesting sketch of hospital work among the fishermen of the North Sea, from the pen of Mr. James Runciman, appears in "A1" of Sept. 8.

ALBERT HALL, VENTNOR.—Since the opening, in May last, we have had abundant supplies of preachers. The congregations have steadily increased, and we have heard of some remarkable cases of soul saving. Now that the summer is drawing to a close, and our helpers must be in London during the winter, we find it difficult to get local help. I feel that while the attendance keeps up, I dare not close it without an effort to get preachers, as the rent is guaranteed to me for another six months, if I can keep it on; or I shall be pleased to relinquish it for Gospel work to any other person willing to take the entire responsibility. WILLIAM CATLIN.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. P. H. Gosse.

The recent conference of fruit-growers ought to have a useful outcome in the cheapening of fruit as a staple element of food, thus leading to greater simplicity and healthiness of life. Mr. Rawson, one of the members of the conference, had the courage to protest against "the practice of placing the best fruit on the top of the basket." That is a practice not confined, we fear, to one branch of industry, and it would be to their credit if traders of all sorts accepted and acted on Mr. Rawson's Christian advice.

A lady correspondent in Manchester, writing to us with respect to an excellent sermon for children she recently heard from Rev. Mr. McCaull, Presbyterian minister, Birmingham, makes these sensible remarks:—

> The custom of giving specially prepared food to the little ones is one that ought to be more generally followed. It is small wonder that children so often wander away from places of worship, for the instances are very rare when the minister provides any instruction which can interest as well as be understood by the children.

Our correspondent has hit on a very serious and a very prevalent blemish in the conduct of church services. Of late we have been making special efforts to discover pastors who supply some crumbs for the little folk at either of their Sunday services; but our search has been comparatively a failure. We heard of one excellent Baptist pastor, in a town on the South Coast, who was in the habit of giving a sermonette for the children at the morning service, but gave it up in consequence of remonstrances from some of the older hearers. Such a policy we can only regard as suicidal for any church.

We observe a correspondent of one of the Methodist papers suggests that a suitable address from the Annual Conference should be sent to the children of all Wesleyan families. The idea is a wise and commendable one, if the address does not degenerate too far into a denominational plea. All the other sections of the Christian Church might well take the hint. Protestants need to learn a lesson from Romanists in the matter of caring for and catering for the young.

There are no people nearer perdition, none whose repentance and salvation, humanly speaking, are more hopeless, than unconverted "members of congregations"—men and women who from childhood have been accustomed to attend a place of worship, to sing hymns, and hear prayers offered and sermons preached, without obeying the Gospel. The most hopeless of all are the children of Christian parents, and the more soundly evangelical the preaching they have listened to, the worse their condition. They know the truth and do it not. The more they have known and rejected the less likely are they to repent. We sometimes think that it would be a good thing if all the churches and chapels which have settled congregations and are not distinctly evangelistic were shut up for a year; that their ministers and members went everywhere preaching the word; and that the Gospel-hardened habitual hearers were left to ponder on what they had listened to so long without effect.

The Annual Address of the Wesleyan Conference is a very hopeful and practical document. It expresses thankfulness at the increase of the spirit of unity among the branches of the Methodist family, and urges all the members to close up the ranks in opposition to doctrinal error and moral evil. A special plea is put in for greater attention to public duty as Christian citizens:—

> We urge you to put Christianity into your service of the commonwealth. If the Government and institutions of the country are not to fall into the hands of mere politicians, then earnest Christians must not shrink from citizen duties. We shall always have among us various forms of political opinion; but in all their variety they may be held with brotherly affection and confidence. That is but a feeble Christian life, not worthy of the name, which can only be preserved by avoiding the toils, the responsibilities, and conflicts of the national life of our time. We beseech you to cultivate the character which will make you a conscience wherever you are; so that you will bravely denounce wrong from the magistrates' bench, in the directors' meeting, or in the senate; which will recognise that the greatest curse of our time, of all times, is sin, and that against this the chief fight must be. To maintain the "righteousness" which "exalteth a nation," and to prevent the exaltation of "vile men," Methodists of every political colour should be as the heart of one man.

That is the right kind of note to strike in these democratic days, when the danger is that power may pass into the hands of the ignorant, the self-seeking, or the unprincipled.

The number of male prisoners annually discharged from the four London gaols is stated to be about twenty thousand. Of these no less than three-fourths attend the breakfasts of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, provided each morning outside the prison walls, one in every five being also persuaded to take the pledge. At Manchester the Prison Gate Mission has dealt with nearly nine thousand discharged prisoners in less than twelve months, very many of these also being induced to take the pledge. It is mainly to Christian and philanthropic agencies such as these that the immense decrease of the criminal population during the last fifty years—from fifty thousand to a little more than seven thousand—is to be attributed. The modern method is thus better than the old. Christian love and sympathy are mightier than stringent penal laws. The Gospel has proved more effectual than the gallows in checking the growth of the criminal element.

In this connection it is interesting to note that in America, where the increase of crime is creating some anxiety, it is becoming more and more realised that the method of dealing with discharged prisoners so successfully adopted by Mr. Hatton, Mrs. Meredith, and others, is the best mode of combating the evil. The body must be reached through the soul: "The nearest way to any man's heart is round by heaven."

No class of the community deserves greater sympathy than poor "gentlewomen." Reared very often amidst the refinements and luxuries of life, they are ill fitted to face the rude blasts of misfortune when these come and sweep away their means of support. Their position is all the more trying, because they are disinclined to make their needs vocal, and prefer to suffer in silence rather than expose their circumstances to the public gaze. We learn, therefore, with pleasure that "a National Society for Working Gentlewomen" has been set on foot. While encouraging providence and independence on the part of its protégées, an effort will be made to provide help where it is urgently needed. Those who are willing to further the interests of the Society should communicate with Mrs. Joseph King, 44, Well-walk, Hampstead, N.W.

Mr. John William Murphy, till recently Baptist minister at Plumstead, Kent, but obliged, like so many others, to seek colonial air on the ground of health, has accepted the post of State school teacher at Broadmarch, near Brighton, Tasmania. But there is a singular proviso—he is forbidden by the Government to preach within five miles of his school! This sounds strange to English ears, and more allied to the legislation of 200 years ago than to the present enlightened age. We imagine such a fact cannot be generally known in this country, or it would be more generally condemned by the public Press.

The Pope's Encyclical to the Armenians is a remarkable document, considered from any point of view, but it is scarcely likely to have the result which Rome desires. A large section of the Armenian people, the educated portion in fact, incline towards union with a Protestant Church, while, it is said, only the uneducated classes are in favour of going over to Rome. It is therefore probable that the two sections may separate, one going towards the light and the other towards the darkness.

There are few social problems of the present day which possess greater interest than does that of over-population. While the manufactures of England remain stationary, if, indeed, they are not decreasing, the population is rapidly growing. Yet the problem is not one difficult of solution, if only it could be met and dealt with in a practical manner, and in a Christian spirit. If the population of Great Britain is in many centres and districts congested, and the idea of migration is deemed impracticable, there are immense tracts of country elsewhere within her dominions almost entirely unoccupied. In these days of national wealth, and of private accumulation, it ought not to be hard to organise a system of emigration to provide for the deserving poor who go to the wall in the bitter competition in these islands. A few Christian colonies of carefully selected emigrants might be founded, so as to give emigration a fair trial, and that such a trial would be successful we do not doubt. Sooner or later the matter will have to be dealt with, whether we like it or not.

The light of publicity is converging in a wonderful way on the central parts of the "Dark Continent." The question of the African slave trade is receiving such widespread attention among those European nations territorially interested, that we may hope soon to see Africa's "open sore" healed to a great extent. The serious conflict between missionaries and British traders, and the marauding Arabs in the Nyassa region, is a very painful incident of this struggle against human greed and oppression. But if the use of force can ever be justified, surely it is in a case of this kind, where the liberties and lives of so many defenceless natives are at stake. We must pray that the reverse which the brave little band of crusaders has lately suffered will be short-lived, and that ere long we shall hear of the dispersion of the man-stealing Arabs.

In a letter to The Times of Monday, Bishop Smythies, of the Universities Mission, seems to attribute the murder of Bishop Hannington to the influence of the Arab slave dealers. He is of opinion that the sword alone will cut this Gordian knot of social oppression and intertribal difficulty. In another letter Lieutenant Cameron intimates that the suppression of the slave trade cannot be best undertaken by traders, and hints at some project he has in hand for its accomplishment. We sincerely hope that his plans may ripen fast, and that they will be effectual towards the end so much to be desired.

Meantime, the founding of the British East African Company, which has received a Government charter, affords an element of hope. Those at the head of it are men of unimpeachable character and philanthropic aim, and their peaceful methods ought to secure for them the heartiest sympathy and support of all well-wishers of the downtrodden African. We observed, with much regret, a newspaper rumour that slaving vessels were trading on the East African coast under the French flag, in order to escape interference; the statement, however, is as yet unconfirmed.

The friends of temperance in some parts of London are bestirring themselves with a view to get their principles more strongly represented on the next School Board. As the promulgation of correct knowledge in our schools on the various aspects of the drink question is a matter of extreme importance to the community, we sincerely trust the efforts to get the right sort of men elected on the Board will meet with success.

The East-end murders of the past few weeks reveal a spirit of savage brutality that is a painful commentary on our Christian civilisation. One is inclined to hope, for the credit of our human nature, that these most foul and horrible crimes are the work of some cunning lunatic. The circumstances that surround the commission of the crimes and the victims, suggest that the deadly alcohol has played its part in these dark deeds. Our drink-shops are the places where evil passions generate, where self-control is lost, and where the hand is nerved to take away a fellow-creature's life. Our supineness as a nation, in view of the daily "fruits of the traffic," is incomprehensible.

It is easier to cleanse the stream at the fountain-head than to purge the full river from its accumulated pollutions, and one of the best ways to reduce the prevailing mass of crime, misery, and degradation, is to rescue and raise the children. Some particulars of a praiseworthy experiment in this direction, known as the Stainforth-street "Free Order School"—the first of its kind—are furnished in a recent report of the Chief Inspector of Schools in the E.C. division. The class dealt with are those known as gutter children, match sellers, paper sellers, and the like. A large proportion of them belong to the criminal class. It is estimated that not more than from 5 to 10 per cent. have parents who earn their living by honest means. Many of the children are in extreme destitution, while many have been maimed and injured by ill-treatment. During the past twelve months more than four hundred have been admitted, and it was found at the annual inspection that the results compared very favourably with those obtained in higher-grade schools. It has been decided to extend operations by opening a similar school for girls of the same class, and the venture is surely deserving of every success.

From the report lately issued by the House of Lords Committee upon Poor-law relief, we gather the reassuring fact that during the last thirty years there has been a marked decrease of pauperism in London, the present average being about twenty-five per thousand. In Whitechapel, it is stated, a stricter administration of the Poor-law and the restriction of out-door relief have resulted in the reduction of the number of out-door paupers from 2588, in 1871, to only sixty-three in the present year. Such results, however, be it noted, can only be attained by charity working hand in hand with the local authorities. It is not more money that is needed so much as a greater discrimination in its application, and more care on the part of the donors in diverting it into useful, practical channels.

It further appears from this Report that the pauper District Schools are not very effective in raising the children above their inherited tendencies. But this, surely, need not cause surprise, for the herding together of children in large institutions is not the way to eliminate the pauper feeling, and remove workhouse associations. A surer, as well as a more natural and economical method of depauperising children and fitting them to take their places as self-dependent members of society is the boarding-out system, which has been found to work well wherever tried. There are already more than a hundred boarding-out committees in England and Wales, and three thousand orphan and deserted children are thus disposed of in different parts of the country.

OBITUARY.

THE HON. THOS. HOLT.

OUR readers will learn with sorrow of the somewhat sudden death of the Hon. Thos. Holt, at his residence, Halcot, Bexley, Kent, on Wednesday evening, September 5. Mr. Holt has been unwell for a long time, but was somewhat better of late, so much so that on Saturday week he went with some friends to Gravesend. On Sunday, however, he was not so well, and rather ominous signs set in. He gradually became weaker as the hours passed by, and on Wednesday evening he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. Since his return from Sydney to this country, Mr. Holt's benevolent doings in all parts of the Metropolis amongst the very poor have given him a prominent place amongst philanthropists, and his name had become a household word wherever poverty and misfortune abound.

THE EDINBURGH TOWN COUNCIL have taken a step towards the putting down of sweating in that city. They have accepted a tender for the clothing of the city police, a condition being that every article shall be made-up in the city in a properly-conducted workshop in the direct tenancy of the contractor, that the Inspector of Clothing be allowed access during the business hours to inspect the making, and that no sub-contracts be made without the Council's sanction.

THE NOVEL PESTILENCE.

THE novel pestilence is far-reaching. It is not only that French so-called realistic abominations, and the milder uncleannesses of our own writers of either sex, have to be avoided, but that the inevitable story in our religious periodicals is used to bring in, unwatched and unsuspected, teachings subversive of the truth. For example: The Sunday Magazine for the present year contains in its first six numbers a story by Dr. George Macdonald, which utterly misrepresents evangelical truth, and cannot but insidiously work mischief among the young. While the ideal characters are depicted as all that is true and generous, the author untruly and ungenerously contrasts them with evangelical ministers, whom he describes as pulpit partisans of God, preaching falsehood, and with most Christians, whom he ranks as Bibliolaters and hypocrites. He misrepresents the evangelical view of the Atonement as a device to save the soul without a new life. Four times the Atonement is mentioned only to burlesque it. Purgatory is taught in more than one passage, e.g.:—

> "The result may be a thousand years off, yet you have sent him into a hotter purgatory, and at the same time made it shorter for him."

The character of evangelical Christians is thus put in antagonism with that of God's little ones, as the author conceives them:—

> "They were God's little ones in God's world, none the less their own that they did not desire to swallow it, or thrust it in their pockets. Among poverty-stricken Christians consumed with care to keep a hold of the world and save their souls, they were as two children of the house. By living in the presence of the living one, they had become themselves his presence, dim lanterns through which his light shone steady. Who obeys—shines."
>
> "The God that many people believe in, claiming to be the religious because they believe in him, is a God not worth believing in, a God that ought not to be believed in."
>
> "I don't wonder at God's patience with the wicked, but I do wonder at his patience with the pious."
>
> "They don't know better."
>
> "How are they to know better while they are so sure about everything? I would infinitely rather believe in no God at all, than in such a God as they would have me believe in!"

The Sunday Magazine contains articles from contributors of the very class who are thus lampooned. It is a very serious question whether such are faithful to their conviction, when they allow the fruit of their pens to be the feathers of poisoned arrows.

EVIL LITERATURE.—The United States Senate has amended the Act relating to special crimes, so as to punish with £1000 fine and five years' imprisonment any person caught using the mails for the transmission of indecent books, pamphlets, letters, or postcards.

LITTLEHAMPTON.—Mr. W. G. Arnold, of London, assisted by Rev. W. H. Simms, has held eight days of services, both on the beach and in St. Saviour's Church. The services have been well attended and much appreciated. Mr. Arnold has an excellent voice for outdoor work.

APPLEDORE SAILORS' REST.—Commodious premises have been secured on the quay, and transformed into a bright and attractive Sailors' Rest. The formal opening took place last Saturday week, when addresses were given outside the building to a large crowd of seamen, fishermen, and others. Over a hundred seamen were present at tea. Rev. G. J. Hill presided over a very crowded meeting at the Rest in the evening, at which Gospel addresses were delivered, and a deep impression made upon many of the men. The opening of the Rest was followed by a week of special services, conducted by Rev. G. J. and Mrs. Hill, assisted by Mr. Cairns, the sailors' missionary, and other friends.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

AN Association for the "advancement" of science ought to lay the greatest stress on the practical applications of science: this was the just principle laid down by Sir F. Bramwell in his Presidential Address at the opening meeting of the British Association, last week. The Bath meetings will be memorable as having done much to advance the humane development of scientific research. In this respect they have been in very pleasant contrast with some earlier gatherings. A quarter of a century ago many educated Christians regarded the visit of the Association to an English city as a moral danger. Local scepticism asserted itself, and the faith once delivered to the saints was belittled. If nowadays the doctrine of evolution is regarded with suspicion, it is because of the anti-Biblical, and even atheistic, methods of its advocacy, which once prevailed. Happily, all this is becoming a thing of the past. Science is introducing a new era for the nations of the earth, because it is less used in support of rash speculations, and hasty hypotheses; is no longer taught as antagonistic to man's deepest beliefs, but as showing how all Nature's great laws may be made to subserve his material welfare.

Numerous proofs of this have been afforded at the meetings just closed. Professor Boyd Dawkins, whose language has not always been so modest, admitted, as President of the Geological Section, that for the last twenty years no additional light had been thrown on the place of man in the geological record. The meaning of this is that the dogmatic confidence of earlier days in relation to man's appearance on the earth has not been justified, and that, in spite of the unprecedented research of these years, science, by itself, cannot solve the problem of human origin.

It has been in the humanitarian aspects of science, however, that the Bath meetings have been most valuable. They have afforded evidence that the true and complete interpretation of natural laws holds out the hope of a grander and more marvellous future than man has dreamt of, and of such an intercourse and binding together of the nations as shall wondrously advance human happiness and brotherhood.

In this respect none of the topics dealt with were of more fascinating and suggestive import than that of electrical science, which has done so much to revolutionise our methods of rapid communication, as well as serve the interests of humanity in numberless ways. Mr. W. H. Preece was very happy in the opening words of his address:—

> 'Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?" were pregnant words addressed to Job unknown centuries ago. They express the first recorded idea in history of the potentiality of electricity to minister to the wants of mankind. From Job to Franklin is a long swing in the pendulum of time. It was not until that American philosopher brought down atmospheric electricity by his kite-string in 1747, and showed that we could lead it where we willed, that we were able to answer the question addressed to the ancient patriarch. Nearly another century elapsed before this mysterious power of nature was fairly conquered.

Mr. Preece led his hearers through a perfect wonderland in expatiating on the uses of this subtle agent, which no man has yet been able to explain. In closing, he said:—

> Five million people upon the globe are now dependent on the electric current for their daily bread. Scarcely a week passes without some fresh practical application of its principles, and we seem to be only on the shore of that sea of economy and beneficence which expands with every new discovery of the properties of electricity, and spreads already beyond the mental grasp of any one single worker.

Equally auspicious was the attention given to African exploration. Colonel Sir C. W. Wilson's address to the Geographical Section gave the views of the Director-General of the Ordnance Survey on the two important questions of Trade Routes, which may signally subserve missionary enterprise in Africa, and help to heal the "open sore" of that dark Continent—the inhuman slave trade. We quote his words on this latter subject:—

> The future of Africa presents many difficult problems. There is one especially—the best means of putting an end to slave-hunting and the slave trade—which is now happily attracting considerable attention. It is surely not too much to hope that the nations which have been so eager to annex African soil will remember the trite saying that "property has its duties as well as its rights," and that one of the most pressingly important of the duties imposed upon them by their action is to control the fiends in human form who, of set purpose, have laid waste some of the fairest regions of the earth, and imposed a reign of terror throughout Equatorial Africa.

An opinion was given by Sir C. Wilson as to the source of Solomon's wealth. He made Judea the bonded warehouse or transit depôt of the trade between Asia and Europe. We would, however, add that Solomon did more than make the opulence of his reign. He brought the East and West into intercourse with a land where the light of Divine manifestation was at work. He diffused the knowledge of the one true God, and thus prepared the peoples to wait for Him who was "the desire of all nations." This was part of that "eternal purpose" which runs through the ages, and which our modern associations with their mistakes and outreachings are made to serve.

What strikes one most in connection with the proceedings of the Association is the remarkable sweep of the subjects taken in hand; while the discussions, carried on for the most part in a sober and serious spirit, reveal at once the wide fields of human knowledge, and the comparative poverty of that knowledge in many directions. With all the boasted achievements and progress of modern days, our wisest and most learned men are yet, to use Newton's famous simile, like children throwing pebbles into the vast and undiscovered ocean of truth.

On Sunday morning at the Abbey the sermon was preached by the Bishop of Sydney, Dr. Barry, whose text was John viii. 12, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He contended that Christianity stamped an emphatic dignity upon knowledge; that Christianity itself was a great system of knowledge; and that those who entered into the spirit of the Gospel would rejoice at every discovery of truth. But life was greater than science, which alone could not exercise all the faculties of human nature.

ATTENDANTS at the IRISH EXHIBITION.

BY THE COUNTESS OF ABERDEEN.

MAY I bring before your readers an effort that is being made on behalf of the young women who are acting as stall attendants in the Irish Exhibition at Olympia? A number of these girls are Irish, and have never before been accustomed to a life within the walls of an exhibition; others are English, but nearly all are away from their own homes. The hours are very long, the atmosphere necessarily at times oppressive, the food dear and untempting, and the constant noise very trying. The temptations surrounding such a life need not be explained.

Up to this time no room has been provided for them, as has been done with so much success at the Manchester and the Glasgow Exhibitions, where they could find rest and quiet in spare moments, and where they could meet a friend ready to help and sympathise with their many difficulties. The Executive Council of the Irish Exhibition, having no space for such a room at their disposal, have erected a tent for the use of the stall attendants. Miss Constance Wale has kindly undertaken the charge of this tent, and will do all in her power to make it a pleasant place of retreat for the young women. The tent has been furnished, and has been provided with a stove; but, in order to make it attractive, we should be glad to have loans or gifts of interesting books, which might be lent to the girls, also newspapers, weekly illustrated periodicals, and magazines.

We are also anxious to meet another danger to which these girls are exposed. Many of them are asked to spend their Sundays in a way which is full of attractions to young girls longing for amusement, whose lives are dull and toilsome, and who have only their lodging to resort to, but these invitations are such as too often lead to ruin. It has been thought that if this need were known, many who reside within easy distance might open their houses and grounds on Sunday to the young women, who would readily appreciate such kindness. It must be added that many of the employées receive such low salaries that it would be impossible for them to pay any necessary expenses involved in such invitations, and if friends, who cannot help otherwise, would contribute towards such expenses, we should welcome their help very gladly. Much can be effected, we are sure, for the temporal and eternal welfare of these girls by this effort; and if any of your readers are disposed to help forward the movement by sending contributions, newspapers, magazines, and books, or by offering to invite the girls to their houses on Sundays, will they kindly communicate, as soon as possible, either with Miss Constance Wale, 15, Priory-road, Bedford Park, Chiswick; or with myself, at Dollis Hill, Kilburn, N.W.

The Grove Mission, Southwark, has been carried on in the hayloft of a stable for the last fifty years. The recently formed London Wesleyan Mission, at the invitation of the managers, included the Grove in the sphere of its operations in South London, and the late Rev. John Harvard was appointed to the pastoral charge, his successor being Rev. William Allen. There are now 82 members in Church fellowship, and 40 on probation, 50 in junior classes, Band of Hope, Sunday-school, with 300 scholars, &c. The old hayloft has become so dilapidated that the local authorities have insisted on its being rebuilt.

The seaside town of Broadstairs is very badly served as regards an evangelical ministry. In the Established Church, Ritualism of the most advanced type is in vogue Some correspondence on this subject has been going on in The English Churchman. One correspondent advises the Protestant Church-folk of Broadstairs to "follow the example of the Walsall people, who, when they could not persuade their vicar to abandon his popish proclivities, sturdily separated from their parish church, and built a church for themselves; they now rejoice in their own regularly ordained clergyman, with a full and complete parochial organisation, large Sunday-schools," &c.

CONGRESS AT COPENHAGEN.

THE Annual Congress of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the abolition of State Regulated Vice was begun in the Bethesda Mission Hall, Copenhagen, on Wednesday, August 29, and was continued until Saturday, September 1. The meetings were all characterised by large attendances, marked interest, and great enthusiasm.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who was on his way home from the Y.M.C.A. Conference at Stockholm, was announced to give an address to the young men of Copenhagen, at the Bethesda Mission Hall, on the Tuesday evening, preceding the Conference. Mr. Williams's address was clear, forcible, and very earnest, and was listened to with great attention by those present. The two points he specially dwelt upon, were "aim high, and keep nigh," to the Saviour, through life's journey. The hall was crowded in every part by young men, and, as Mr. Williams had the advantage of an excellent interpreter, the meeting was in every respect a great success.

The Conference commenced at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, and, after the election of the Executive for the ensuing year, an adjournment was made till two o'clock, when the inaugural public meeting was held. Professor STUART, M.P., occupied the chair, and, in opening the proceedings, expressed the pleasure he and his colleagues felt on finding themselves holding this Congress in the interesting city of Copenhagen. He hoped these meetings would kindle a permanent enthusiasm in the hearts of the people of Denmark on behalf of a cause which was so intimately linked with the social and moral progress of mankind.

His Excellency M. ROSENORN, Privy Councillor to the King, briefly spoke, and was followed by M. KRAYENBUHL, who, in an address of some length, spoke of the pleasure it gave the people of Denmark to welcome such a lady as Mrs. Butler, and to have present with them Professor Stuart. Mr. THOMASSON, of Bolton, responded in Danish to the address of welcome, and was followed by Mrs. BUTLER, who, on rising, met with a most enthusiastic and hearty reception. She spoke in a clear and unusually strong voice, and was listened to with breathless interest. She referred to the work already accomplished; dwelt upon the fact that progress was everywhere evident, and urged those present to have faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause. One matter of universal regret was the absence of M. EMILE DE LAVALEYE, through illness, from the meetings. He was to have spoken at this meeting, but his place was occupied by Mr. PEARSON, of Holland, who followed Mrs. Butler in a speech which elicited much approval. In the evening a public meeting was held, at which several addresses were given by delegates to the Congress.

The second day was devoted to the consideration of the International White Slave Traffic, which was opened by the reading of an interesting and important paper by M. FRED. BAJER, a member of the Danish Volking, and who, in closing, submitted several resolutions as the basis of an international treaty, so as to deal more effectively with the fearful traffic in human flesh.

Mr. W. A. COOTE, secretary of the National Vigilance Association, followed with a brief account of the work already accomplished in this direction by the Association with which he is connected. He referred to the fact that they had established small committees at between thirty and forty Continental ports, having special reference to this department of the Society's operations. Very recently, by letters in the Dutch papers, the Association has awakened great interest amongst the people of Holland, many of whom are now actively co-operating with the Association, in order to devise some means to effectually stop this white slave traffic. Mr. Coote closed by urging all to keep a vigilant eye on the cafés chantants in the respective countries to which they belonged, as the investigations which it had been his duty to make in various countries led him to know for certain that many unsuspecting young women are decoyed from their home and country to follow practices at these places, and are thus inevitably led to a life of prostitution.

In the afternoon the sitting was resumed, when Professor Stuart referred to the success which had attended the grand work performed by Mr. Alfred Dyer in India, and gave an account of the debate in the House of Commons, in which the Government accepted the resolution moved by Mr. Walter M'Laren.

In the evening at six there was a public meeting to hear an address from Mr. Coote, on the work performed by the National Vigilance Association in England. After explaining the many branches of work undertaken by the Association, and the success which had so far attended its operations, he urged the formation of a similar Association in Denmark. The meeting was well attended; many questions were put to the speaker, asking for further explanations in reference to various parts of the work, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to him for his address.

The same evening a pleasant and agreeable conversazione was held, which gave an opportunity for the friendly interchange of views between people of various nationalities interested in the moral welfare of the great human family.

On Friday, the business commenced at nine in the morning, and was, in all respects, the most interesting and important of all the meetings. The subject for discussion was the "Historical Sketch of the Hygienic Question in England," and was opened in a masterly speech by Professor Stuart, bristling with facts and figures of a most convincing kind.

In the evening a meeting was held in the large hall, at which there were about 1000 persons present, principally men. Mrs. Butler and Professor Stuart were the chief speakers. Mrs. Butler in the course of her address dealt with the erroneous views held by some of the Danish doctors with regard to the necessity of State regulation, and said, with a warmth and a fire peculiar to her best efforts in oratory, that if these doctors thought prostitution was a "useful institution, healthful, needful, and without danger to anybody's morality," as some of them had stated in public, were they willing to devote their own daughters to such a useful and necessary profession? These words were reported in all the Danish papers of the following day.

Saturday morning was devoted to formal business connected with the first meeting of the new Executive, and in the evening there was a dinner, at which about one hundred sat down, and which brought this interesting, useful, and in every way most successful Congress to a close.

During the sittings of the Congress, Count VON MOLTKE, a cousin of the old German general, read a paper on the Midnight Mission to men in Copenhagen, initiated and carried on by Mr. W. Wright, a Danish gentleman, well known to many English Christians who have visited Copenhagen.

Every morning, before the business of the day commenced, Mrs. Butler held a prayer-meeting.

SUNDAY REST OR SUNDAY LABOUR.—The Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association issued an address to the members of the Trades' Union Congress at Bradford. It says: "Will you, the chosen representatives of England's skilled workmen, help to increase Sunday labour? Will you deprive the attendants at museums, galleries, and all similar exhibitions of that day of rest which they now enjoy? Will you help to fasten chains on your fellow workmen? If not, do not vote for a beginning of the evil. Do not increase Sunday labour, but use your important Congress to diminish it. Sunday opening means Sunday labour. Sunday labour means Sunday misery, and the depriving of working men of one of the greatest blessings and rights which they now enjov."

CHINA'S APPEAL.

MILLIONS are in darkness lying
In the sunny clime afar;
Hear ye not their voices crying
From the depths of their despair?—

"Ye that have the light of heaven,
Ye who know a Saviour's love,
Share with us the light thus given,
That we too its joy may prove.

"From our mountains, rivers, plains,
And our myriad-peopled shore,
Hope from every idol wanes;
To their help we look no more.

"Is it true that ye, possessing
Knowledge of a price untold,
Such a wondrous cup of blessing,
Can from us a draught withhold?

"Come, ye messengers of gladness,
Come and bring the light of day;
Let it chase away our sadness,
Come, that joyful light display!"

Algiers. GEORGE PEARSE.

ITINERATING IN THE STATES.

DEAR BROTHER,—We left Hill Brow Farm (Colonel Beers') on July 25, to take up work for the Master in the outlying districts of this great State. We began at a village called Bethel, and, like Abraham of old, we are still going on towards the south. We felt in a measure comforted by that word, for all was well whilst he kept to that point of the compass. The church-house was in the woods, and not a house near for miles, but crowds came to listen to the Gospel story. It was a pretty sight to watch the people assembling, some coming on mules, others on horseback, in waggons or buggies. Tying up their horses, they soon filled the house. The second night we had the meeting under the trees; this was so much better, as the thermometer was up at ninety-six.

I preached seventeen times in nine days in this place, the people increasing in number till about five hundred or more filled the space under the trees. This kind of pioneer work is, indeed, much wanted in this country. Many are tired of extravagance, and are thirsting for the plain Word of Life. Thank God, souls were saved almost every night, and believers encouraged and strengthened.

From Bethel we went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and had to go over a rough mountain thirteen miles, which took us a good part of a day. This village is within a mile and a half of the great Indian Territory, where I hear that faithful servants of Christ are working with earnestness and success. At Cincinnati we began as at Bethel, and had morning meetings: the farmers are free to come because the harvest is past, and they are not ready for ploughing, the long dry weather making the ground too hard. I think, by the way, Cincinnati was much like the "hard ground." The interest was not nearly so great as at Bethel; however, many got blessing. I preached here eighteen times in ten days, and testimonies of deepening interest in the word of truth came before us.

From there we came on twenty-five miles to a place called Mount Comfort, and here we are just beginning work morning and evening. I think the labourers are looking for answers to their prayers in the conversion of their relatives and friends, and a deeper understanding of the truth, "Ye are not your own." We expect to be here ten days or so and then move on, as the doors are open for us. If those in the old country who know the Word and are ready to tell it out would come, how many needy places could be filled; and, happily, the people will come miles to hear.—Yours faithfully,

HERBERT R. FRANCIS.

THE BRETON MISSION.

The principal station of this Mission at Tremel has been unusually favoured with visitors during this summer, many having returned for the second and third visit, the interest evidently growing as more of this truly evangelistic work is seen. Certainly these visitors leave behind them most substantial evidences of their appreciation of the work, and of the self-abnegating energy of the director and his equally devoted wife. One visitor from Bath, last year, observing how real was the need for a school for the girls as well as for the boys—a want Madame Lecoat has deplored for years—gave orders for its immediate erection at her sole charge. The visitors of this year saw the commodious school ready for use, but not used; as the needs for extension in the work of Gospel preaching and Scripture colportage more than absorb all increase in the gifts of Christian friends. But this difficulty has disappeared in answer to prayer. Two of the visitors have undertaken between them to defray all expenses entailed in working the school for the next year.

The annual examination of the boys has taken place. Although the interest of the day centred in M. Cunuder, the indefatigable schoolmaster, and his boys, yet the girls and young women, whom Madame Lecoat has found time amid her multifarious engagements to teach the Scriptures and lessons therefrom, gained much praise for their practical proofs of the success of the patient teaching they had received. The visitor upon such occasions can see clearly that the Scriptures, pure and simple, occupy a first place in the curriculum of the Mission schools. This is the reason why the French Government refuses a grant in aid, although these schools have done the work usually done by the ordinary communal schools, and are most popular.

This examination was succeeded in a few days by a gathering of the whole of the colporteurs engaged in Brittany, as far as was possible, the object being conference and edification and more solemn dedication to this much-needed work. Colporteurs were present from Rennes, Lorient, Quimper, Brest, Morlaix, Plounerin, and Tremel. Rev. J. Carr Glyn presided, as a vice-president of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which employs the larger number of colporteurs in Brittany. M. Monod, of Paris, was also present, and a very solemn and refreshing season was enjoyed. The Mission as a whole has enjoyed most richly the blessing of God throughout its branches, and is full of life and activity, working to the limit, and even beyond its fund. Pastor Lecoat has been minus his salary for two years, but the friends are desirous that he should not be under this necessity, seeing how devotedly he works for his fellow-countrymen's spiritual welfare. There are now a goodly number of native colporteur evangelists in direct connection with this Mission, and if all were placed where they are urgently asked for, and arrangements made for them, their number would now be twenty. But what are these and the few others in that field among two and a half millions mostly in the darkness of death? If their number could be made one hundred, the heart of Pastor Lecoat and his fellow-helpers would be made glad and praise the Lord.

Cheltenham. W. L. Lang.

In an interesting letter, written from Brest, Rev. Dr. Bullinger, of Walthamstow, calls attention to the increasing importance and urgent need of Pasteur Lecoat's work in Brittany. The offshoot at Brest bids fair to speedily outgrow the parent Mission at Tremel. Not only is there an eagerness on the part of the people to listen to the Gospel, but among the native converts there are several men well qualified to carry the glad message into the towns and villages of the province. So far, however, it has not been possible to send these forth; but, in view of the pressing needs of Brest, it has been decided to erect, as soon as possible, a spacious preaching-room in that town, and towards the cost of this, as well as on behalf of the general work of the Mission, help is asked from British Christians. The treasurer is Mr. J. C. Bolton, 26, Great St. Helens, E.C.

IN THE LAND OF SUNSHINE.

Scarcely ever were sharper contrasts lived out in a shorter space of time than those experienced by the three hundred hapless boys and girls that came to Canada this year from our dull, narrow East-end streets. Orphans, motherless, or fatherless, are no longer solitary, but are set in families; valued according to their age and capability, or loved for their very feebleness. Often without their necessary food in the old life, they are now sitting down to groaning tables covered with good things. Once pale-faced and poorly clad, we see them now healthy and well clothed. Formerly unable to express a thought as to earning for themselves a livelihood, manly young lads are now calling upon us, able to give us clear descriptions of all the operations connected with raising cattle, sowing, reaping, the working of machinery, till our eyes open in amazement, and our ears tingle, whilst we exclaim, "What a marvellous change these kind Canadians have made in you, my boy!"

Then there are the elder lassies who return to Stratford for a rest of a week or two, able to make themselves a new dress with the aid of the fine sewing machine, a gift from one of our married young men. They exchange experiences as to the making of cakes, canning of fruits, and cookeries of all kinds, till we rejoice, and wonder at what a patient Canadian training can make out of our once neglected East-end girlies. Could we have kept them in training at Hackney, year after year, they never could have become so domesticated, and suited to mingle with this sturdy race.

All this, as can be easily imagined, requires persistent devotion to each individual case; studying the need, and supplying that which will develop the whole being. Faith and prayer are in constant action. The grace of hope is absolutely necessary, not looking entirely at what the child is, but what it may become: "bearing all things; hoping all things; enduring all things."

In our visits around this centre of our Canadian work, and whilst resting and receiving surprise parties, and gifts of all sorts, we realise in our life, after months of the daily round of East-end life toil, the greatest contrast—joyful surprises day by day in beholding such transformations. Sometimes we hear of a dozen virtuously married living in the same town, worshipping together, and their children attending the same schools. Then the hundreds of adoptions of those tiny mites that my sister and I have toiled with across the great waters and watched through children's weakness. Now we rejoice together over many a dying mother's prayer being fully answered, in seeing one after another won to the Saviour, believing that ere long they too will join in the new song of the Redeemed, with those poor but saintly mothers who entrusted them to our care, while departing from workhouse or hospital.

Words utterly fail us in transcribing the continual life of praise we are living. Harvest time though it be, every Saturday brings us young men and young women, to whom our sister has often to give us a fresh introduction. We have right royal work that the angelic hosts must rejoice over, making unions between brothers and sisters, parents and children; higher still, leading to the Saviour those who had only been resting in impressions, and self-righteousnesses.

Thus, kind contributors, we have passed our first month in Canada; trusting that the rescuing and training is again going on, for we are more than ever encouraged to press forward. We have two visitors out among the distant farmhouse homes all the time, returning every two or three weeks to arrange fresh journeys. Thus the temporal and spiritual welfare of each child is cared for and reported to the Home of Industry.

My nephews in the North-West report progress. The buildings are finished and entered upon. Eighty acres have been sown since March, and are now being reaped. One hundred tons of hay were cut. Our "grown-ups" are all in good health, and in due time will each take up their own farms. We ask continual prayer, that the Lord may lead us on to watch for more and more spiritual blessing.

Stratford, Ontario. Annie Macpherson.

PRAYER v. PURGATORY.

A correspondent writes from Boulogne-sur-Mer, under date September 4:—

I have read in your paper a quotation from a Roman Catholic contemporary, announcing the ceremony to be performed by the Pope on the 27th inst., whereby he will "people heaven with millions of souls from purgatory." May I suggest that English Protestant Christians set apart that day for special prayer for all Roman Catholics; and also that the workers engaged in evangelistic work on the Continent of Europe, may preach and teach with increased earnestness and decision immediate salvation through Christ alone. In view of this latest extraordinary freak of Papal presumption, and of the tremendous efforts being put forth by the Jesuits to regain influence in France and in England, does it not behove true believers to present their golden vials of intercessory prayer with increased fervour before the throne of grace. If, on the 27th, in our private devotions, and at our united prayer-meetings, earnest petitions were offered on behalf of Roman Catholics, this last development of error might overreach itself, and eyes might be opened to realise its falsehood. Millions might, indeed, be set free, not from the purgatory of man's invention, but from their present bondage of ignorance and superstition (and many are sighing for such release), and brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and the possession of eternal life, with no intervening purgatorial fires.

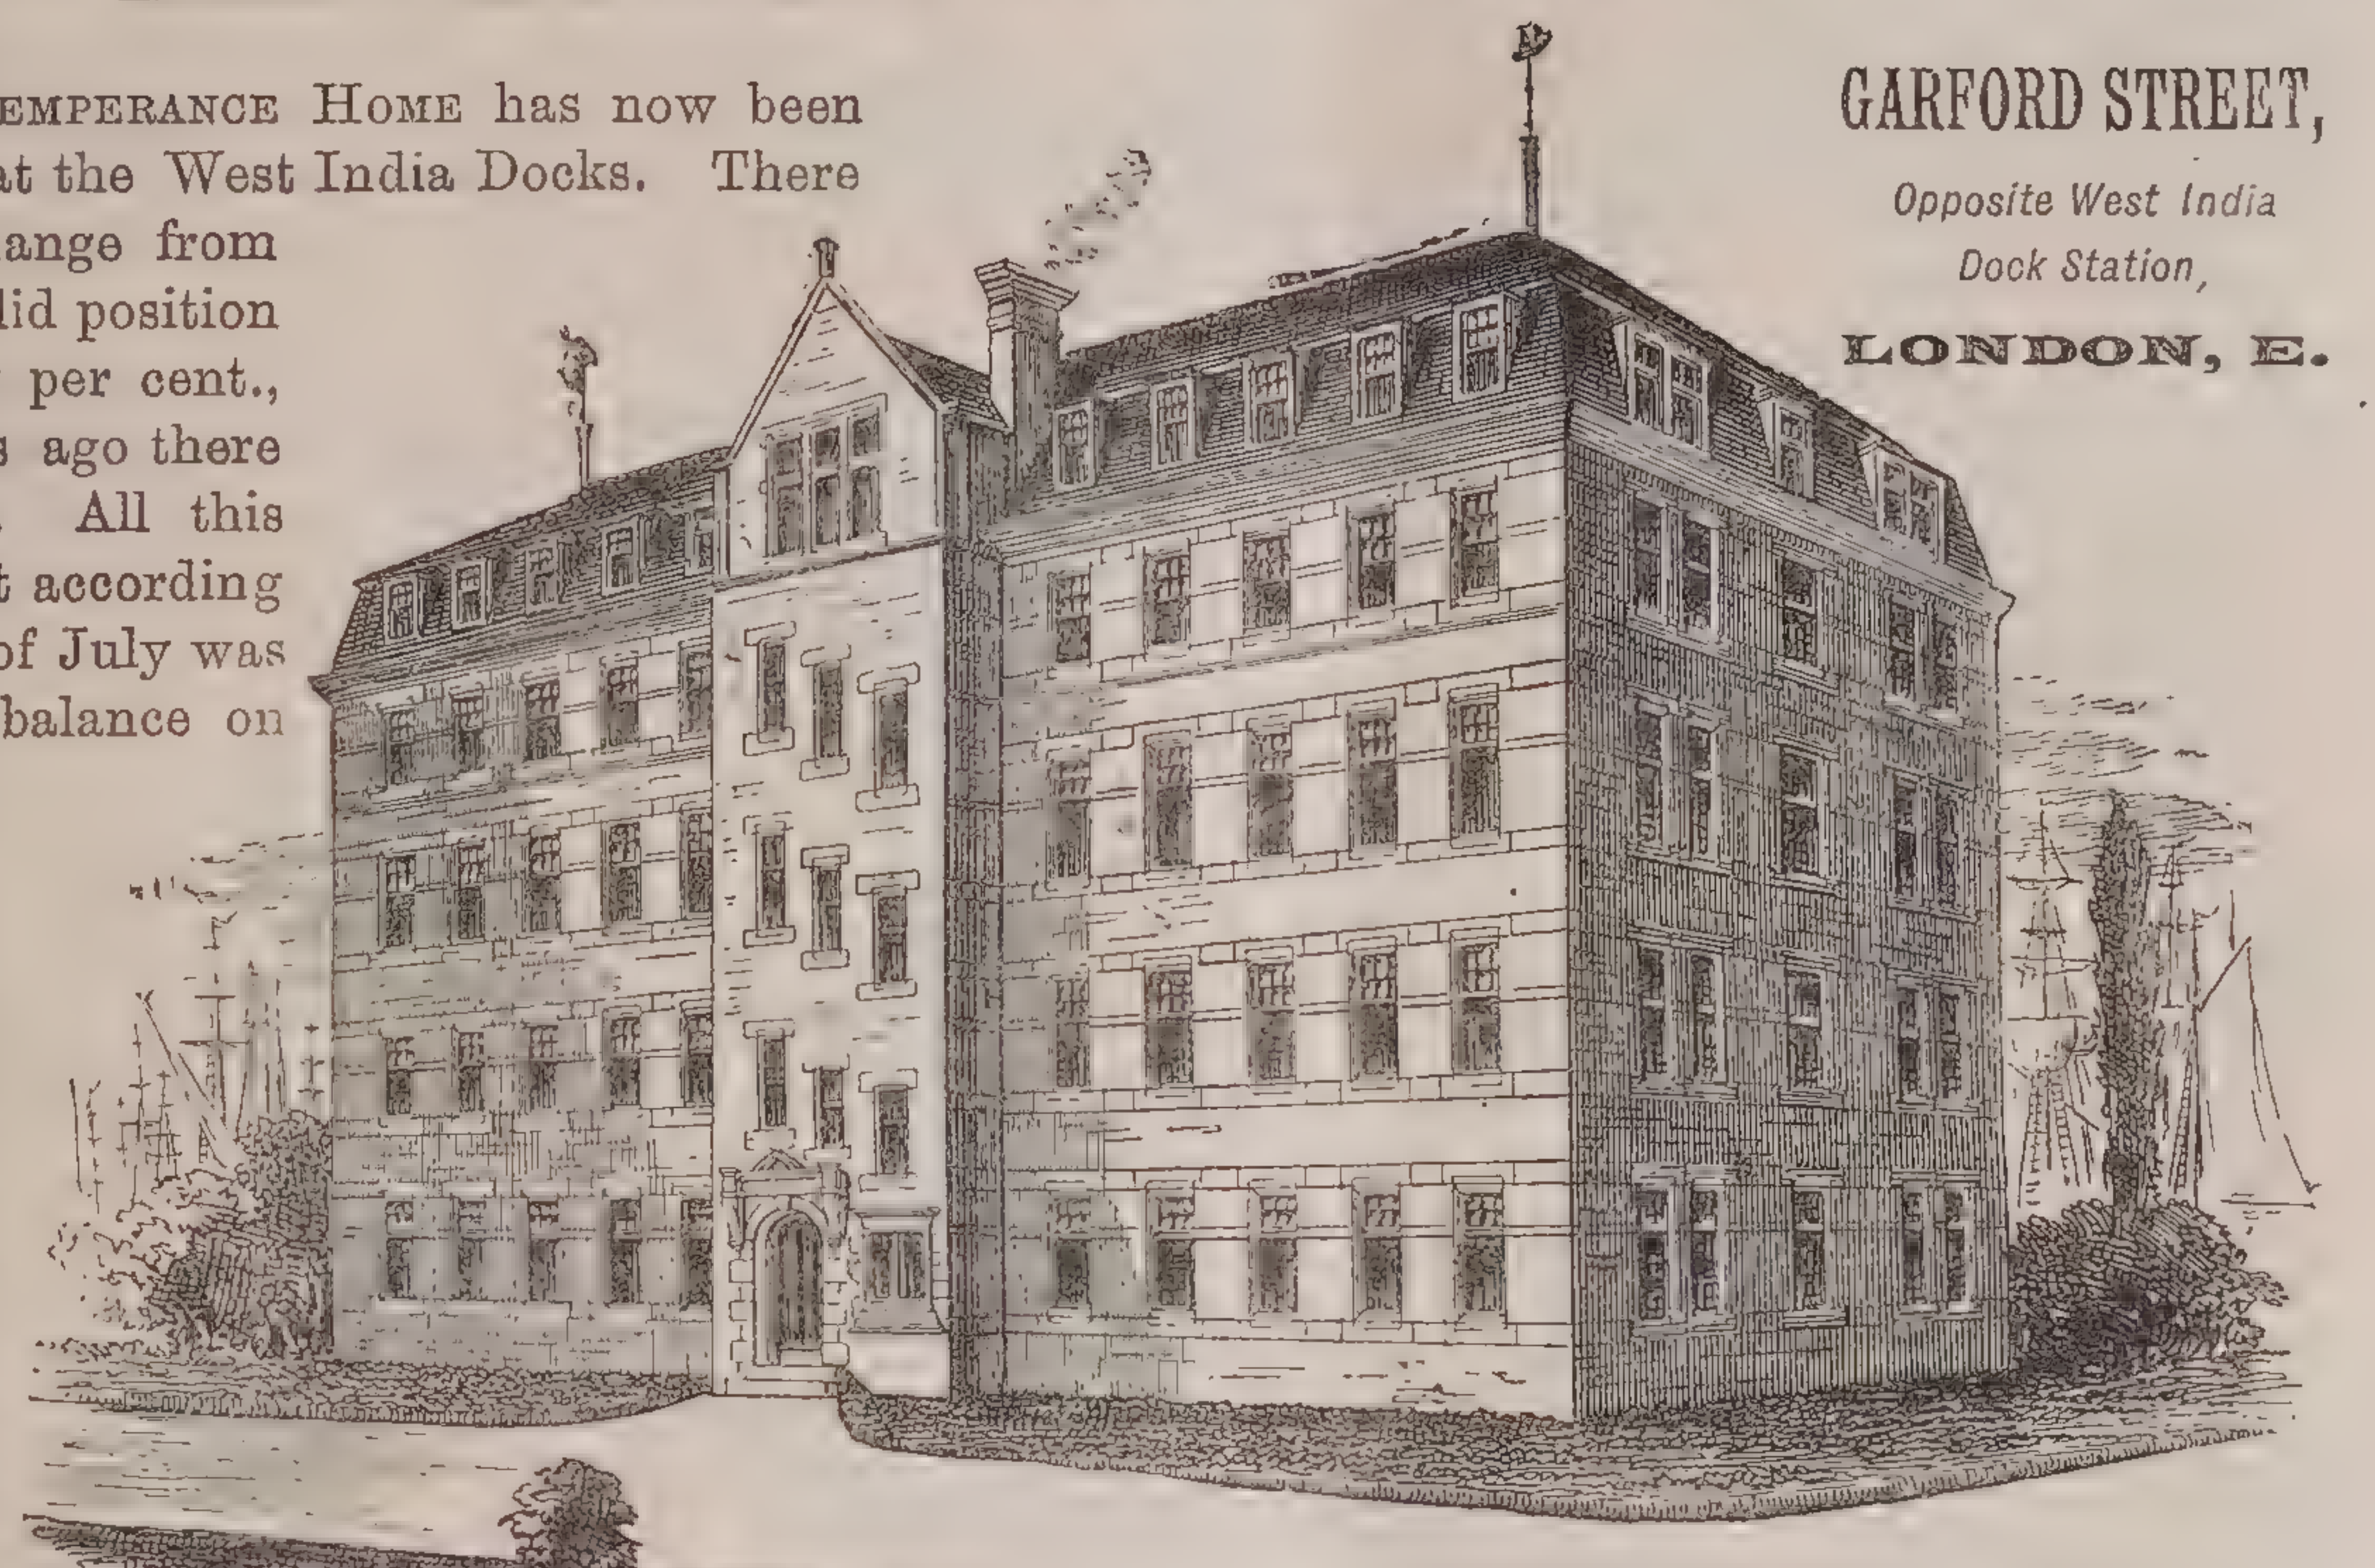
The following, curtailed from Le Signal of August 4, is a specimen of Rome's tactics in France at the present moment. A very hopeful work of evangelisation is going on in the Department of Gers, where Jeanne d'Albret, mother of Henri IV., founded several churches, all of which, with one exception (Maurézin), were swept away in 1685 at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. At Fleurance, where a resident pastor has just been appointed, it is absolutely necessary, for the maintenance of the work, that a free school should be established.

There is a Roman Catholic school, hostile, of course; and there is a secular school, in which the academical administration, under cover of secularism, in reality plays the game of clericalism. The assistant-master, who, as a Protestant, used his right to support our work, as the head-master used his to attend Mass, has been dismissed. The urgent need for a free school at Fleurance is recognised. The Society for Encouraging Primary Instruction among Protestants has promised 500 francs to establish such a school; 700 more are required. It is greatly desired to appoint as its master M. Desbarats, who possesses the confidence and esteem of the parents.

FAKENHAM.—Tent services have been held in this Norfolk village for several weeks, and much good has been done.

Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home,

WEST INDIA DOCKS, LONDON, E.



GARFORD STREET,
Opposite West India Dock Station,
LONDON, E.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

The work of The Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home has now been carried on for eight months in the new building at the West India Docks. There is no doubt that the Home has gained by the change from the old place in Leman Street. Its present splendid position has increased the circulation of sailors quite fifty per cent., and the numbers have risen so that a few weeks ago there were 122 sailors living in the Home at a time. All this has contributed to the satisfactory financial result according to the accounts of the last months. The month of July was the first in eight years which showed a small balance on the right side.

A heavy drawback at present is a debt of £2,000, which became necessary to furnish the buildings. The thought which is now uppermost in my mind, and which I would put before all who are willing to help us in this work—which often proves heavy, though it by the blessing of God bears much fruit among our sailors—is that we should put our shoulders to the wheel and try to remove this heavy burden. It is not only to promote my own work that I put this request before you, but also to help Missionary Stations the whole world over, which are frequented by the sailors, these travelling Evangelists being a constant help to those Missions. When you help the workers in the Sailors' Mission, you at the same time give a helping hand to many Missionaries in heathen lands.

May the Lord bless every exertion made for His glory! Yours in His service, AGNES HEDENSTRÖM.

Donations can be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, who will acknowledge them in The Christian.

"We heartily thank the Rev. J. Macpherson for his well-written, graphic, and telling life of this 'CHRISTIAN HERO.' It is a book to be read by all, but especially adapted to do good to the working classes."—The Baptist Messenger.

"From first to last the book is full of interest, and valuable lessons from the life of this humble but honoured servant of Christ. His noble though tragic death, while saving a child from drowning, lends a deep additional interest to the record of his brief but useful career upon earth."—Word and Work.

"TELL JESUS:" Recollections of Emily Gosse. By ANNA SHIPTON.

"This book presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. 'Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God'—is an injunction which in that life was literally and strictly obeyed. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that all our practical Atheists and Christian Pantheists might read it and be instructed; that indolent professors might read it and be quickened; and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—The Christian Times.

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"RIGHT LUNG DISEASED"—CASE of Mr. MORRIS—IN SOUTH WALES.

This patient came to me recommended by Rev. J. F. WILLIAMS, Baptist Minister, LLANBEBIE, Carmarthenshire, who has taken great interest in making known my treatment.

Mr. J. B. MORRIS, of AMMANFORD, R.S.O., had been under a local doctor for a long time. He had taken my medicine for several weeks (under advice by letter), but was anxious to be personally examined. Report of Dr. B.:—"Right lung affected (upper lobe)."

Since commencing my treatment the cough had become much easier. The expectoration of blood had become less and occasionally only; and other symptoms improved.

After this he gained flesh, and subsequent letters reported a gradual improvement. Then I lost sight of him.

On New Year's Day last I received a letter from Rev. J. F. Williams in which he says:—"You remember the patient on whose behalf I wrote you some time ago—Mr. J. B. Morris, of Ammanford—and who, after taking your valuable medicine for some time, was restored to health, to the astonishment of all his acquaintance. Ever since that he has followed his occupation in vigorous health."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

GIDDINESS, SENSATIONS, AND FAINTS.

I will demonstrate to the whole world how that most dreadful of all complaints, "Epilepsy," which has been hitherto considered incurable, can be permanently cured (without the chance of failure). All afflicted may write with full hope and confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford Terrace, Hyde Park, London; who will send full particulars to any person, free of all charge

THE FOREIGN MISSION FIELD.

"LITTLE SODOMS" IN INDIA.

MR. W. ALFRED REDWOOD, of Malvalli, Mysore, in a printed letter, gives some interesting particulars of that part of India. Some of the villages of the territory are, he says, "little Sodoms without even a Lot in them." Converts to Christianity are mainly from the despised portions of the community. A medical missionary is a great desideratum.

AMONG CHINAMEN IN CALCUTTA.

Dr. E. S. Wenger's work among the Chinese in Calcutta is growing in importance. As the American and Australian Governments are endeavouring to prevent the immigration of Chinamen, it is likely that India will in the near future afford asylum to thousands of Chinese people. The number of Chinamen in Calcutta in 1881 was returned at 865, and it is now believed to be much larger. Dr. Wenger is trying to get in touch with the Chinamen of Darjeeling. The good seed is also being sown among the Hindu population of Calcutta.

REINFORCEMENTS NEEDED.

"How can we sufficiently emphasise," asks The Church Missionary Intelligencer, "the pressing need of reinforcements for Eastern Equatorial Africa? Mr. Mackay and Mr. Douglas Hooper are perplexed and saddened by their failure to come forward. A dozen picked men—picked as regards body, mind, and spirit—would be instantly absorbed for the urgent work of the stations; but where are they? Will the friends of Africa cry mightily to God for the 'more labourers'?—but will they at the same time consider whether they themselves are doing what they can, seeking for men to go, encouraging their own sons and brothers and friends, and denying themselves, to find the money?"

CHINA.

Mr. D. E. Hoste, writing from South Shansi in April, says:—"China is now open to the Gospel. This region is so, not only in the sense that we foreigners can live here, but in a much deeper sense, namely, that owing to the presence and working of the Holy Spirit, in answer to the prayers of the church for some years past, the public mind is to a vast extent freed from the suspicion and dislike to foreigners which used to exist so powerfully. I cannot help wishing that the Church at home would pray almost more for those who are out here, that they may fulfil the ministry they have received, than for fresh numbers. Both are deeply needed; and the grace which gives a hundred workers can keep them too."

WORK IN BRAZIL.

Rev. Emanuel Vanorden writes from São Paulo, Brazil:—"Through God's grace and mercy I arrived safely in this capital last Saturday evening, after a prosperous voyage of twenty-three days. The whole country is more or less in a state of excitement, on account of the emancipation of the slaves; many planters are completely ruined, and have to learn to use their own hands and brains to earn their bread and butter. The opportunities for evangelisation are daily increasing. Last night there arrived a letter from a young colporteur, saying that in Ouro Preto, the capital of Minas Geraes, a hotbed of Jesuitism, he had sold 239 Bibles, and in the neighbourhood 90. To give you an idea of the magnitude of the Lord's work here, I would mention, with great thankfulness to God, that Rev. Mr. Landes received, on profession of their faith, 53 Catholics in Campo Largo, 49 in Guarapicava, and 30 in Rio Feio. The Methodist Conference is in session here now (July 31), and is laying out its plan of campaign for the coming year. Bishop Cranberry brought two new men from the States, and these are wanted in fifty places."

AWAKENING IN JAPAN.

In writing to acknowledge the regular receipt of this paper through the kindness of one of our readers, Rev. A. B. Hutchinson, C.M.S., Nagasaki, Japan, says:—"In this remote corner of distant Japan there is an awakening and inquiry after the truth which have already resulted in the baptism of over 200 converts, principally adults, in the northern part of Kiushiu, which is the portion allotted to me as my special sphere of work. Others are being prepared for admission into the fold of Christ. My fellow-worker on the eastern side of Kiushiu, Rev. J. B. Brandram, and our brethren of the Presbyterian and American Episcopal Methodist missions, are rejoicing over similar proofs that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. I would ask earnest prayer for the workers in this land."

BECHUANALAND.

In the British protectorate of Bechuanaland, God's Word is gradually but surely gaining ground. Heathenism is slowly being uprooted, and superstition overcome. God has revealed Himself to these poor people in many ways, and their minds and hearts are being awakened to realise that God is the Lord. At Kanye, especially, has the power of the living God been manifested. The native chief Khame, at Shoshong, prohibits the manufacture of Kafir beer, and does not allow liquor to be brought into his country by the white man. On the latter point he is very firm, and only recently expelled two men, who had been trading in the land for many years, for endeavouring to introduce that detestable brandy, contrary to the law of the country. The chief's son at Kanye has also recently stopped the selling of brandy to his people.—L.M.S. Chronicle.

AMONG ZULU KAFFIRS.

Mr. Elbert S. Clarke and his wife continue their unsectarian efforts among the Zulu Kaffirs. The activity of the Roman Catholic priests has greatly confused the natives, who, however, seem readily to appreciate the Protestant endeavours that are made to instruct them in the arts of civilisation. On his return from England last year, Mr. Clarke found many natives awaiting medical attention at his hands. One poor man had travelled on horseback in much pain, several days' journey, in order to be at hand on Mr. Clarke's arrival. He had a shocking spear-wound in his leg, which the Kaffir doctors had all failed to cure. After staying with the missionaries about a month, he rode away, very thankful that his leg was almost well, and carrying with him, as a memento, the crutches which Mr. Clarke had made for him, saying that he would keep that pair of "legs" to look at. A hospital is greatly needed in the region. Information respecting this mission may be obtained from Mrs. S. Fothergill, Pierremont-crescent, Darlington.

NEW GUINEA.

In a recent letter to a friend, Rev. James Chalmers, writing of a visit paid to the various mission stations along the south coast, in charge of native South Sea Island teachers, gives a cheering report of the progress of the Gospel amongst the cannibals. Speaking of a village named Vagavaga, he says:—"There is a change seen even in the appearance of all the natives. They were a wild cannibal lot a few years ago. Mr. Pearse asked one of the natives if they eat man, and was answered, 'No; no eat man now, all fellow missionary now.' In the evening, at seven, a bell rang, and soon hymn singing was heard; they were having evening prayers. You cannot realise it—savages, cannibals, murderers, now seeking to worship God. It was strangely pleasing to hear an old hymn tune in such a place....I had a good time at South Cape. I got refreshed in visiting the stations with the New Guinea teachers. At Savaia, where, only a short time ago there were cannibal feasts, there are three catechumens and six who can read well, and all the people friendly."

CANADIAN PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

The Presbyterians of the Dominion, it is evident, take a deep and warm interest in missions to the heathen, and seem earnest in their efforts to spread the cause. As the field widens, men and women offer their services, and the hearts of the people are opened to give with increased liberality. Only recently an anonymous friend has offered to defray the salary of Rev. J. Annand, the missionary on the island of Santo Espiritu, New Hebrides, for one year; a good example, which might well be followed by others who could easily undertake the support of a missionary labouring abroad. It is forty-eight years since the first Canadian Presbyterian missionary, the heroic Dr. Geddie, commenced his noble enterprise in the South Seas. To-day the Church has missions in China Proper, in Formosa, in Central India, among the Indians of the North-West, in Trinidad, and in the New Hebrides. In the latter field especially the missionaries have had cause to rejoice in seeing wonders wrought through the Name which is above every name. The latest mission is that to the province of Honan, China, which was inaugurated a few months since by the outgoing of Rev. J. Goforth, who, however, has not yet started active work, having been engaged since his arrival in the study of the language at Chefoo. Rev. James Smith, M.D., and Mrs. Smith, and Mr. Wm. McClure, M.D., lately sailed from San Francisco, to join him in this mission. They, too, will remain at Chefoo for about a year to acquire the language, previous to entering upon their labours in Honan.

CARLISLE CONVENTION.

THAT the sturdy North is deeply roused on the important subject of practical holiness is evident from the fact that so soon after the magnificent meetings as Keswick, another such convention should assemble in the fine old Border city. The crowded meetings of the first day indicate a rapidly growing interest in the subject of heart and life. There is this year a large platform, Dr. Elder Cumming, Rev. C. A. Fox, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, Rev. W. Haslam, Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. Dr. Morris, Rev. J. Sloan, and Dr. White, all being announced to speak. Most of them were present at the first meeting.

A preliminary meeting was held in the Drill Hall, on Sunday afternoon, when Rev. C. A. Fox spoke to a crowded assembly. The first meeting proper of the Convention, held on Monday evening, was again well attended. Mr. ROBERT WILSON, presided, and struck the keynote of the meeting from Exodus iii. Mr. ALEXANDER WHITE followed, on Malachi iii. In the course of a solemn address, he warned his hearers against robbing God. Christians are too apt to fancy their life is a dual one, a business life and a Christian life; a life on the week day and a different life on the Sunday. Are we willing that He should sit as a refiner? He is so patient, so loving, so tender. The refiner was Himself refined. The Captain of our Salvation was made perfect through suffering. What blessing this refining brings. He will rebuke the evil one, the destroyer of our peace, of our rest, of our happiness, and we shall walk out from under his bondage into the brightness and fulness of the Master's presence.

Then followed an address by Rev. W. HASLAM, when, with the old vigour and freshness, this honoured servant sought to enforce the previous teaching. Rev. C. A. Fox gave solemn closing words, asking the two vital questions: Are we willing to put the Lord Jesus Christ first in everything? and, Are we willing to let self go? If so, we shall find that we will exchange self for a new Christ, who will fill our hearts and homes.

Personalia.

Mr. W. T. Stead is about to publish a book on Russia, which country he lately visited. The publishers are Messrs. Cassell.

Rev. Dr. Macdonald, of the High Church, Inverness, was seized with illness, and sank back in the pulpit in a faint, while preaching on Sunday week.

Rev. J. T. Mateer (one of Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists) has been chosen to succeed Rev. C. B. Sawday as pastor of Vernon-square Chapel, King's Cross.

Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, in a paper in The Churchman, mentions a favourite saying of hi father's—"An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."

Mr. A. A. Stagg, the famous base-ball player, of Yale, it is announced, will, after graduation this year, become Secretary of the Yale College Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, of the Golden-lane Mission, commemorated his Jubilee year by a gift of £50, towards a Seaside Convalescent Home, being £1 for each year of his life.

Rev. E. M. C. Botterill, of Harrisbury, U.S., a native of Northampton, visited that town for his holiday, and took part in fifty-nine religious services during forty-two days.

Mr. J. McGranahan, in a recent letter from his home at Kinsman, Ohio, says he is gaining strength slowly, but is not yet in working trim. Mrs. McGranahan is in good health.

Mr. E. J. Mather, of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, spoke in the Free High Church, Inverness, on Sunday, and lectured on Monday, on behalf of the excellent work which he directs.

Rev. D. Smith, the oldest Protestant minister in the world, is 104 years old. The African Episcopal Methodist Conference, recently held in the United States, was opened by him with prayer.

Mr. Spurgeon will publish a new volume in a few days, called "The Cheque Book on the Bank of Faith." Scripture texts or promises will be accompanied "with brief experimental comments."

Lady Frederick Cavendish, who devotes so much time to visiting the hospitals and poor in the East-end of London, is said to be the anonymous donor of £10,000 for the Bristol Bishopric Endowment Fund.

Dr. Donald Fraser has abandoned his purposed journey to Australia, and will not carry out his intention of visiting the mission stations in India and China. He will, however, make a short trip to the East, leaving September 20, and returning in December.

Mr. George Blaiklock has received an invitation to lecture in Australia for twelve months, which he has accepted, and he expects to leave England for Melbourne in February next. He is now arranging a series of farewell meetings in various parts of the country.

Rev. E. Bryant, the Bible Society's agent for North China and Corea, has lately accomplished in safety two important land journeys in Corea, to inspect and extend the colportage work, which has been quietly carried on in that country for some years past through native Christians.

Miss G. M. Taylor, formerly of Leamington, is now residing at Ventnor, having for several years been very much an invalid. She is now strong enough, however, to take some part in Gospel effort in Ventnor. The work among young women at Leamington goes on with enlarging blessing.

Rev. Principal Cairns is the subject of a brief pen portrait in The Presbyterian Messenger of September 1. The writer says: "No man is more sure of a crowded audience whenever he ascends the pulpit; and few speak with equal power the old truths of the Gospel, in all simplicity and Godly sincerity."

Mr. William Noble, in a recent address, in the Sion Jubilee Chapel, Bradford, maintained that God would greatly bless his Church if his people would entirely wash their hands of intoxicating drink, and refuse to have any of the money made from the sale of liquor. He urged upon all not only to give up drink, but to take up arms and fight against it. The Church has got to move in the matter of total abstinence, and to purify itself. Mr. Noble will commence an eighteen days' Gospel temperance mission on Saturday next, in a marqueein Dalston-lane, nearly opposite Dalston Junction.

Messrs. Jones and Small continue to travel from place to place, preaching almost constantly. They have preached recently in Missouri, Wiscousin, New York, Ohio, Kentucky, and Georgia.

Messrs. Hudson Taylor and Radcliffe have visited Toronto and other parts of Canada, with much blessing resting on their earnest words on behalf of missions. Mr. Taylor hopes to have a contingent of China missionaries from Canada.

Rev. Francis Jayne, Vicar of Leeds, has been nominated by Lord Salisbury for the Bishopric of Chester, in succession to Bishop Stubbs, recently translated to Oxford. The Record expresses surprise at the appointment, and hints that Mr. Jayne's High Churchism will make his departure from Leeds a welcome event to many in that city.

The late Dean Burgon has left MSS. and notes which it seems impossible one man's lifetime could suffice to produce, even if he worked night and day. This indeed he did, for he is said to have been up at six every day, summer and winter, writing into the night always till twelve or one o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin Clarke, editor of The Sunday-school Chronicle, has returned to England after his tour in the United States and Canada. In a letter to his paper he describes The Montreal Witness, a paper conducted on religious and temperance principles, as "one of the purest and best journals in the Dominion."

Dr. John Hall's church at New York subscribes £30,000 a year, of which £10,000 is given for local church expenses, and £20,000 for other work. Dr. Whyte's congregation in Free St. George's, Edinburgh, raises £10,000 a year, which is by far the largest sum contributed in any British Presbyterian church.

Principal Cavan, of Toronto, writes an account of the Pan-Presbyterian Council in The Presbyterian Review. He says its success was largely due to the untiring interest and activity of Rev. R. M. Thornton, well known as a Canadian minister, who has laboured with marked success both in Glasgow and London.

Professor Elisha Gray, inventor of the Telautograph, is an American Presbyterian elder. His instrument, it is said, will revolutionise, if not supersede, both telegraphy and telephone. By it the sender of a message can, by writing it at one end, instantly reproduce it in his own handwriting, and with his own autograph to authenticate it, at the other end.

Mr. John M. McAuliffe has closed another month of mission work in the Peak district of Derbyshire in connection with his Wayside Bible Carriage. Large and enthusiastic meetings were held at Hayfield and Tideswell, and good gatherings of people were held in other mountain villages. These villages are mostly unvisited by the ordinary tourist, and so inaccessible to ordinary means that this mission has been peculiarly acceptable.

Cardinal Lavigerie, who is now in Paris, expresses himself well satisfied with the results of his visits to England and Belgium. He says that he has asked Belgium for a hundred volunteers, and that France will give him 200. These will suffice for a start, and the "Army" will increase every day. The Anti-Slavery Societies will be free and independent, like the English one, and each will draw up its own rules and regulations. The Cardinal reckons also on German and Portuguese support.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, Vicar of St. Luke's, Liverpool, has been appointed to the incumbency of St. Michael and All Angels', Blackheath, Kent, lately rendered vacant by the acceptance by Rev. B. Baring-Gould of the office of Central Secretary to the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Barnes-Lawrence is well known as an earnest evangelical; he has laboured with much acceptance in Liverpool since 1883, and during the period of his ministry there has been held in warm esteem by the Protestant community.

The Bishop of Rochester will preach at St. John's, Waterloo-road, on Sept. 20, for the "Guild of St. Matthew." His lordship says that he does not profess to concur with all the Socialistic objects and principles of the guild, but he welcomes an opportunity of saying what he hopes may be sound and kindly, but frank words on a subject confessedly among the foremost of our time, and on which, if the Church were to preserve a total silence, she could hardly fail to be accused of indifference, selfishness, helplessness, or timidity.

Dr. C. S. Edwards, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, who was appointed to the Niger, has started, at about forty-eight hours' notice, for East Africa.

Mr. J. S. Moffat, son of the great African missionary, is regarded in South Africa as a "coming man." He holds a Commissionership under the Cape Government.

The Emperor of Brazil has, it is stated in a telegram from Brussels, forwarded a sum of money to Cardinal Lavigerie, to help him on his crusade against the slave trade in Africa.

Rev. Canon Quirk, Vicar of Rotherham, has received the offer of the rectory of Spitalfields, London, which has been rendered vacant by the appointment of the Rev. Prebendary Billing to the Bishopric of Bedford.

The Duchess of Teck has consented to distribute the prizes to the successful students of the past session, at the theatre of the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, City, on Monday, the 24th instant.

Rev. W. A. Meaton, 7, Cumberland Villas, Acton Green, Chiswick, W., is open to engagements for the coming winter, for adult mission services, children's services, or Gospel temperance meetings, in town or country.

Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler writes that on a recent visit to Boston he found nearly all the Congregationalist churches removed to the newer portions of the city. Even "Mount Vernon-street," which, under the ministry of Dr. Kirk, was the spiritual birthplace of John B. Gough and D. L. Moody, has sold out its building, and will follow the current.

Rev. J. T. Briscoe.—A portrait and biographical sketch of this pastor appears in The Baptist Magazine for September. The church at Rye-lane, Peckham, which, at the time of Mr. Briscoe's acceptance of the pastorate, consisted of about 150 members, increased year after year, until the commencement of the present year, when the number was 760.

Mr. Ernest M. Anderson has been appointed to the secretaryship of the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 7, Harpur-street, Bloomsbury, vacant through the resignation of Dr. David Buxton. The recent formation of branches of the Society in many of the provinces, with the consequent extension of its useful work, is entailing a great additional outlay, to meet which funds are urgently needed.

The Duke of Argyll has delivered a lecture on geology in Oban. Referring to the theory of natural selection, he said it was logical nonsense to maintain that any organ can be originated by a use that had not arisen. To his mind, the great lesson of geology was that the world had been a long time in preparation for the abode of man, and possibly of some future being, a glorification of our present species, a new heaven, and a new earth.

Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, recently assisted at the summer Communion of the Free Church congregation, at Criech, N.B. About five thousand people were present, and the services were mostly held in the open air. Dr. Whyte, in the course of his remarks, made complimentary references to the steadfastness of the people of the Highlands in the observance of the ordinances as they had been handed down to them by their fathers. In the South they had sold these special days observed in connection with the celebration of the Sacraments to the world, but he prayed that the world would one day hand them back again.

MONOGAMOUS MARRIAGE is the beginning of virtuous home-life; and virtuous home-life is the seed and germ from which public virtues spring. This is a proposition which needs no arguing; it is patent to general experience. Public and private virtue every man is interested in preserving. This is the atmosphere in which we all desire our sons and daughters to live. Can we contemplate for a moment those sons, and still less those daughters, forming a home which at any moment may be broken up, with the result of parents and children scattered far and wide, in mutual hatred, distrust, and dread? The home, we repeat, is the nursery of private virtue, and private virtue is the necessary basis and beginning of all morality. A people must be moral in order to be great, and in order to secure their own safety, permanence, and growth. Every man and every woman who has the mental capacity to understand these things will resolve, at all hazards, to conserve and make permanent the sacredness of the marriage relation.—The Hospital.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES MISSION.

The following extracts are taken from a narrative written by a young convert who accompanied Miss Reade in a preaching tour among villagers in South Arcot. He is the son of Simeon and brother of Aruli, mentioned in the book "Punrooty":—

"ULUNDERPETT.—This is a large and populous village. Almost all the people worship stone or wood as their god. We went through the streets and preached that Christ is our Saviour, and that there will be no forgiveness by worshipping idols, visiting sacred places, bathing in rivers, giving alms to the poor, building Chuttrams (wayside rest-houses), digging wells, praying continually, and reading sacred books. Most of them consented that Jesus Christ is the forgiver of sins. A young man who belongs to the Naydee caste came to see Miss Reade. He told her that he was an atheist. At last he agreed that there is a God, and he went to his house after receiving some books, and wrote a letter to Miss Reade, saying:—'Dear Madam,—My heart shines and rejoices in me. I am willing to enter into a new faith, which is powerful, peaceful, joyful, and triumphant, and not afar off.'

"An old man, a Brahmin, came to see Miss Reade. She spoke to him about the Saviour, and he showed a good feeling towards Christianity. As we were returning to our camp we met his wife giving rice to the ants. Miss Reade asked her 'Why do you do this?' She said, 'I do punniam (extra work of merit) for the remission of my sins.' Miss Reade began to tell her about the Saviour. Upon that she became thoughtful about Christianity. We showed the magic lantern twice in the Chuttram near the market. At the first time high officers, such as the sub-magistrate, the police inspector, and other men of high rank were present. Miss Reade was busy always, because so many Reddy women, and Mussulman women, &c., came to see her—crowd after crowd. She asked us to pray God so that a Mussulman might give us a house to show the magic lantern to the Mohammedan women. God heard our prayer and induced a Mussulman to give us a small room in his house.

"ULUNDANDAVERCOIL.—This is a large and beautiful village, which contains a Hindu temple of the same name. We went the day on which the annual festival took place, and found almost all the villagers, and proclaimed the Redeemer of the whole world."

Govanni, the writer of the above, is about nineteen years of age. When about ten he attended Miss Reade's Mission School, but was taken away by his heathen brothers to tend cattle. One morning he came to the Sunday service, and then and there he trusted Christ, and was baptized. He was kindly admitted into the American South Arcot Seminary. Uninterrupted testimony has been borne by each missionary to his high Christian character. He is now studying for the Middle School, hoping to enter the medical department. If only as a compounder, it is Miss Reade's earnest desire that every convert should have the means of earning his own livelihood. Prayer is still asked that some sister in the Lord might be led to join Miss Reade, and share in her many labours. One has offered, but it would be a subject of great thanksgiving if another should be led to accompany her. Any further information would be thankfully given by Miss Lowe, 12, Dafforne-road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services by Rev. Robert Balgarnie, at Baptist Chapel, Harrogate, to Sept. 16; and at Dundee from Sept. 18 to 28.——For blessing on mission services at Finchley.——For blessing on special services at Ramsgate, Tunbridge Wells, Southboro', Brighton, and Lewes, by Messrs. H. A. Squire and H. M. Barnett, from Sept. 18 to Oct. 9.

Letters to the Editor.

THE OUT-STILL SYSTEM IN INDIA.

SIR,—I have on many occasions called the attention of the British public to the frightful evils caused in India by the "out-still system" of the Government, whereby liquor-shops are forced on the people against their earnest protests. It seems hopeless to get any acknowledgment from the Indian Government of the evil they are doing. The demand for revenue overpowers all other considerations, and I have no hope of uprooting this evil except by rousing public attention at home to its terrible effects. For this purpose, may I ask you to publish the following extracts from an article which has just reached me from India? The first one refers to the demoralisation of the coolies employed in the tea plantations by strong drink; and the second is from a letter written by a native temperance reformer.—I am, &c.,

Dunkeld, N.B. SAMUEL SMITH.

(EXTRACTS.)

I.

The manner in which this abominable state of things is forced on the large landowners, whether they will have it or no, was strikingly brought forward by the production of a series of letters which had passed between the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling and the manager of one of the largest local tea companies. The manager in question had closed two drinking shops in the bazaar on his estate on account of their demoralising influences, when he was peremptorily commanded to re-open them, and threatened that if he did not do so land would be forcibly occupied in his bazaar for the purpose of establishing a distillery and shop. Finding he could not shake the purpose of the Deputy Commissioner by his individual protest (the latter reiterating that he was acting in accordance with his duty in the interests of Government), he forthwith appealed to thirteen of his neighbours, also engaged in the tea-planting business, and forwarded their replies to the Commissioner, in which they all strongly supported his position—viz., that grog-shops were a fearful nuisance, and a source of all evil to the coolies who were influenced by them. However, Government was stronger than all the planters in the district; the grog-shops were re-established, and have been doing their deadly work ever since.

II.

I have been preaching on temperance and morality since last eight or nine years. I am now in the district of ——, where drunkenness has of late considerably increased, and where young and active men are dying in numbers of excessive drunkenness. Literally speaking, —— is a drinking district. The zemindars and their agents and relations, the police and the people, the teachers and their pupils, the rais and the ryots, and a large number of promising young men in the pay of the British Government are habitual drunkards. There is little hope for their body and soul. The devil of drunkenness reigns supreme here, and the Government and the leaders of public opinion connive at it. The late young Maharajah of —— was a notorious drunkard. He was a pest to native society. His vicious Highness was always found unsober and surrounded by two dozens of —— wretched drunkards. He taught hundreds of people to drink. He was under the tuition of a European Christian teacher. The Collector knew all this; the Lieutenant-Governor knew that the Raj had become a regular Pandemonium. The authorities laughed at it; the police winked at it. The Church is silent, and the ministers of religion are asleep. The evil has been allowed here to be spread, and spread under a Christian Government. I cannot write you more—my eyes are full of tears. Drunkenness has not only enhanced the rate of mortality; it has also brought woeful starvation unto the people. About half of the population of this district is actually struggling against poverty for existence. And why? Simply because they have fallen victims into the hand of drunkenness. The poor are reduced to mere skeletons, and the rich are lost to all sense of morality. You will find extreme poverty of blood in the body of the wealthy drunkards. I have travelled all over India twice.

PERNICIOUS LITERATURE.

SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of August 24, a correspondent, referring to the fearful harm caused by the dissemination of pernicious literature, asks for the suggestion of any practical methods by which the press may be purified and utilised in the name of the Lord for the counteraction of such evil. Your correspondent answers his own question, and himself, in my opinion, suggests the only practical method possible. He says: "It is to the Church of Christ that we must look to deal with this evil, for the power of God alone is able to cope with it."

He is right. A purified Press is essential, for you cannot utilise the Press in the name of the Lord until it be purified; and to purify the Press, you must first purify, or convert, the editors (Job xiv. 4; Ps. l. 16, 17). Hence, he that winneth, as he hath opportunity, (editors') souls is wise.

Yours truly, WILLIAM PIPER.

DID JESUS TEACH THE ATONEMENT?

SIR,—Will you allow me to ask one question with reference to "A Student's" letter? Could the Lord when addressing the two bewildered disciples on their way to Emmaus begin at Moses and all the prophets, expounding to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself, without teaching the Atonement? If there was no other passage in the Gospels bearing on the question, it would be simply idle with this before us to say the Lord did not teach the Atonement.—Yours truly,

J. J. SCROGGIE.

[The ministry of Jesus was linked with the former dispensation by his connection with John the Baptist; and with the Apostolic preaching and writings, by his commission to the twelve and the seventy, and by the descent of the Holy Spirit. To separate the life-ministry of the Christ Himself from that of the Apostles whom He had chosen, taught, and sent forth is unreasonable to the last degree.—ED.]

SIR,—I have been interested in reading the letters of "A Student," and of "H. D. B." in your poper, and, with your kind permission, would draw the attention of your readers to the "Bampton Lectures, 1864," on "The Progress of Doctrine in the New Testament" (Macmillan). "A Student" will there, I think, find his question fully answered, and it is besides a most valuable book for these days. Yours, &c., G. E. O.

[We have received another letter from "A Student," but no useful end would be attained by continuing the correspondence.]

ROMANISM AND SACERDOTALISM.

SIR,—I am glad to see that you continue to enlighten your readers as to the character and dangerous tendency of Romanism and Sacerdotalism. This is of immense importance, in consequence of the extraordinary ignorance in which the present generation has been brought up, as to the history and principles of Popery and Protestantism, most of our schools neglecting the subject altogether, while not a few use books which are calculated to misrepresent the controversy.

We all know that the main remedy for darkness is light, and that the Light of the Gospel is the great antidote to Popery. Accordingly, I flattered myself, as many others do, that, while furthering the work of evangelists and other ministers of the Gospel, we might leave to others the duty of controversy. But, from observation of what is going on around us, I see this was a mistake. The enemy is diligent in sowing tares, and our young people have not been taught to distinguish them from wheat. MARTIN HOPE SUTTON.

JEWISH IMMIGRATION has been checked, according to the British Consul at Jerusalem, by a regulation of the Porte, prohibiting Jews from settling in Palestine, and restricting their residence in the country to a period of three months.

COLPORTAGE AT THE CAPE.—Special efforts are being made to establish a system of Bible colportage by means of mule waggons in various parts of Cape Colony. Mr. Hannington has gone to Australia to obtain means for carryng out this Christian colportage in Africa as a memorial of the Bishop. He has already remitted £100 to the Cape for this object, and one waggon will soon be at work. The Bible Society is asked to assist the project substantially, as well as by supplies of Bibles at special reductions.

NO INSTITUTION CAN SUCCEED if it is misapplied; and those who have abused the institution of marriage doubtless must suffer. Better far to suffer patiently—through long, weary, thirsty, loveless years—than seek an escape in sin. The new sin may bring pleasures, but "at what a fearful cost to heart and soul these feverish and wandering gratifications are purchased—how poor the article, and how terrible the price!—a disenchanted world, a paralysed and threadbare soul, a past with no sweet and gentle memories, a future with no yearnings and no hopes." There is no need to judge harshly those who have fallen. Our penitent sisters may well be left to the daring mercy of Jesus Christ. But she is no friend to her sex who would make the barriers of chastity less strong, less lofty, less thorny, or less insurmountable. There is a great deal written by women, and, we are afraid, read by women, now a days which ought to be answered, not by argument, but by a storm of fire.—British Weekly.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, September 23.

The Death and Burial of Moses.

Deut. xxxiv. 1—12; Golden Text, Prov. iv. 18.

Teachers of this lesson should take special pains to master all its details, both the geographical and the historical. They should study it with a map, in order to make a vivid lesson.

Intervening History.—Our last lesson left Israel in the Wilderness of Paran, on the extreme southern border of Promised Land. They might have moved northward, the shortest route; but they determined to enter the land from the south-east, and so planned to march round the southern end of the Dead Sea, up its eastern shore, to the eastern bank of Jordon. But the Edomites refused them passage through their territory; so they were obliged to travel southward, down the Arabah (the long valley that bounds the western slope of the mountains of Edom, and joins the Dead Sea to the eastern arm of the Red Sea at Ezion Geber). It was during this journey that Aaron died, and was buried in Mount Hor. During this journey, too, the people murmured again, and were attacked by fiery serpents, the same, no doubt, that are peculiar to that locality, according to modern travellers. Turning northward at Ezion Geber, they marched to the land east of Jordan; defeated first Sihon, King of the Amorites, who held the greater part of that territory, through his recent victory over Moab; and then Og, King of Bashan. Having thus gained the whole of the eastern bank of Jordan, they encamped opposite Jericho, in the plains of Moab, a strip of land four or five miles broad, lying between Jordan on the west, and the mountain of Moab, which towered like a cliff-wall, to the east. It was during their encampment here that Balaam, standing on three separate peaks of the mountains of Moab (the second of these being Pisgah itself), one after the other, prophesied blessing to Israel (Num. xxii.—xxv.). Here, too, occurred the event of our lesson, just as the fourtieth year since the Exodus was about to close.

Moab was Lot's eldest son; so the Moabites and Israelites were related. Mountain of Nebo, to the Top of Pisgah.—We learn from Deut. xxxii. 49 that the whole range was called Abarim, and that Nebo was a separate mountain in it. Pisgah, the bright, was probably the name for the highest peak of Nebo. The Lord shewed him.—From such a height, and in the marvellously clear air of that land, a vast prospect was possible; yet, it is likely that supernatural vision was granted to Moses. "The Lord shewed him" Gilead, the high, grassy downs east of Jordan—the country of Bashan; Dan, north of Gilead; Naphtali, west of Sea of Galilee, and in the North of Palestine; Ephraim and Manasseh, lying in the centre, and reaching from Jordan to the great sea. Utmost Sea, the Mediterranean, fifty miles distant; the South—i.e., the Negab, or South Country; Zoar, on the south-eastern shore of the Dead Sea.

Observe the nobleness with which Moses met his punishment. Almost the whole of Deuteronomy was written by him in view of his approaching death, so that we can almost read his inmost heart. He had been suddenly denied one of the greatest and most long-cherished purposes of his life—had been sternly rebuked. But there is no resentment —indeed, no thought of self at all. He is full of God's goodness and concern for God's people. His only concern is to make the most of the few weeks of life that remain—to do his utmost to prepare them for their great future. He does this as earnestly as he would have done had he been about to share in that future. "In all his career there is nothing grander than its ending."

So Moses the Servant of the Lord died there in the Land of Moab.—Seek to grasp the sublimity of this event. He has now finished every preparation, written his pathetic history of the wanderings (Deut. i.—xxx.); given his last charge to both the people, and to Joshua (Deut. xxxi.); sung his glorious death-song, "the Magna Charta of Prophecy"; blessed the tribes one by one (Deut. xxxiii.); and bidden his last farewell. The sublimity of the mountains harmonises with the even greater sublimity of the man and of the scene. See him as he goes up the steep, with eye undimmed, and strength unabated; goes up alone to meet God and die! What a glorious life-history behind him! What solid work accomplished! What glory to be inherited!

He goes alone to meet God in death. Yet not alone, just because God was with him. Probably, the love of God never so near and comforting as then. The exiled child meets his Father at last. Dr. James Hamilton suggests that probably the vision of the earthly Land of Promise changed while he gazed, as in a dissolving view, into the vision of heaven, so that death to him was a transformation scene—that his spirit entered upon the heavenly realities before it knew it had parted with earth.

Alone in death.—This is a great point in our lesson. Everyone must die alone, apart from all our fellows. Alone, we must each appear before God. Are we ready? Yet, not alone if we know and love Jesus. He is the only One to help us then. Do we love Him. Are we ready to die alone.

The comparison between Balaam and Moses is very suggestive. Only a few months ago Balaam stood on three points of this same mountain range, the second of these being Pisgah (Num. xxiii. 10, 14, 27, and 28). While standing on the first he exclaimed: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." He was a man of giant mind, and glorious power, and was possessed, too, of the spirit of prophecy. But he loved self more than God; so, knowing the right, he chose the wrong. He wished the godly man's blessed death; but he did not will to live the godly life. He died soon after a dishonoured death (Num. xxxi. 8), fighting among the enemies of God's people. Compare this with the death of Moses. Whence the difference? The one wished; the other willed. The one intended only; the other did. "The way to hell is paved with good intentions."

And He buried him.—"Moses is alone in this honour. The Son of God was buried by sinful men; Moses was buried by Jehovah."—Ellicott. What became of his body? Was it raised again, like our Lord's? Surely Jude (ver. 9) suggests a struggle for his body between Michael and the devil; while his appearance in glorified bodily form at the Transfiguration, along with Elijah, who had never died, gives very considerable support to the belief that God raised his body from the grave, and glorified it.

See in Moses how the desires of a good man are granted, imperfectly in life, but gloriously after death. Moses once prayed that he might see God's glory. The prayer was answered, but not fully. He also prayed that he might enter the good land. This, too, was answered in part only. He was allowed to see it, but might not enter the land. Fifteen centuries after, he entered the land, and trod the Mount of Transfiguration. There, too, he saw God's glory in the face of Jesus Christ. "Delight thyself also in the Lord, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart."

The supreme lesson of this story is the blessedness of living a good man's life, and of dying a good man's death.

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
  On yon side Jordan's wave,
In a vale in the land of Moab,
  There lies a lonely grave.
And no man dug that sepulchre,
  And no man saw it e'er,
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
  And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
  That ever passed on earth,
But no man heard the tramping,
  Or saw the train go forth.
Noiselessly as the daylight
  Comes when the night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
  Grows into the great sun.

Noiselessly as the spring-time
  Her crown of verdure weaves,
And all the trees on all the hills
  Open their thousand leaves;
So, without sound of music,
  Or voice of them that wept,
Silently down from the mountain's crown
  The great procession swept.

And had he not high honour?
  The hillside for his pall,
To lie in state while angels wait,
  With stars for tapers tall,
And the dark rock-pines like tossing plumes
  Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand in that lonely land
  To lay him in his grave.

Oh, lonely tomb in Moab's land!
  Oh, dark Beth-peor's hill!
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
  And teach them to be still.
God hath his mysteries of grace,
  Ways that we cannot tell;
He hides them deep, like the secret sleep
  Of him He loved so well.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, September 23.

The Rich Man and Lazarus—Despised but Glorified.—Luke xvi. 19—31.

(1) Note the Condition of the two Men in this Life (vv. 19—21).—(a) Their names.—That of the rich man not known. "Dives," the Latin for "a rich man." Not written in "Lamb's book of life," therefore not worthy mentioning (comp. "The name of the wicked shall rot," Prov. x. 7). The beggar, "called Lazarus" (comp. "by name," John x. 3. See also Isa. xlix. 16; Phil. iv. 3; Luke x. 20). (b) Their raiment.—Rich man "purple," &c. So also the Harlot of Babylon (Rev. xvii. 4). Fine feathers make fine birds, but not new creatures. The rich man had not on the "fine linen" of Rev. xix. 8, or "the wedding garment" of Matt. xxii. 11. The beggar was probably arrayed in rags. Yet was he clothed with "the beautiful garments" of Isa. lii. 1. (c) Their fare.—Rich man "fared sumptuously every day." Possible monotony and small sense of enjoyment in this. A pampered body and a neglected soul (comp. Paul's "I keep my body under," 1 Cor. ix. 27). Trace difference between eating to live, and living to eat. The beggar desired to be fed on crumbs. Nature asserts its claims in the saint as well as in the sinner. We must remember this (James ii. 16). Yet was the beggar better fed than Dives (see John vi. 58; Isa. lv. 1). (d) Their possessions.—"A rich man." Wealth is not a sin, providing two questions are answered satisfactorily—how did you get it? and, what are you doing with it? Yet is wealth often a snare (1 Tim. vi. 9). Temporal wealth went hand in hand with spiritual poverty (Rev. iii. 17). Lazarus was a beggar, because he couldn't work, not because he wouldn't (see "full of sores," ver. 20). A rare thing to find a saint begging (Ps. xxxvii. 25). But the beggar was rich towards God (James ii. 5).

(2) Note the Condition of the Two Men at the Close of Life (ver. 22).—(a) The beggar died. —It would appear that he died first. Mercy lingered with the rich man (2 Pet. iii. 9). Carried by angels. See the interest of angels in the welfare of God's people (Ps. xxxiv. 7; Heb. i. 14). (b) The rich man died, and was buried.—Riches cannot secure exemption from death (comp. Queen Elizabeth's "Millions of money for an inch of time"). The rich man died, we may well believe, quite unprepared for death.

(3) Note the Condition of the Two Men in the Life Beyond (vv. 23, 31).—The rich man went to "hades," generally believed to be the intermediate state between death and the judgment. Wherever it may have been it was a place (a) of torment (ver. 23: comp. Rev. xiv. 11). (b) Of unsatisfied desire (ver. 24). (c) Where he learned to pray (ver. 24, "He cried"). (d) Where no saint could help him.—"Send Lazarus." (e) From which there was no escape (ver. 26, "gulf fixed"). (f) In which his nature was unchanged.—See his scepticism in the "Nay, father Abraham." (g) In which he was led to feel compassion for the godless (ver. 28). —The beggar was carried to Abraham's bosom. See here (a) Place of Rest (comp. Heb. iv. 9). (b) Place of Security (comp. Rev. iii. 12). (c) Place of Blest Society.—Abraham, &c. (comp. Heb. vi. 12). Point out the way to this blessedness (John xiv. 6; Rev. vii. 14).

TENT WORK.—We have closed the Gospel tent services for the season here with a fellowship tea-meeting for the converts and friends interested in the work. We have experienced great blessing this summer, and many of the visitors have already returned to their distant homes to live for Jesus. We have had five tents in service for the King during the season, and hundreds will have cause to praise God for salvation's blessing received under their canvas roofs. J. A. Vicary.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Durham has written a letter to the incumbents in his diocese, inviting them to read the Lambeth Encyclical to their congregations on Sunday next.

The list of missionaries in the new Report of the Church Missionary Society, shows that on June 1 there were 333 European missionaries on the Society's staff viz., 261 clergymen, 40 laymen, and 32 ladies.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gladstone attended a meeting at Hawarden last week, at which Bishop Smythies gave an address on behalf of the Universities Mission to Central Africa. After the Bishop's remarks, Mr. Gladstone made a short speech, in which he highly praised the work accomplished by the Mission among the natives of Central Africa.

The missionaries of the London Jews' Society in London have made arrangements for a number of special sermons to Jews to be preached simultaneously in various churches all over London, wherever any number of Jews are to be found, during their approaching Feast of Tabernacles. Most of them will be held on the evening of the 23rd inst.; two or three had to be arranged for other days.

A Conference on Missions is being arranged in connection with the harvest festival at St. Mary's, Spring Grove, Isleworth, for Sunday and Monday next. On Sunday Rev. W. Hay Aitken will preach at 11 and 6.30, and a children's service will be conducted at 3.30 by Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army. On the following day Rev. R. D. Monro, diocesan missioner for Bath and Wells, will give devotional addresses at 8 and 11.30 a.m., and 5.30 p.m., and there will be through the day a series of conferences on the practical and devotional sides of mission work.

SALVATION ARMY.

Ninety officers were commissioned last week from training at headquarters.

One hundred persons professed salvation the first week of the Army's invasion of Jönköping, in Sweden.

The work in Rome goes on. Sinners are getting saved, and some are boldly withstanding the efforts of priestcraft to entice them back.

In New Zealand six different plots of building ground have recently been offered free for the erection of barracks, and in one instance the building materials, and the labour also freely given.

A coloured sailor converted through the instrumentality of the Army, has conducted a most successful mission amongst the Kaffirs around Algoa Bay, and has now been appointed for special work amongst the Kimberley native miners.

Thirteen ministers attended a Holiness Convention in Tasmania. The whole island is getting more into sympathy with the Salvation Army. In a small township of six hundred people one hundred pounds was subscribed in one afternoon for a new barracks.

METHODIST.

Mr. William Sampson has concluded a special mission in Malvern. The services have been much blessed, a number of persons having been truly born again.

The stone-laying of the Wesley Memorial Chapel at Epworth, the birthplace of the Wesleys, will take place on Thursday next. The President of the Wesleyan Conference, Revs. Chas. Garrett, T. Champness, H. J. Pope, J. E. Clapham, and other ministers will take part.

Work has been commenced at a new centre in connection with the Birmingham Central Mission, Newtown-road Chapel having been added to the plant after some alteration. Rev. J. G. Mantle is the superintendent minister. After the service on Sunday week, when the new work was started, there were several cases of conversion.

On Tuesday week, in Trinity Methodist New Connexion Church, Forest-hill, a valedictory meeting in connection with the departure of Miss Waller and Miss Stephens for China was held. Rev. W. J. Townsend, the missionary secretary, spoke of the difficulty in reaching Chinese women, and the necessity of sending out lady missionaries.

The Minutes of the Wesleyan Conference are now in circulation. There are 545,290 members at home and abroad, and 48,951 on trial; the ministers fully ordained are 2,225. The Australian Church numbers 79,135, and the Canadian Church 200,479. During the year 40 ministerial probationers have been received into full connexion, of whom four are Hindoos, one Chinese, three Africans, and one German; there are 263 juniors still on probation. The local preachers number 15,557; lay readers of classes, 24,877; ministerial 1,262; Society classes, 27,266; junior members, 57,100.

During the time that Rev. M. G. Pearse has been taking both the morning and the evening services at St. James's Hall there have been immense congregations. Multitudes have frequently been turned away from the doors at the evening services. Mr. Hughes preached at St. James's Hall last Sunday, morning and evening, and will continue to take both Sunday services during Mr. Pearse's absence. Mr. Pearse expects to return on Thursday, October 4, and to resume his Sunday morning service on October 7, on which day Mr. Hughes will also recommence the Sunday afternoon conference. Several new developments of the Mission are being arranged.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Norman Penny, late of Hawes, has joined the home mission staff, and will reside for a time in Gloucester. Help is invited in Hawes.

Preaching at Lake Bluff, from the text "How shall I curse whom God hath not," Bishop Fallows declared himself in favour of woman's ministry in the Church.

George Wood, of Luton, has been engaged in Gospel work at West Hartlepool, and J. B. Hodgkin and Fredk. Sessions in similar service at Great Ayton, North Yorkshire.

The very sudden death, on the 2nd inst., of Alfred Backhouse, of Pilmore Hall, Darlington, will be deeply regretted by many. He was sixty-six years old, and will be much missed.

Howard Nicholson, late clerk of Canada Yearly Meeting, after twenty years residence in the Dominion, has returned to England. He will be much missed in America, but there is plenty of need, and of work at home.

The Foreign Mission Committee has accepted Sarah R. Pike, of Dublin, for zenana work in India, after completing her training next year; and Joseph Radley, jun., of Lisburn, is soon to proceed to Madagascar as teacher at the capital.

At the Western Yearly Meeting's Bible-school Conference, on the 3rd ultimo, a remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit was experienced. The closing session was one of praise, and 76 testimonies, 8 songs, and one prayer were offered amid deep feeling.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist utters a protest against the selection of Rev. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, to preach the opening sermon at the Autumnal Session of the Baptist Union. Mr. Horton's recent work on "Inspiration" is regarded as very unsound.

The corner-stone of the Adoniram Judson Memorial Church in Mandalay, Burmah, was laid on August 9, the one hundredth anniversary of the famous pioneer missionary's birthday. An old Christian Burmese woman, whom Dr. Judson baptized, has given 3000 rupees, about £300, towards the memorial.

Mainly through the energies of Rev. W. Hughes, pastor of the churches at Old Colwyn and Llanelian, formerly missionary on the Congo, a Baptist chapel has been built at Colwyn Bay, North Wales. In the morning and evening, services are conducted in English, chiefly for the benefit of visitors, and in the afternoon a service in Welsh is held.

The Baptist Missionary Society have been again saddened by receiving tidings of the death of another of their missionaries on the Congo. Rev. Michael Richards was in bad health, and had just started on the voyage home to England with the intention of recruiting, when he was stricken down, and taken to his heavenly home. He had only been in the mission field for three years, and had laboured with much zeal and devotion.

In connection with the Baptist Tabernacle at Tamworth a new mission-room has been opened in the village of Kettlebrook, there being no place of worship there. The mission is the outcome of open-air services and cottage meetings, commenced about two months ago by the Tabernacle Mission band. The meetings have been crowded week after week, the greatest enthusiasm prevailing. The friends are sanguine that a good work will be accomplished.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbyterian congregation of Harrington have erected and opened a new mission-hall at Distington, in which to carry on evangelistic work.

A sum of £200 has been forwarded through Professor Calderwood to the Foreign Mission Board of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland by a gentleman in the United States, on behalf of the work being done in Spain in promoting evangelical religion.

Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kensington Park-road, W., has been closed during the past five weeks for repairs. It will be reopened on Sept. 23, when Dr. Sinclair Paterson will preach. Dr. Adolph Saphir will occupy the pulpit on the morning of Sept. 30.

The North London Presbytery will meet in Regent-square Church on Friday, October 5, at half-past six, for the induction of Dr. Oswald Dykes to the Principalship of the Presbyterian College in London; the inaugural lecture will be delivered by him immediately thereafter.

At the last meeting of the Edinburgh Established Church Presbytery, Rev. Mr. Arthur gave notice of the following motion:—"That this Presbytery overture the General Assembly to instruct the Foreign Mission Committee to discontinue, as speedily as may be, to devote any portion of their funds to university education in India, and that all their missionaries henceforth follow the example of Scripture in simply preaching the Gospel."

Almost simultaneously, as the telegram announcing the death of Rev. W. H. Stevenson in Santalia was received by the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Mission Committee, Rev. Arch. Templeton, M.D., who was formerly at the head of the Church's Santal Mission for five years, and who during the last few years has been working in connection with the Glasgow Medical Mission, offered to return to India at his own charges. The Committee gladly accepted his offer, thanking God and taking courage.

A painful incident occurred at a meeting of the Manchester Presbytery on Monday. During the proceedings Rev. R. T. Cunningham, of Bowdon, complained of the closeness of the room, and then he was suddenly seized with illness, and, falling unconscious, was carried out. Whilst medical aid was being called in, prayer for his recovery was offered by the assembly. Two medical men immediately arrived; but they were too late, as Mr. Cunningham had breathed his last. His death was attributed to heart disease.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At Bunyan Meeting, Bedford, on Sunday week, Rev. Dr. John Brown delivered an impressive address on "The Influence of John Bunyan." The church was never so crowded since Mr. Spurgeon preached there some years ago; aisles, platform, vestry, and pulpit stairs were all occupied.

Rev. Thomas Johnstone lately entered upon the third year of his ministry at Salem Congregational Church, Knottingley. At a meeting held it was stated that fifty persons have been received into church fellowship during the present pastorate, and the various branches of work are in a flourishing condition.

During the summer an open-air service has been regularly conducted on the "Slopes" at Buxton by Rev. R. Rew, the Congregational minister, aided by a band of young people and others. On Sunday week the work for this season was brought to a close, when short, earnest addresses were delivered. This service has been carried on with much vigour for three successive seasons.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Richard Murphy, evangelist, has concluded a five nights' mission in the new hall, Bocton-street, Glasgow. The meetings were well attended. The Gospel was faithfully proclaimed, and proved the power of God unto salvation in the experience of some. Much blessing was received by believers. The meetings will be continued for a fortnight by local speakers.

Since the Shields (Glasgow) branch of the Railway Mission changed their place of meeting to Clutha Dining Halls, the Lord has been greatly blessing them. The children's forenoon service has largely increased, as also has Mr. W. S. Ross's Bible-class. The Sabbath evening meetings are always filled, and not a few have received blessing and salvation. The Gospel temperance work goes on steadily.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. J. S. Crawford has been ordained by the Presbytery of Belfast as one of the General Assembly's missionaries to the Jews.

The Methodist mission tent is pitched at present at Tandragee, co. Armagh. The meetings are well attended, and it is hoped much good will be done.

The Belfast Female Mission continues to do a good work. During the past month, forty-eight poor persons were relieved; sixty-four sick persons were visited; eighty-eight prayer-meetings were held, and 1354 visits were paid.

Two well-known and distinguished Irishmen, Rev. Dr. Hall, of New York, and Rev. William Arthur, of London, are at present on a visit to Ireland. Both have preached several times to large audiences, with great acceptance and power.

An anonymous friend, a retired merchant, has commissioned Rev. George Magill, of Belfast, to order 600 copies of Mr. Spurgeon's work, "All of Grace," for gratuitous distribution among the ministers of the General Assembly.

A successful series of evangelistic meetings, lasting for six weeks, has been held in a tent at Randalstown, co. Antrim. The services were conducted by the evangelists, Messrs. Nesbitt and Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society. Christians were greatly revived and quickened, and many were led to decision for Christ.

The Irish Temperance League is arranging to put forth vigorous efforts to put down intemperance during the coming winter. In addition to its ordinary agents it has secured for special meetings Messrs. William Bell, of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union; E. T. Smith, the well-known reciter of Gough's orations; William Johnston, M.P., and others.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. G. Scott, of Ramsey, Isle of Man, for over forty years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Rev. Thomas Chambers, rector of Halewood since 1864.—Rev. Richard Green, pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, Morley.—Rev. John Smeaton, parish minister of Tulliallan, Kincardine-on-Forth, N.B.—Mr. Henry Norman Angus, youngest son of Rev. Dr. Joseph Angus, principal of Regent's Park Baptist College.—Rev. G. M. St. Martin Ritchie, chaplain of the forces at Canterbury garrison.—Rev. W. Thomas, minister of the Baptist Chapel, Blackwood, Monmouthshire.—Rev. Samuel Simpson, of Lytham, for over fifty years a minister of the Wesleyan Connexion.—Rev. D. Fleming, B.D., Presbyterian minister, Rathfriland, co. Down, after a protracted illness.—Rev. William Hughes, rector of Llanvechell, Bangor, one of the leaders of the evangelical party in North Wales.

La Mancha, Spain.—In December, 1887, a house was presented by a Spanish colporteur to Mr. W. Greene—Oriolet, Loughton, Essex—for the purpose of building a Gospel hall. The total cost will be £220, of which £190 has been subscribed. Mr. Greene appeals for help towards the remainder.

CHRISTIAN UNION IN JAPAN.—A large meeting of the Evangelical Alliance of Japan was held in Tokio in May last, when the subject of union of all the branches of the Christian Church in Japan was discussed. "From what I could gather," writes Rev. Henry Evington, of the Church Missionary Society, "the general feeling was that of a desire for such union in theory, but at the same time a sense of shrinking from the carrying of it out as a practical matter."

BELGIUM.—The Missionary Church recently held its annual Synod at Charleroi. During the year about five hundred new members had been won from Romanism or infidelity. Twenty-six Churches, composed almost entirely of the working-classes, are attached to the Synod. There are over five hundred voluntary lay workers engaged in preaching at different stations. Thousands of tracts and Scripture portions had also been distributed, and a temperance society established.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A memoir of the late Mr. John Cassell, a temperance reformer when to be so was unpopular, is expected shortly.

The Saturday evening Gospel temperance concerts at the Central Hall, Manchester, so successful last year, are to be resumed for the winter season.

During the "Wakes" season around Manchester, the city missionaries hold open-air meetings in the various localities, and strenuously inculcate total abstinence.

The Mayor of Manchester has strongly condemned the practice of canvassing magistrates in favour of applications for new licences, transfers, and alterations.

Under the auspices of the Metropolitan Meat Market Teetotal Association, the first of a series of temperance meetings has been held at the Fox and Knot Mission Hall, Charterhouse-street.

Mr. J. Scott-Banks, chairman of the Flintshire Quarter Sessions, has expressed a strong opinion that a man who has walked three miles simply to get drink cannot be called a "bond-fide traveller."

Mr. Smith, the well-known temperance evangelist of Dumfries, has closed a very successful mission in the New Hall, Birkenhead. Great good has been done in conversions as well as a number of pledges taken.

A Liverpool temperance worker, in memory of a much-loved daughter, has presented the National Temperance League with a handsome sum for founding prizes for the pupil teachers in Liverpool schools.

The Great Northern Railway Company have objected to the granting of a licence for a house near their Doncaster depôt, the objection being raised by the company purely out of regard for the well-being of their work-people.

Preaching at St. Mary's Church, Southampton, lately, Canon Wilberforce denounced the Southampton Board of Guardians for having refused the offer of the Band of Hope Union to give temperance instruction to the workhouse children.

At the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, Lambeth, a "temperance demonstration" was held by way of inaugurating a new series of temperance gatherings, to be held each Friday evening at the hall during the autumn and winter.

In a Board School for Jews, at Whitechapel, Mr. F. R. Cheshire, of the National Temperance League, recently delivered one of his illustrated lectures, reports of which were handed to the teacher by about forty boys; and we learn that several of the boys have, since that time, joined local bands of hope—"a quite unknown occurrence among Jews."

A novel temperance crusade is carried on at Leamington under the presidency of the mayor. About a score of temperance workers who are cyclists have formed a club in order to promote temperance in the surrounding villages. They ride out together, headed by a bugler; forming their machines into a ring, they have a right good open-air meeting.

An addition has been made to the establishments founded in the Metropolis by Pearce's Coffee and Refreshment Rooms Company, Limited. The new building is situated in Stamford-street, Blackfriars, and is of spacious dimensions, besides being fitted up in an attractive style. In addition to a coffee palace proper, there is a large and well-appointed hotel, provided with reading-room, &c. The hotel is named "The Blackwood," in compliment to Sir A. Blackwood, secretary of the General Post Office; who is an ardent supporter of the temperance and coffee palace movement.

FOREIGN.

The immigrant, as he sets foot in New York, almost under the shadow of "Liberty Enlightening the World," must run the gauntlet of nearly half a thousand of the most desperate, unprincipled wretches in Amerca. These men are the keepers of the saloons and so-called "boarding-houses" which cluster so thickly within rifle-shot of Castle Garden. Every device which a wicked ingenuity can invent is brought to bear upon the unsophisticated immigrant to entice him into these dens of vice.

Hyde Park, the largest suburb of Chicago, has gained a sweeping victory over the saloon keepers relating to the closing of the saloons on Sunday. The verdict asked for was given in every trial. A number of saloon keepers voluntarily promised to make no effort to evade the law, and to close on Sunday.

A correspondent in China, in a letter to The Methodist Times, argues that Chinese Christians ought to be allowed to use tea at the administration of the Lord's Supper. He says this opinion is endorsed by the Church of England Bishop of Hong Kong, and some of the most enlightened and experienced missionaries.

"THE CHILDREN'S BREAD."

September 10, 1888.

Dear Christian Friends,

I have now a larger family to support than ever before. Nearly THREE THOUSAND Homeless "Waifs and Strays," the majority of them orphans, are at present under my care.

God has sent to my doors very literally of late, "the lame, the halt, and the blind": some of them mere Infants, crippled for life, quite blind, or afflicted with incurable disease, have been rescued from the common lodging-houses and the lowest purlieus, not only of London, but of large towns throughout England and Scotland. Many little girls have quite recently been snatched from nameless degradation, and boys from the custody of thieves and evil persons seeking their ruin.

Throughout the summer months this BLESSED WORK OF RESCUE has never ceased, day or night, and now, as I have said, my family is larger than ever before, and, as may be imagined, it is no easy or light thing to supply their daily wants. God's goodness has been unceasing, but I have learnt that He uses the instrumentality of even such a statement as this, to unite the hearts of His people everywhere in increased love for, and sympathy with, HIS LITTLE ONES under my care.

For FOOD ALONE our daily need is quite £100, and during the past three weeks I have on many days been sorely pressed to meet the numerous claims which cannot be avoided.

The month of September is always one of special burden-bearing, I will not say of anxious care, but of more than usual exercise and trial of faith; and this year, owing to the larger numbers to be provided for, the sense of need is even more deeply felt.

ONE HUNDRED LITTLE GIRLS will, I hope, leave for Canada on the 20th of this month. This will be my last party of Emigrants for the year, and will bring the total number of trained boys and girls Emigrated to Canada during 1888 up to about 510. I have not yet all the means required to pay the travelling and outfit expenses of this last party, and I shall indeed be thankful if it is laid upon the hearts of some of God's people to send me the £9, which will defray the entire cost of a single child's emigration.

For all God's goodness to my large family, I would give Him, now and always, grateful praise, and to the thousands of readers of The Christian who for years have encouraged me by loving and generous help, I desire to express my cordial acknowledgments, while at the same time I seek a continuance of their prayerful sympathy and loving remembrance of my poor bairns.

Ever sincerely yours,

In the Service of Christ's Little Ones,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

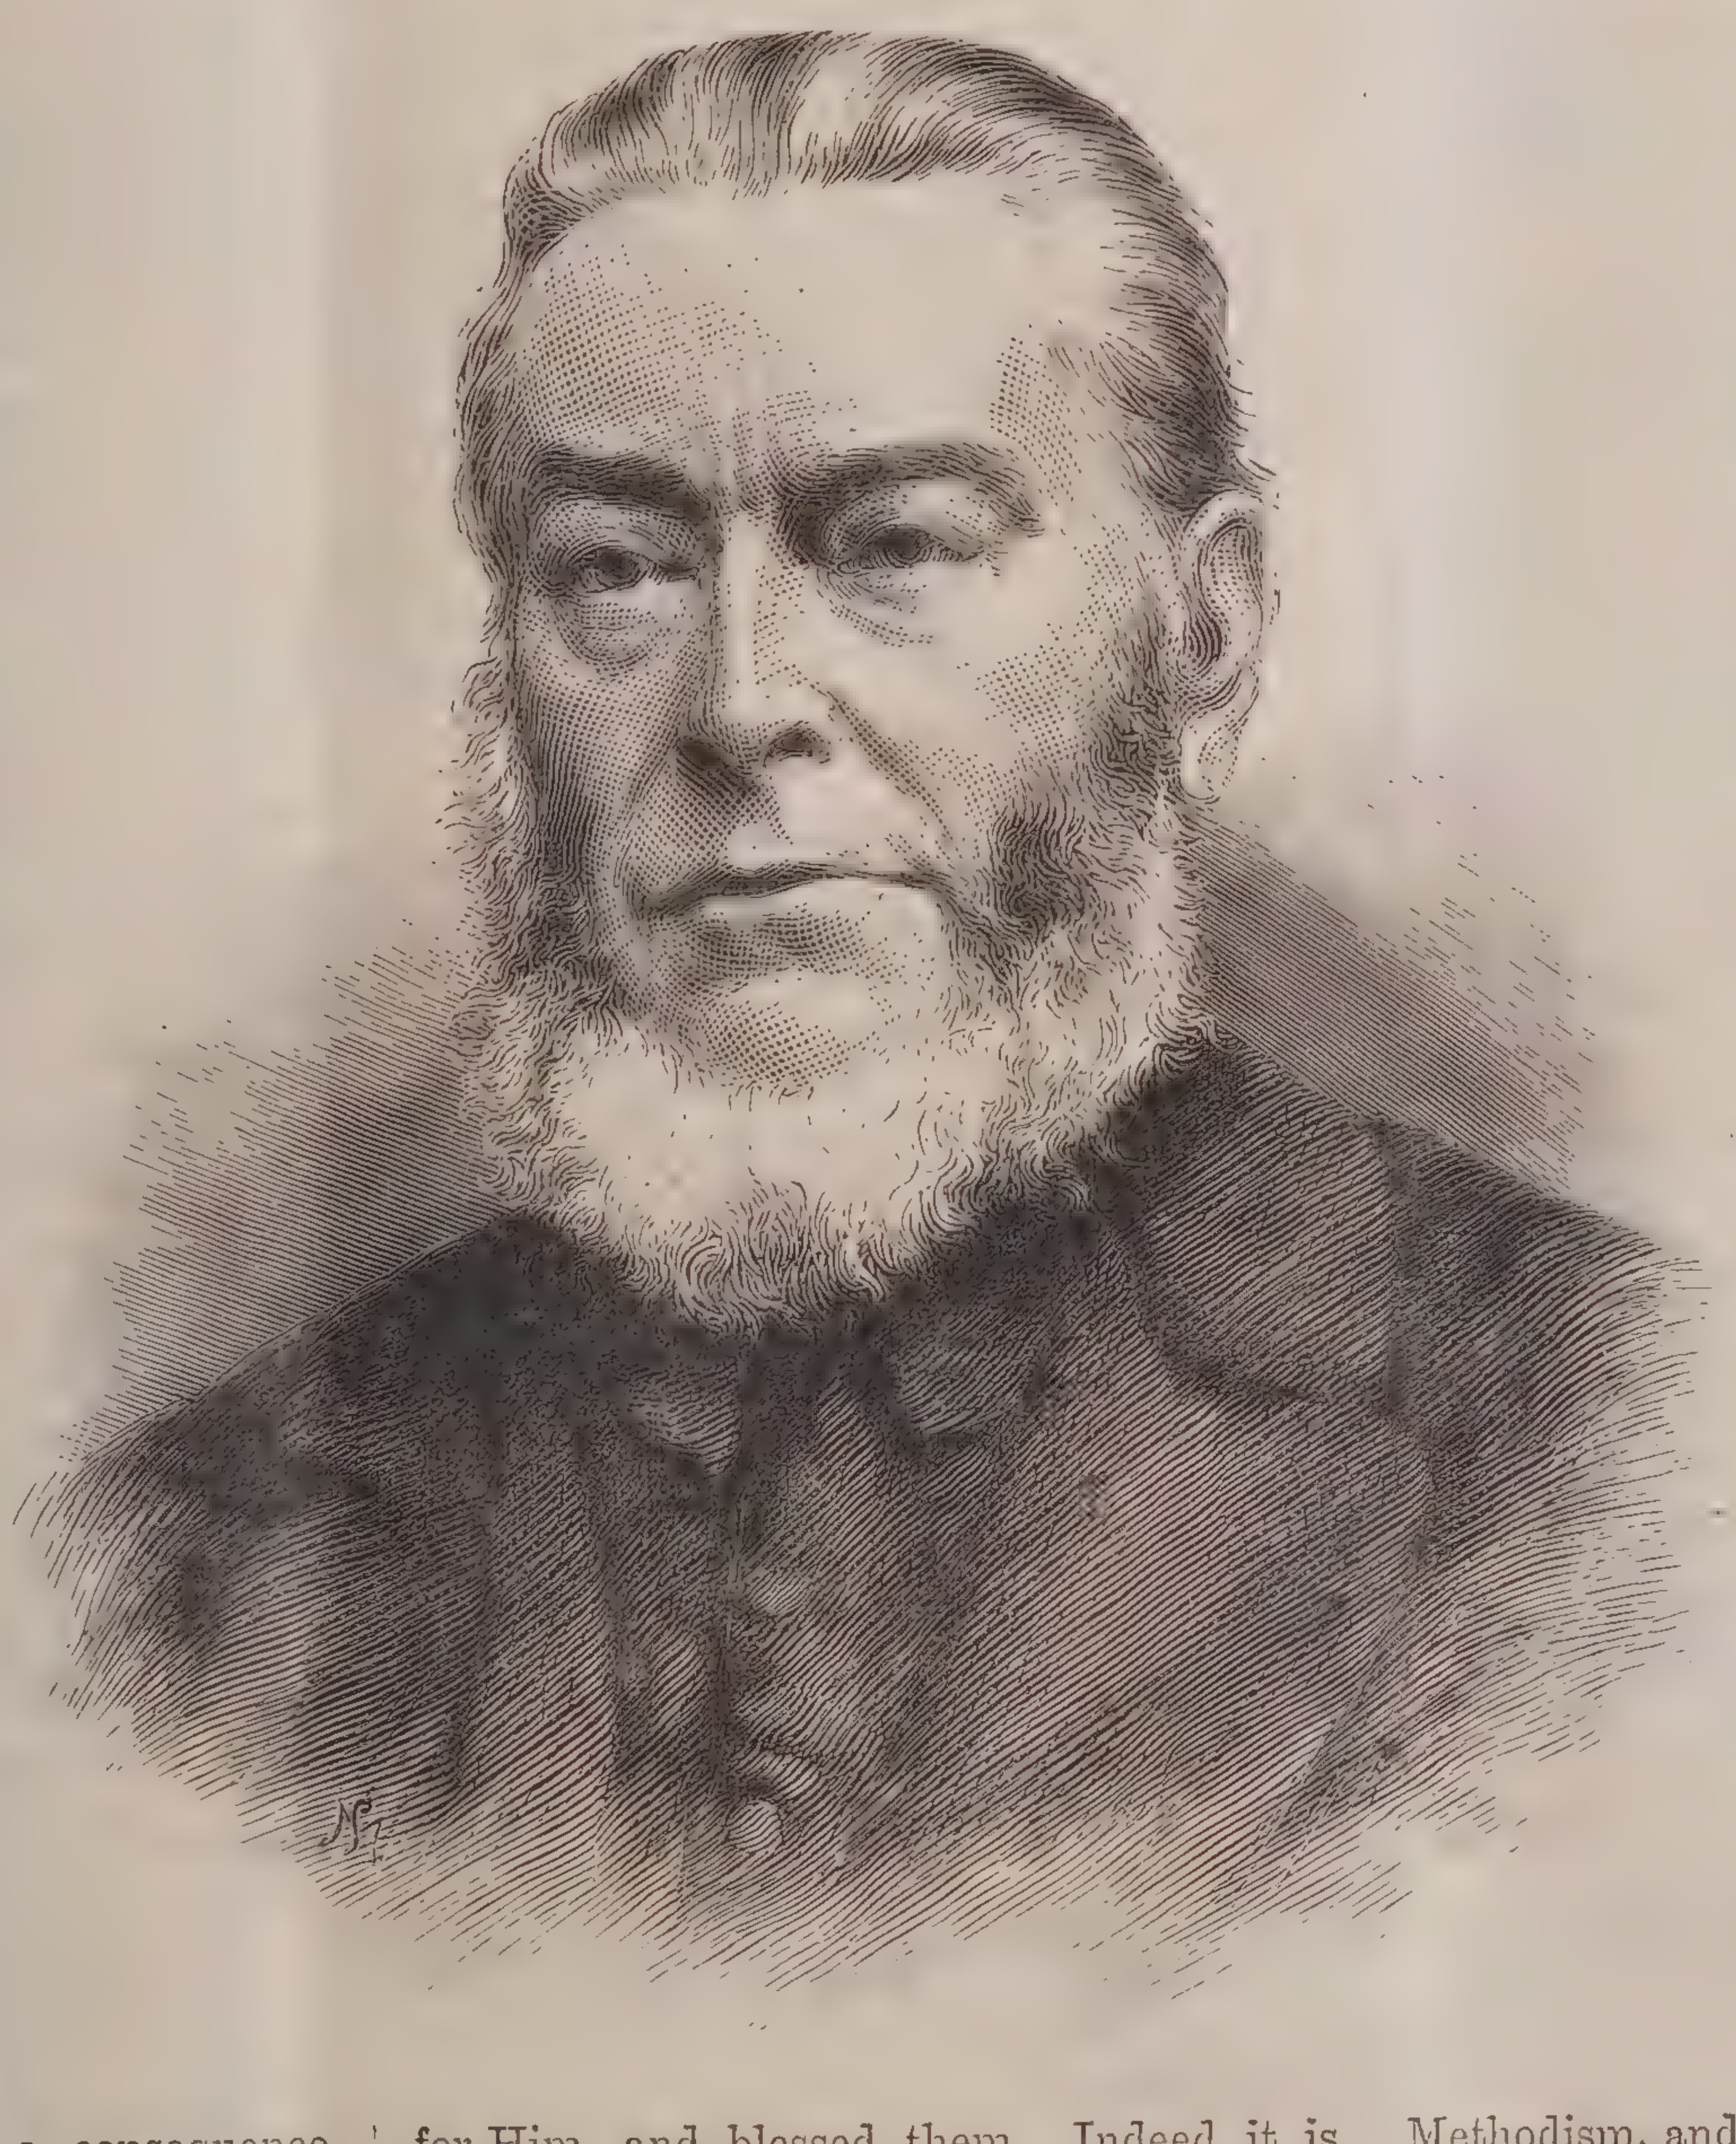
MR. PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.,

The Christian Naturalist.

"WHAT is your life? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Another cloud has drifted across this thirsty world, and disappeared below the horizon towards the sun-rising. Some clouds, alas! are "clouds without water, carried about of winds"; having no certain course; doing no beneficent work on earth; but Philip Henry Gosse, who has so recently finished his course with joy, and passed away from us, was not so. Of him it may be said with truth that his teaching "dropped as the rain," that his speech "distilled as the dew," "as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." Blessed be God, that He does give gifts unto men, and that such men as he was are among the most precious!



PHILIP HENRY GOSSE was born at Worcester in 1810. His family removed in his early infancy to Poole, Dorset, where he spent all the days of his boyhood and youth until he was about seventeen years of age. Concerning that period of his life there is little worth recording. He seems, when quite a boy, to have given evidence of his taste for natural history; making collections of butterflies and other insects. His parents were godly people, associated with one of the Nonconformist churches; but whatever religious impressions were produced at that time on the boy's heart were merely emotional, and, as a consequence, shallow and transitory.

In 1827 he went in a mercantile capacity to Newfoundland, and here it was that, after having lived for two or three years according to the lusts of the flesh, he found, or rather was found by, that Saviour who was able to deliver him from the guilt and the power of sin. He was then about nineteen years of age. Being full of zeal, he soon desired to tell others of the salvation which he himself had experienced, and became a Wesleyan local preacher. He had, of course, little experience and still less knowledge at that time, and what he preached was, as he himself expressed it, "poor stuff." Nevertheless, He who giveth more grace no doubt accepted his public efforts to witness for Him, and blessed them. Indeed, it is quite possible that such early, clumsy, blundering efforts to glorify God, often made at the expense of much self-mortification and great mental perturbation, are most highly esteemed by Him who accepteth "according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

It was in Newfoundland that he first began to occupy his leisure hours in collecting insects, studying their various forms and transformations, and making drawings of them. After residing in Newfoundland for eight years he visited Lower Canada, and for a time engaged in agricultural pursuits with his brother, still directing his attention to zoology generally, but especially to entomology, also preaching the Gospel as the Lord gave him opportunity. Here he continued for three years, but not finding farming operations remunerative or altogether to his taste, he determined to give all his attention to natural history as a profession and means of livelihood. Leaving Canada, he travelled through the United States, and resided in Alabama for a year, where he collected the materials for his work, "Letters from Alabama on Natural History." At this period he experienced what he described as a second conversion, and consecrating himself afresh to God, he determined more than ever, by his help, to yield himself up to do his will. A school for boys which he opened here, with his zoological and other studies, kept him fully occupied.

In 1839 he returned to England, and until 1840 was engaged in writing "The Canadian Naturalist," which he published during that year. From that time until 1844 he resided with his father and mother at Hackney, where he fell in with Christian friends who had recently withdrawn from the Church of England. With them he daily studied the Scriptures, and was thus led to dissever his connection with Methodism, and to cast in his lot with those known as "Brethren." The reading of Habershon's "Historical Exposition of the Apocalypse" appears to have made a great impression on him in deciding him to adopt those views of the second coming of the Lord which afterwards coloured his whole life even to its termination.

In a letter written, in 1886, to his old friend Mr. George Pearse, with whom he was in the habit of corresponding, he makes the following interesting reference to the event:—

> About a year before I knew you, my friend, Matthew Habershon, had lent me his two volumes on prophecy, which first opened my eyes to the pre-millennial advent of our Lord. The first volume I began after school on a summer evening (June, 1842), and before I went to bed I had read it right through. It was a glorious truth to me. I hailed the coming Jesus with all my heart. So absorbed was I, that when at length I finished the book I could not for some considerable time realise where I was; it seemed another world!

His mind was thus prepared to receive yet further light; and a few months later he was introduced to a little band of earnest Christians among whom was his friend mentioned above. With them he nightly sat round a table in Wells-street, Hackney, and searched the Scriptures. His enthusiasm was great as the grand scheme of God's salvation gradually unfolded itself to him. At the end of the very first meeting he involuntarily burst forth with the exclamation, "I have learned a great truth to-night." Again, shortly afterwards, when discussing the subject of union with Christ, he was enabled to grasp that wondrous truth, and to see something of its full bearings. "Away goes all my Arminianism!" Forty years afterwards he alludes in one of his letters to "those happy evenings," and adds, "those conversations are burned in on my memory."

In 1844 he visited Jamaica in pursuit of his profession as a naturalist and collector of insects. Here he fell in with a Christian brother, with whom he united in holding meetings and preaching the Gospel among the natives when not otherwise occupied. While there his home for two years was the house of the missionary, John Coleman, who with his wife had gathered round them a little church of some fifty or sixty members, mostly negroes. Here he found sympathetic friends, and a field for ministerial labour. In 1845 he returned to England, and during the following ten years wrote and published many of his most important works on natural history—works which it is not within the scope of the present memoir to make special mention of.

In 1848 he married Miss Emily Bowes, whom he met at Tottenham, and who afterwards become the authoress of a series of valuable Christian Gospel tracts. In consequence of Mrs. Gosse's ill-health in 1856 they removed to Torquay, taking a house in the adjoining village of St. Mary Church. Here he pursued his studies in natural history, concentrating his attention chiefly on the living fauna and flora of the British shores, and on marine zoology. In 1857, during a visit to London for medical treatment, his wife died, and Mr. Gosse afterwards returned with his mother and son finally to St. Mary Church, where he continued to reside until his death. Here he gave himself up more entirely to the Lord's work in the ministering of the word of life, and gradually gathered together a company of believers, who "continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

In 1860 he married his second wife, Eliza Brightwen, of Saffron Walden, who proved a true helpmeet for him in his work and labour of love, and a great solace to him in his declining days.

Mr. Gosse's powers suffered little diminution until about twelve months before his death. He regularly ministered the word, with very few breaks, until the end of 1887, and seemed, considering his age, to be in astonishing health and vigour. Symptoms of natural decay had, indeed, manifested themselves occasionally at intervals during the last two years of his life, but about the beginning of January, 1888, it became evident that his wonderful constitution was fast breaking up. From that time to the time of his death he only appeared twice at the meeting-room, and was then quite unable to do more than sit quietly in his accustomed corner.

His last illness, which took the form of cardiac disease, causing great oppression and laboured breathing, appeared to be very irksome and depressing to a man of his active mind and habits. Rarely, if ever, for the last thirty years of his life was he in bed after five o'clock in the morning. Most of his scientific and literary work was accomplished when others are fast asleep; and to be condemned to sit in his armchair doing nothing, without the power of fixing his mind on any subject for a minute, was a very great trial to him. Especially did he deplore his inability to ponder, as was his wont, on the Word of God. "I do not seem to be able to get any spiritual sustenance," was his frequent complaint. "Lord, wilt Thou not reveal Thyself specially to me," was his constant prayer. It appeared as though the Lord would show him that his intellect was nothing, and that with a child's mind he was to depart, resting on the Word alone. And here, indeed, he did rest. "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am," was often repeated by him. Frequently also during the long nights of sleepless discomfort, compelled as he was to sit up in an armchair most of the time, would he repeat and sing with a quavering voice favourite hymns. His last words were—"The Lord is here!" "The Lord is present!" Without sigh or struggle he "fell on sleep."

HIS SPECIAL WORK.

"To every man his work." A question arises: Is it possible to separate such a man's work into two parts, and to say, this is secular and scientific, and this is religious? We think not. Philip Henry Gosse proved that a man might live all his life in the service of God, and in doing so serve his own generation in the best possible way. His chief glory, indeed, is that he so combined science with religion that we cannot detect where the one ends and the other begins, so beautifully are they woven together in his works. It is as a truster in and a revealer of God, that he stands forth prominently: not only God as revealed in his Word, but God as declared in his works. To him this God was one God, and he was perfectly persuaded that the written and the unwritten books could not contradict each other.

First anchoring himself to God and his Word, he was able safely and profitably to explore the wonderful works of the Creator, without drifting away into unknown wastes, and losing his way altogether. He had learned to distrust his own intellect, and to rely on the intellect of God.

As a describer of what men call natural objects, which are really manifestations of God, Mr. Gosse had few equals. His vivid pictures, fitly framed in graceful and sparkling language, captivate the mind at once, while his reverent spirit cannot but make his readers feel that he is describing what he loves as the handiwork of his Father in heaven.

Equally happy was his method of expounding the Word of God. His sentences were terse, vigorous, and pointed; his illustrations apt and unstrained; while his knowledge of the Scriptures, both of the Old and New Covenants, was astonishing. To say that he never erred in his interpretations of the Word would be to say that he was not human. His impulsive eager spirit, combined with the warmth of his imagination, sometimes led him, perhaps, into an untenable position, and carried him beyond what is written.

A case in point is his last religious work, "The Mysteries of God," published in 1884. This book contains doctrines concerning the vicarious sufferings of Christ, and the humanity of the Son of God, which have given great offence to some believers. This he much deplored, and considered due to an entire misunderstanding of what he wished to convey. But the writer of this memoir may be permitted to say that he is quite sure, whatever error may have been fallen into by Mr. Gosse, it was an error of judgment merely, and not of heart. The heart of no man on earth beat truer to the Son of God than his. Some have even accused him of deliberately dishonouring the name of Jesus. Is it not preposterous to suppose that a man who has spent sixty long years in honouring the Son, even as He honoured the Father, should suddenly at the last turn round and wilfully dishonour Him? It is the intent which gives a character to the word or deed. It is possible to utter the words "Lord Jesus" with deepest reverence, or so to utter them in mockery that it becomes blasphemy. Could such a man as Philip Henry Gosse proved himself to have been, by a life spent in the loving service of God and man, have possibly intended to dishonour the Saviour, whom he so loved, by what he has written?

The Monuments of Ancient Egypt, and their relation to the Word of God.
The Rivers of the Bible.
History of the Jews from the Christian era to the Dawn of the Reformation.
Omphalos: an Attempt to untie the Geological Knot.
Assyria: her Manners and Customs, Arts and Arms, restored from the Monuments.
The Mysteries of God, published in 1884.

It is not possible to over-estimate the value of the testimony which he has left behind him. Gifted with an extraordinary intellect, admired as an author, looked up to as an authority on all subjects connected with natural science, having admirable conversational powers, Mr. Gosse might, if he had so chosen, have occupied a very high and distinguished position in worldly society. But he did not so choose. "Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt," he preferred to bury himself in a little country village, and quietly and unobtrusively to serve the Lord Christ. All that he was and all that he had he laid at the feet of Jesus.

Another testimony, most valuable in these days, is the living proof which he has afforded that it is possible to be a man of science and yet to be a devout believer in the inspired Word of God. He believed "all that the prophets have spoken," and could not tolerate any departure therefrom, either in himself or others. This made his utterances sometimes seem stern and dogmatic. Having formed an opinion on any matter, he clung to it tenaciously, almost to the point of being unyielding, and even combative. The inflexibility of his submission to God and his Word has in some quarters earned for him the epithets of "Puritan," "ascetic," "recluse," and so on. But how refreshing and invigorating is such a decided form of godliness, compared with that flaccid, flavourless Christianity and mawkish agnosticism that is so fashionable in these days. The Lord keep us from being neither cold nor hot.

As to the influence of his life and teachings on earlier, present, or future generations, "the day" alone will declare it. If "salt," "light," and "living water" have any preservative, beneficial, and fructifying influence on the sons of men, then, surely, when the day comes many will rise up and call him blessed.

[We cannot refrain from mentioning here the loving remembrance we cherish of personal kindness received from Mr. and Mrs. Gosse, with whom we enjoyed intimate friendship and fellowship in Christ in 1855-6.—Ed.]

MISS DE BROEN'S MISSION.

BY COMTESSE BLANCHE DE MANIN.

I went over to Paris last month for the purpose of making myself acquainted with Miss de Broen's Mission in Belleville. I have had the privilege of her acquaintance for many years; but have never before had the opportunity of seeing for myself her self-denying work amongst the French infidels in this quarter. I was amazed at finding what an important work is being carried on amongst them.

Miss de Broen has also what may be termed a medical mission. During my stay I witnessed, almost daily, an eager crowd of one hundred and fifty to two hundred patients, some from long distances, waiting from an early hour to be admitted. Whilst awaiting their turn to see the doctor, some earnest Christian speaks to them of the love of God, and points out the way of salvation. I was struck with the quiet conduct and great attention of those addressed.

Much support of course is needed to keep up this flourishing Mission, and I am sure, if its work were more generally known, many Christian friends would consider it a privilege to help. A book called "Mission Work in Belleville," by Miss Clayton, published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., with preface by Lord Shaftesbury, gives an account of the work from its commencement. Miss de Broen's address is 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

Points for Preachers.

RETURN TO PRIMITIVE SIMPLICITY.

The attention of pastors and preachers is directed to the note by Dr. Gordon, under the article on the McAll Mission in France, p. 15.

REGISTERED IN HEAVEN.

We remember what a kind of strange surprise it gave us, when going to Europe, to find our names already known to our banker, and waiting to be honoured on our arrival. They had been sent on before by those with whom we deposited here; and we found ourselves known in a country where we had never been. So let the Christian rejoice that, though a pilgrim and stranger in the earth, he has his citizenship in heaven, and his name in the registry of the redeemed which is kept there.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

TRUTH-POSSESSED.

Gospel truths saturate a believer right through, and remain in the grain of the cloth like the old reds of soldiers' coats. The Gospel is like some perfumes which never leave the boxes in which they have once lain. The love of free grace dwells in the core of our heart. It has not only reached our bone, but it has impregnated the marrow; you cannot get it out of us, even if you kill us. I judge how it is with you by what I know of myself. I could be ground into atoms so small that you could not see them without a powerful microscope; but every atom would sparkle with belief in the atoning sacrifice, and the eternal love which gave it.—C. H. Spurgeon.

"PURE RELIGION AND UNDEFILED."

Some visitors were down in a coal mine. On the side of the gangway grew a plant. It was perfectly white. They were astonished that, amid the coal-dust, this little plant should be so pure and white. A miner who was with them took a handful of black dust and threw it upon the plant, but not a particle adhered. Every atom of dust rolled off. The visitors repeated the experiment, but the coal-dust would not cling. If God can so form that little plant that no dust can cling to it, can He not also transform our hearts by his grace, that no sin can cling to them? If He can keep that herb in the coal mine pure and white, can He not keep my heart as white as snow?—The Watchword.

"NOTHING IS IMPOSSIBLE."

When Mr. Webster, at the laying of the cornerstone of the Bunker Hill shaft, besought the vast concourse of people to "stand back," lest the crowd should break down the speaker's platform at peril of life or limb—the answer was, "It is impossible!" "Impossible?" thundered the American Demosthenes, "Nothing is impossible at Bunker Hill!" And when we remember who gave us our marching orders, and who left us the pledge of his perpetual presence; when we stand beside that cross on which He bore our sins, and remember that He is the propitiation for the whole world—we dare not talk of impossibilities. In the lexicon of the Christian life there is and there ought to be no such word as "fail!" Nothing is impossible at Calvary!—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

THE PRIESTHOOD OF BELIEVERS.*

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

To primitive methods of evangelism the Church of to-day must return. In whatever calling the disciple is found, let him "therein abide with God." Whatever be the sphere of common duties, let all believers find in it a sacred vocation; let us all take our stand upon the common platform of responsibility for the enlargement and extension of the kingdom of Christ by personal labour.

Let us not invest the term "minister" with a mistaken dignity. It never conveys in the New Testament the notion of superiority and domination, but of subordination and service. "Whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever of you will be chiefest shall be servant of all." One word rendered "minister" means "an under-rower"—the common sailor, seated with his oars in hand, acting under control of the "governor," or pilot.

Neander shows conclusively that Christianity makes all believers fellow-helpers to the truth, and that a guild of priests is foreign to its spirit. Teaching was not confined to presbyters or bishops; all had originally the right of pouring out their hearts before the brethren, and of speaking for their edification in public assemblies. Hilary, deacon at Rome, says that, in order to the enlargement of the Christian community, it was conceded to all to evangelise, baptize, and explore the Scriptures. Tertullian says that the laity have the right not only to teach, but to administer the sacraments; the Word and sacraments, being communicated to all, may be communicated by all as instruments of grace; while at the same time, in the interests of order and expediency, this priestly right of administering the sacraments is not to be exercised except when circumstances require.

This chasm between "clergy" and "laity" marks a rent in the body of Christ. The Church began as a pure democracy, but passed into an aristocracy, and finally a hierarchy. The creation of a clerical caste is a matter of historic development. We get a glimpse of it toward the close of the second century. Ignatius would have nothing done without bishop, presbytery, and deacon; and after all these centuries this High-churchism still survives.

The common priesthood of believers is a fundamental truth of the New Testament. Expediency undoubtedly restricts the exercise of certain rights, but never the right and duty of bearing the good tidings to the unsaved. Only by a return to God's original plan can the work of the world's evangelisation be done. After all our human resorts and devices, we are nothing bettered, but rather worse; is it not time to reach out the hand of faith, and touch the hem of Christ's garment?

CONFERENCES IN LIVERPOOL.—December 5, 6, 7, 8, are the dates fixed for a Convention on the Deepening of Spiritual Life, to be held in Liverpool. Simultaneously there will be held the North of England Y.W.C.A. Conference. It is expected that this United Convention and Conference will bring together a large number of Christian workers from the neighbouring counties; and much prayer is asked that through the spiritual quickening of his people the Lord's work may be greatly advanced. With a view to some practical results, the last day will be mainly occupied with the subject of Home and Foreign Missions.

SPIRITUAL DARKNESS.

By Rev. FRED HASTINGS, Tolmer-square Church.

In what a peculiar position the Christian is sometimes found. He, the child of light and hope, sometimes "walketh in darkness." Strange! It would seem rather that the unconverted might be in such a state. Isaiah speaks of those who "fear the Lord and obey the voice of his servant," but who "walk in darkness and have no light" (Isa. l. 10). The Christian is, indeed, sometimes like a man on a heath in dense fog, who cannot see the narrow, beaten, brownish path between the gorse and grass. He goes on with a loss of the sense of God's approbation. He has fears as to his safety, and an interruption of the testimony of the Holy Spirit. Perhaps he has but little comfort in religious things. The lack of this causes much sorrow. The Sunday services, the prayer-meetings, and even spiritual conversation, afford not the joy they once did.

He cannot explain the darkness, but he experiences it. Many Christians pass through this. God proves them thereby. Conversion does not end probation. Indeed, in one sense, it has only begun when we become Christians. Hence it is that there is ofttimes doubt, fear, gloom, and depression. Alas, there are those who, after a time, come to look on this state as normal. Sad and strange, if any can be content with such a state of darkness.

We must not think that God willingly leads a man into darkness by the hiding of his own countenance. God does not arbitrarily give man at one time joy, and then sorrow. Many afflictions, losses, disappointments, bereavements, and trials, produce gloom, but we do not deal with these now. The Christian is himself the author of much of the darkness in which he walks. It may arise possibly from over-occupation in the affairs of life. Mammon has been preferred to God. The questionable has been acted on as though admissible. Or it may arise from the disordered state of the body. The brain has not been kept clear by rational living. Late hours and undue excitement have brought on a sense of "gone-ness" and spiritual glumpiness. Sometimes excesses committed at some former period will induce this. Some pay heavy penalties for fast life when young. Or we may have inherited a weakened organisation from childhood. For this last we are not blamable.

Sometimes it arises from a non-apprehension of the fulness of power in the atonement wrought out by Christ. We may believe that God is able to pardon; yea! that He has pardoned; and yet we may not realise how He leads us into holiness; how Christ is our sanctification as well as our redemption. Or doubt may be fostered as to whether we came to Christ in the right way, forgetting that it matters little whether we get over a stile, or enter by a gate, provided we are on the highway to our destination. Sometimes uncertainty as to the time of conversion leads to the darkness. There is a consequent fear lest we may not have come at all; lest we are not in the way at all. Or we fear lest the past neglect to make progress in the divine life should have cut us off from all hope. We know God expects progress, and we can only see retrogression. We lose hope, and walk in darkness. Or the gloom comes by neglecting the Bible and prayer for an exciting story or sinful ease. A certain book is very fascinating. It may be clever and sensational. That which is vicious may be tinged with hues so attractive that we notice not the evil in its true light. We have lived out of our own world, and the mind and fancy are filled with other scenes and persons for a time. When the book is finished there is a distaste for the ordinary daily duties and joys. The strain has been retained so long that the relaxing brings the weariness and dissatisfaction in the soul leading to darkness.

Or the darkness may have been from over-religious excitement. Those who live on it feel dissatisfied with the steadier progress in religious things, and think all is dark. Extra efforts are useful in stirring one out of sin, but we must be careful not to foster mere animal excitement and distaste for the obscurer and quieter work of the church.

Disappointment in hopes with respect to the coming of God's Kingdom oft makes those who were once foremost in effort become slack and cold, because they know not the Lord's way. Then there comes the darkness. They have wished to build up quickly, because they live in time, and time is short. God builds his temple slowly, because He has eternity in which to work. In respect to their own growth in character, they seem to be like one in an open boat striving to make headway against a tide; but it has been with one oar only, plied on one side. The only effect has been to turn the boat round again and again, while it is drifting with the current the wrong way. So we spiritually drift through disappointment in self and in the advance of truth.

Or doubts arise from seeing much of mystery and pain around, from trouble as to the destiny of the mass, or how to save the world, or on account of materialistic ideas spreading, or the seeming difficulty in reconciling science and religion.

I may not have touched every case. One thinks that his or her experience is so different from that of everybody else. Sometimes there may be peculiarities in it; but, at any rate, whatever they are, there are others who have felt the same. It is hard to bear. The spirit groans under it. It is at times like Egyptian darkness. Strange that the believer should know it. He waits for the light, watches for the faintest streak of dawn in the cloudy sky.

How are Christians to be delivered from this position? This is the matter of greatest concern. We can simply say, "We must trust in the name of the Lord, and stay ourselves upon our God." Why? Because it is impossible to deliver oneself. With God is all power. "I clothe the heavens with blackness, and make sackcloth their covering." He also "knoweth how to speak a word in season to him that is weary." "He wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth the ear to hear as the learner." We know how a name can cheer men. Cæsar said to the boatmen, "Fear not, you carry Cæsar and his fortunes," and the boatmen were cheered. An old veteran in battle, when its fortunes seemed wavering, saw Wellington coming, and cried, "There's the Duke! God bless him! I would rather see his face than a whole brigade." So a glimpse of the mercy of God can dispel our gloom and fears.

Trust in God for pardon, sanctification, full salvation, increase of love, for power to do his work and bear every burden. Christ hid not his face from his enemies; He will not hide Himself from his friends. "Ah! but am I his friend?" some say. You would not long for his friendship if you were not. In that longing you have an evidence that the grace of God has not left you. This is the opening into the green pasture. The sheep penned in all night between hurdles, when the one is lifted in the morning, will rush through the opening to feast on the fresh herbage. So let us use the opening of faith.

The Israelites needed God in fighting against their fierce enemies, the Canaanites, as much as in their deliverance from the Egyptians; in opening up a way through Jordan as much as through the Red Sea. We also need God to build us up as well as to save from fear. God will work in us to perfect in holiness. He works in us "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." By his Spirit He leads us to see that, having believed on Christ for the pardon of sin, we are to abide in Him, that we may have constant power over it. We are to stay ourselves on Him. We need not be brought under the power of the old-heart corruption. Much of our goodness is of a negative character, the getting rid of imperfections. But we need a positive holiness, such as can only come by abiding in Christ and drinking in of his spirit. We must trust absolutely in Christ. Heis the believer's robe of righteousness, his sanctification, as well as salvation. We have to remember that we are accepted in Him. Alas, that so few apprehend this! Could they lay hold of this, it would drive away much of the religious gloom which overhangs many spirits, and introduce us into the sunlight of liberty. Instead of "staying ourselves" on Him, we look at our imperfections so much that we cannot believe that Christ can still love us. If Christ loves us at all we must remember that it must always be in spite of imperfections. His love as his mercy must always be unmerited.

"Stay yourself upon your God." Lean against God. What the buttress is to the wall half fallen, God is to you. The strong arm of a friend when you are recovering from an illness is something to lean upon. God's promises and grace are, combined, the great support to us in our weakness. "Stay!" In fiercest attacks, like a soldier against a rock with swarms of enemies in front, "stay yourself on God." Stay yourselves in temptations, in Satan's buffetings, and in darkest hours. You have a possession in God; you have an assurance of the Divine interest.

I was much impressed, when I once visited in Gainsboro' one who had lain fourteen years on her back, and who was yet cheerful because her soul was "stayed upon God." To my expressions of sympathy she only replied, "I can bear anything, for Christ is with me." His presence is the antidote to spiritual darkness.

Thomas Binney was a great preacher, but he was deprived, towards death, for a time of strong consolation and joy. It took the form of a doubt and questioning as to his acceptance and pardon. He lived for days in the memory of that Psalm, beginning, "Have mercy upon me, O God according to thy lovingkindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." He used to say it was "wonderful, wonderful that God should not despise the contrite and broken spirit which crawls into his presence. Oh how men would despise it!" Ere he reached the haven light shone upon him. For a long time it was "dark, and Jesus had not come to him." At last he twice said, faintly but deliberately, "I am greatly relieved. Oh the good God." "At eventide there was light." He feared as he entered into the cloud; he found on the other side light, and the presence of his Lord. So will it be with many who are in fear.

A college friend of mine, who was at one time greatly troubled by doubts and spiritual darkness, wrote words which may help some soul in like spiritual darkness:—

Though dark with midnight gloom,
His eye all pierces through
To watch each darkened room;
And should we ask, "What of the night?"
The answer comes, "Soon dawns the light!"

If restless on our bed,
A pillow is God's love,
To rest the weary head,
And heavenly solace prove.
Give thought and heart to Him, thy Lord,
And He will be thy soul's reward.

So help us, Lord, to lift
Our souls above the night;
Give us heaven's largest gift,
That happy, sacred might,
By which are lightened all our fears,
By which are chastened all our tears.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.—2.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

Let us now turn to what is said of our triumph in Christ. We have the assurance of a great future—a future not in heaven alone, but even on the earth. Ours is a destiny such as the earth's greatest have as yet never known. They who are Christ's, and who have often, like Him, closed their eyes in death amid seeming defeat, shall triumph where they seemed to fail. They will hold the redeemed earth for God. It may be well to arrange what we are taught in regard to this great hope as answers to the four following questions:—

(1) What is the Scripture doctrine regarding the first resurrection? The meaning of the above words (Rev. xx. 4—6) is unmistakable. It is that the resurrection of all the dead is not simultaneous. There are favoured ones who will rise first. These will reign with Christ for a thousand years, and when the thousand years close, the rest of the dead will be raised, the present mode of life upon the earth will be brought to an end, and there will be a new heaven and a new earth (Rev. xxi. 1). But, explicit as these statements are, the doctrine is so startling that we naturally inquire whether there is anything to show that the words are to be taken literally. Is there anything said elsewhere in Scripture regarding the first resurrection? We have a similar representation in Dan. vii. 27: "And the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High: His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." And the book closes with a promise which appears to give to Daniel, himself, this very hope of the first resurrection: "Go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and shalt stand in thy lot at the end of the days" (xii. 13).

There are references to the same truth in several passages of the New Testament. Paul says in 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, that "the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: so shall we ever be with the Lord." The resurrection of the dead in Christ is here spoken of as an event by itself, and as taking place while the earthly life of the nations still continues. In 1 Cor. xv. 23, 24, the resurrection is described as having three stages or epochs: "But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father."

There is the resurrection of Christ, who, with a perfect and complete humanity, with a body as well as a spirit redeemed from death and the grave, has passed into the presence of God, the firstfruits of that mighty harvest which will yet be reaped from the fields of sin and death. That is the first stage. The second is the resurrection of those that are Christ's at his coming. The third is what the Scripture names "the end," that is, the end of Christ's mediatorial work, and of the period of grace—the time of the last resurrection and of the eternal judgment, when fates are fixed beyond recall, and the kingdom is given up to God who gave it.

We have another reference to the same hope in Phil. iii. 11. The Apostle explains the purpose of his unceasing endeavour to reach still higher heights in the Christian life. He states it in these words, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." What does he mean? No man, bad or good, will be able to escape the resurrection, and if there is no separate and anterior resurrection of the Christ-like, the Apostle's words are pointless. But if we understand him to look onward to this first resurrection from the dead, everything is clear. He desires to make sure of his being one with Christ now that he may be one with Christ then. The same hope is plainly indicated also in the words of Jesus: "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke xiv. 13, 14). The resurrection of the just is plainly a resurrection which the righteous alone shall know.

(2) Let us ask now, what is the glory reserved for those who will in this way be claimed by the risen Redeemer as his own? They will share his triumph. They will not be mere spectators of his glory: they will be participators in it. "I saw thrones," says the Apostle, "and they sat upon them." "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. vii. 27). Who may tell the glory of that dominion, which is after the image of Christ's? What earthly dominion equals his now? Which, of all that men have ever known, has been so founded on the heart's deepest affections, which has so grasped the inmost thought, so swayed the deepest purposes, so purged the desire and imagination, and so moulded anew the soul of man? What beauties, and noblenesses, and glories have risen up in man's life under the rule of Jesus! What divine peace, what Godlike joy and splendour have revealed his presence in the human heart!

And if all this has marked his sway during this period of waiting, what shall we say of it when the kingdom is made his in very truth, and the earth is indeed the Lord's? What shall it be when hearts are his as they have never been his yet, when every opposing power has been swept away, when God's will and not man's shall be accomplished everywhere, when the earth shall be the place of fulness and joy God meant it to be, and every life shall attain to his ideal? If we could conceive and express the glory of that reign, we should be able to say what our glory will be. Incredible as it may appear, this is the future in store for us. We shall reign with Him, and hold the earth for God.

Two other expressions in the description should be weighed. "Judgment was given unto them." The judges, the heroes, who were Israel's true kings long before that people lusted after a nominal and external royalty, not only decided causes which were brought before them: they delivered the land from oppression, and cleansed it from idolatry and sin. They who reign, shall reign thus. They shall be heroes and helpers after the pattern of these. The Apostle adds: "They shall be priests of God and of Christ." Their service will cover the whole sphere of human need and human life. It will not only remove national and social ills: it will also meet the burdens and the yearnings of man's deepest spirit. They will stand midway between men and God and Christ with such a fulness of blessing as the mightiest earthly ministry has never yet known. They shall cause hearts to come to the Redeemer and to God with a completeness and an ardour of which the Christian life of to-day affords no example; for they will reveal God and Christ to human thought with such an unveiling of the Divine majesty, and of the riches of Divine grace, as will mark the completion of God's work upon the earth. That risen life will hold the world by the Spirit's power. "They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."

MR. VARLEY AT TORQUAY.

Mr. Henry Varley's four days' mission here was very much blessed. Though none of the gatherings were very large, the people were earnest and attentive. Several professed to accept Christ.

Mr. Varley was particularly owned in the building up of believers, and in pulling up small weeds of error that creep in almost imperceptibly, and hinder growth in grace. He gave a very helpful drawing-room meeting the last morning of the mission. It was a Bible meditation, and lasted for an hour and three-quarters. Many ladies asked questions, to which he always answered by referring them to different passages of Scripture, which brought out clearly the subject under discussion. There are few preachers who impress one so much with the sense that what he says is truth, because it is so largely and broadly founded on Scripture, and human opinions and reasonings about it are ignored.

What a wonderful awakening and stir there would be in the Church of God if every member of it would for six months kneel down before the Lord for an hour every day, and study the Scriptures, praying from "the ground of the heart," "Lord, make me to read thy Word with an unprejudiced mind, and cleanse my thoughts from man's opinions about the interpretation of it; give me the teachable spirit that will receive it with childlike simplicity; and give me thy Spirit to inspire me with true courage to do thy will and follow thy teachings, and thine alone." How glorious is that twenty-seventh verse of 1 John ii.: "Ye need not that any man teach you: his anointing teacheth you concerning all things." "Who teacheth like Him?" as Job says. G. F.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

XXV.—FIRST SERMON IN LONDON.

THE first time I preached in London after my conversion, I found it very cold and hard. There was no hearty response, or "Amen," such as I was accustomed to hear in Cornwall. On the whole, the sermon to me was like a discouraging battle; and I was not sorry when it was over.

In the vestry the Vicar said that he thought I was very excitable, and that his quiet people had been too much agitated.

I was rather surprised at this, for I thought they were very far from excited. However, I may have been mistaken. While we were talking, there came a loud knock at the door. The Vicar said, "Come in"; and a gentleman entered in a great state of perturbation. He was exceedingly excited, and said, "Oh, sir, do help me. What shall I do?"

"There," said the Vicar, "did I not tell you——."

"Oh, sir, interrupted the stranger, I am sure you can help me. I have been in distress about my soul for over three weeks. I have been tempted more than once to shoot myself; and to-night I have been thinking of drowning myself in the river."

"Sit down, my friend," I said, "let me understand your trouble. What is it all about?"

He answered, "I was awakened under a sermon from the text, 'Choose you this day whom ye will serve.' I was much alarmed at what I heard, for I felt I had not been serving God, or even trying to do so. I have been serving the world; and, what is worse, I am so tangled up in it that I cannot get free. There is nothing but ruin before me, if I give up the world; and perdition, if I do not. It has nearly driven me mad!"

I said, "I do not think that God desires to ruin you, or anyone else. His desire and will is to do you good, both in this world and the next. He cares for you and yours far more than you care for yourselves. You had better trust Him."

"But suppose I trust Him, and He takes away everything I possess. Why, I should be a ruined man!"

I replied, "But, on the other hand, suppose you keep all your possessions, and go on as you are. What will become of you then?"

"Oh, I know all about that too. That is the very thing which distracts me. It will just drive me out of my mind."

I continued, "David said, 'Let me fall into the hand of God, and not into the hand of man' (see 2 Sam. xxiv. 14). Ruin or no ruin, if I were you, I would give myself up to God."

"Then, again," he said, "you see I am such a sinner. I have been sinning against light and knowledge."

I answered, "Did you hear that hymn we were singing in church just now?"

"What, that last hymn do you mean, 'There is a fountain filled with blood'?"

"Yes," I replied, "that one."

"Why, yes," he said, "I have known that hymn ever since I was a child. I have been well taught; so that my sin is all the greater, you see."

"My dear man, you do not know that hymn yet. It does not say that sinners plunged beneath the Thames, but sinners plunged beneath the blood, lose all their guilty stains."

"The dying thief was a bad man," I went on to say, "and yet his sins were pardoned through that blood; and there may you, though vile as he, wash all your sins away. I advise you to go to this fountain; cost what it may. There you may get rid of your sins, and become God's child. Then be sure He will know how to provide both for you and yours."

"I never thought of the meaning of that hymn," he said, with some surprise.

"God has awakened and shown you what a sinner you are, on purpose that you may come to Him for forgiveness. Come now, everything is ready. The dying thief believed. Why may not you?"

After a little more persuasion this troubled man fell upon his knees and begged of God to forgive him. He pleaded with a loud voice, to the evident astonishment of the vicar and his churchwarden. Seeing that I was in no way alarmed, they remained; I suppose to witness what would happen next!

There was only one thing to happen. I urged the man on to pray, and when his prayer was deep and earnest enough, I assured him of God's answer. I said, "God would not offer pardon to a sinner such as you, and then refuse you when you came. Thank Him."

He had not turned in that direction long before the dear man's soul was set at liberty, and he began to rejoice and praise God. He rose from his knees, and came forward to shake hands with me, and no doubt would have turned to the vicar and churchwarden to do the same; but they had fled, leaving us to find our way out of the church as best we could.

Lost in wonder, love, and praise, my friend looked at me, and said, "I do not mind now what happens to me; I can trust God, and I will. Lord, help me."

I assured him that "God does not show us our faults to ruin us; but to save and set us free. Quietly trust Him. Do not put your hand to anything that you see is wrong, or that is against your conscience. Rather lose the benefit which might accrue from such an action; it will be no real benefit to you."

He went away a changed man, at peace with God, and determined to follow the Lord, come what might. After this, whenever he heard of my being in London, he found me out, and his testimony was, "The Lord is good. I am not a ruined man; but happy and prosperous. My business is changed, and my wife is happy too. It is a blessed thing to be on the Lord's side."

Some ten years after this man's conversion I was telling his story to illustrate a point in my address; and remarked that I had not seen my friend lately, when a voice cried out from the audience, "I am here all right; thank God."

This voice startled some timid people; but added weight and confirmation to the subject I was urging.

We should never give way to despair, for that is unbelief in a dangerous form; but when we come to our extremity turn to the Lord. Our extremity is his opportunity. He that believeth is not confounded.

The blood of Jesus is certain in its pardoning efficacy. The dying thief was forgiven while that blood was still warm and flowing. Multitudes of persons have been forgiven since, and multitudes more will be, through the same. It is true, as the poet says, that blood

"Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed Church of God
Be saved to sin no more."

THE BOWEN MEMORIAL.—It is proposed to erect in a suitable quarter of the city of Bombay a memorial building, which shall include a Native Christian Institute, specially adapted to meet the wants of the Native Christian community of Bombay, and a Hall to serve as a centre for united missionary and Christian effort. Such a scheme, it is thought, will represent the catholicity of spirit which was a marked trait of the late Rev. G. Bowen's character, while it will call attention to the purpose for which his valuable life was given to India. In the hope that the Christian public of India, as well as of Great Britain and America, where Mr. Bowen's name is also known and affectionately remembered, will further the project with their aid, the Bombay Missionary Conference have resolved to raise a fund for carrying this scheme into effect. A preliminary meeting, in connection with the project, was held at the office of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, on Friday, September 7.

TIDINGS OF MR. RABINOWICH.

BY REV. ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D.

IN a letter I received from Mr. Rabinowich a fortnight ago, he writes:—"The house of prayer, 'Beth Shem,' is crowded every Saturday with Jews, who are thirsting to hear the word of the living God, and are seeking the strait gate and narrow way which leadeth unto life."

The testimony of Mr. Rabinowich is growing more clear and full, as will be seen by the following appeal, with which he recently concluded a sermon:—

> Lift up your eyes, my brethren, unto Mount Golgotha, and behold there the ransom which delivers our souls from the curse of God, pronounced on Mount Ebal, and which bestows upon us the blessing of our Father in heaven more abundantly than the blessing on Mount Gerizim. Only behold the Cross of the Messiah, and you will see clearly that here is the gate of Jehovah, into which the righteous shall enter; the only access opened unto all men, be they Jews or Gentiles, that in one spirit they may draw near to our Father in heaven. Open your eyes and behold the Lord of glory, Jesus the crucified; how glorious is this High Priest, who Himself is the propitiation for our sins. How beautiful, how lovely is the Great Shepherd of the flock, who Himself is the Lamb of God, which beareth the sin of the world, and who comes as our Messiah, bringing peace to them that are afar off, and to them that are nigh.
> My brethren, if you esteem your souls precious, and if you desire to be citizens of the city, and to be numbered among the saints, and in the household of God, then bow this day your knees before the King of glory, before Jesus, crowned for you with the crown of thorns; smite your breasts, and confess your sins and the sins of your fathers, and the iniquity they have committed against the Son of God, Jesus, the Messiah. Say then, O house of Israel: "Surely all we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, but Jehovah laid on Him the iniquity of us all; for the iniquity of his people was He stricken. For only with Jesus, the Messiah, is redemption, and He shall deliver Israel from all his sins."

It may, indeed, be regarded as a wonderful thing in the history of the Jews that words like these should be uttered from Sabbath to Sabbath, by an Israelite to Israelites, in the Hebrew tongue, and that in these meetings for worship the Scriptures of the New Testament are read as the Word of God, and prayer is offered in the name of Jesus. We would earnestly ask the prayers of our friends that the Holy Ghost may bless the words and make them effectual to the conversion of many souls. We should also remember our beloved brother, who has to contend with many difficulties and trials in his peculiar position, that he may be guided by heavenly wisdom, and upheld and strengthened in his great work.

The following extract is from a letter of congratulation on the nine hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Russia:—

> My soul rejoices with you this day in the God of Israel. Behold, you, who were once without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, are now brought nigh by the blood of Christ. It is now nine centuries since you became children of Abraham by faith, and live under the sceptre of Jesus, who is of the seed of David, and whom God hath raised from the dead, and exalted at his right hand. Brethren, permit me, also, to offer to you my heartfelt wishes and prayers, in the name of God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. May it please God in his mercy to fulfil the words of the holy Apostle and the petitions of the pious ruler Wladimir, which he offered to God, when your fathers stood before Him in the waters of the Dnieper, that the eyes of your heart be enlightened to know Him, and that you be confirmed in the faith of Christ, that as the children of God you may obtain the victory.
>
> And after my benedictions may I bring before you my petition? Oh, remember, in this time of grace, and in this memorial year of salvation, remember in your prayers before the King of kings the Jews, who dwell under the shadow of the wings of your great Empire. And if you give thanks in these days, that God did not permit the Czar Wladimir to follow the advice of the Talmudic Jews, who came to him out of the land of the Cosars, then offer also intercession and prayer, that in the tenth century of your entrance into the covenant of the Messiah, the Jews of Russia may in repentance and with their whole heart and soul turn to Jehovah their God, who, in these last days, spake unto them in his Son Jesus, that they also may know that there is one God and one Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus. For Jesus the Christ is Lord of us all, and they who trust in Him shall never be ashamed. These words from a Son of Israel, who believes in Jesus the Christ, the Son of the Living God.

I hope that these specimens of Mr. Rabinowich's teaching will encourage his friends and deepen their interest in this evangelist, so wonderfully raised up in Israel.

The Cry of the Children!

IN Night and Day for September, Dr. Barnardo thus discourses, under the heading of "Personal Notes," on the subject of the work in his hands:—

Among those who recently entered our Home were two little sisters of twelve and seven. One of these was peculiarly helpless, being a life-long cripple from hip joint disease. When she and such as she ask the hard world for bread, too often it offers them but a stone, and my heart was glad that I could hold open a door wide enough to admit her, crutches and all. Both the sisters were motherless, and the father, though sober and steady, seemed to have gone utterly to the wall in the race for life. The family were in a state bordering on absolute destitution and starvation, and the father's explanation was only—"I cannot get work; there is nothing to be done but starve." He and his two girls were living in one small room which, by successive visits to the pawnbroker, as needs became more and more urgent, had been stripped to the walls, leaving it actually empty. The girls and their father slept together on a few rags in a corner of the room, and were in want of bread. This wretched existence, with an outlook of never more than a single meal ahead, had continued throughout almost the whole lives of both the girls. I could not but reflect, on receiving these life-long destitutes, that our roof could hardly have sheltered any needier souls.

Esau's was a little squeaky voice, and it appeared to come from no higher than my elbow. When I first heard it I turned curiously, and closely scrutinised the owner. I saw a poor little deformed body supported on two crutches, and surmounted by a head, in which were a pair of unnaturally sharp and brilliant eyes. The spine was curved backwards, and to the side; the breast was also bowed outwardly, in a manner painful to look upon, and the head was sunk deeply between the shoulders. The legs were shortened and twisted likewise. And that was Esau, just arrived in London from a Northern city, which has sent me cripples and waifs not a few. "How old are you?" I inquired. "Thirteen, sir," piped the boy, in the high-pitched accents which had first attracted my attention. Yet Esau did not look more than ten.

He and his sister, little Peg, aged eleven, had just entered our portals, acting on my previous decision to admit them from a consideration of their painful story. They were fatherless, and they were friendless, a description of which the significance is not easily fathomed. But from their father they had doubtless inherited a legacy, which added pathos to their condition. Esau was a deformed cripple, and poor Peg was in consumption; and the seeds of both these evils had doubtless been sown by their drunken and dissipated parents, for their mother is also a drunkard, and, ever since the children remembered, she had picked up a living (if it was worth the name) by her hawker's basket. Needless to tell, such a living for herself and her five children was of the barest. Both Esau and Peg, physically afflicted as they were, lived and slept with the others in an underground apartment upon an earthen floor, to which the light was admitted through a window divided in half by the street pavement. The mother maintained the family precariously on such of her earnings as escaped the public-house; but it was the "bread of bitterness" that the little ones ate. She was brutal in her conduct, and easily excited by drink to violence; so that Esau and Peggy had to endure, in addition to their constitutional ailments, the more or less constant cruelty of one who should have been their most loving guardian on earth.

I trust that for both of these little ones cruelty and privation are finally over; for both are safe now in the shelter of our fold. Peggy is, alas! so far gone in consumption that I can only treat her henceforth as a hospital patient; but she will at least know the tender and sympathetic care of Christian love. And so our Homes, day by day, hold open the door of hope to the lame, the halt, and the blind, for whom the world cares nothing; who are to it merely the bespattered fringes of its hurrying crowds; but who, nevertheless, bear the image of God in themselves, as well as the indelible signs and tokens of human sin and woe.

My family now number nearly 3000, and day by day I am grappling with cases sent to me from all parts of the country; resolutely determined, indeed, not to admit any that are not really destitute, but equally resolved, by God's help, not to turn away one that is. So I go on my way, "faint, yet pursuing," "cast down, but not destroyed," "perplexed, but not in despair." God sometimes allows the heaviest burdens to rest upon our shoulders in order, doubtless, to teach us the lesson that so many of his servants need to learn, that they cannot do without Him, but that they must lean hard upon Him, and depend upon his help and goodness and presence and blessing.

THE LAST EMIGRANTS OF THE SEASON.

On Wednesday last an emigration party of Dr. Barnardo's girls sailed from Liverpool for their future home in Canada, and on the previous Monday, as has been the custom for some years, a couple of farewell meetings took place at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. and at the "Edinburgh Castle" in the East-end, respectively. The Y.M.C.A. noon-day prayer-meeting was a centre of unwonted attraction, owing to the presence of these bright-faced little travellers. The party, however, was smaller than usual, amounting only to 90 all told. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and after the usual exercises, and a brief Bible address by Captain Mandeville, introduced Dr. BARNARDO, who presented an interesting statement in regard to his emigration work to the meeting. Including the party of girls present, the emigrants sent forth to Canada through the agency of the Homes now numbered no fewer than 3216, all of whom had been rescued, brought under Christian influences, and trained before being emigrated.

In regard to the composition of the party of ninety girls, it appeared that their average period of residence in the Homes was three years. Twenty-two of them had been inmates for less than a year, forty for from one to three years, and thirty over three years. Ten had both parents living, twenty-five were entirely orphans, sixteen had fathers only, and thirty-six had mothers only. Most of these living relatives were known to be worthless or worse, a fact which might be inferred from the consideration that thirty-nine of the party had originally been rescued from positions of special and particular danger. As to their origin (which Dr. Barnardo distinguished from their birthplace), forty-two had entered the Homes from different districts in London, forty-three had come from various English counties, three were from Ireland, one from Scotland, and one from Jersey.

Dr. Barnardo devoted a considerable portion of his address to combating the arguments of those who objected to emigration of girls at the very time when there is such a dearth of thoroughly trained and qualified domestic servants in the mother country. There is in Britain, he stated, an enormous preponderance of the female over the male population, a preponderance which it ought to be the desire of every well-wisher of his country to reduce. The financial argument with regard to rescue operations was also dwelt upon. Whereas these girls, after three years' residence, could be emigrated to a land where success and prosperity awaited them, for £9 each, a further residence of some four years would be required in order to train them into domestic servants for English households, and that would mean not only an additional expenditure per head of nearly £60, but they would continue to fill the Homes, to the exclusion of the destitute ones who are always knocking for admission. It was stated, in conclusion, that the expenses of only twenty-eight of the present party had yet been subscribed by the Christian public, so that £621 was still required to send forth these ninety without burden to the exchequer of the Institutions. Prayer on behalf of the work of the Homes, and for the young emigrants, was offered by Mr. Hodder, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and the Chairman.

CARLISLE CONVENTION.

THIS happy gathering of believers, briefly noted last week, is now a thing of the past, and we are able to thank God for the rich manifestations of his grace and power, and for the large amount of spiritual awakening which has been the result. Carlisle has been deeply stirred, and henceforth many of its Christians will walk in the strength of a new joy and in the brightness of a new light.

The chairman of the meetings was Mr. ROBERT WILSON, one of the conveners of the Keswick Convention, and a very blessed spirit of catholicity pervaded the whole; the recognition of the oneness of all believers being kept well to the front. With this spirit so well sustained, it is matter for regret that more sympathy is not shown towards the work by the ministers and office bearers of the evangelical denominations in the city generally. But this is probably coming, and when it does, the churches will advance to an adequate position of blessing and power in the world around at present scarcely realised.

SERMONS TO JEWS.—A special sermon to Jews and Christians will be preached on Friday (to-day), by Rev. Gordon Calthrop, at Bow Church, Cheapside. Service at 1 p.m. Sermons will also be preached in a number of churches on Sunday next. From Sept. 21 to 28, meetings will be held daily in the Mission Hall, Christian-street, Commercial-road, E.

DEAF AND DUMB IN EDINBURGH.—These afflicted friends have a deeply taught and sympathetic preacher in Mr. Hansell. He became their missionary first by assisting Mr. Alexander Blackwood, a godly deaf and dumb gentleman, who preached to deaf and dumb adults in the school-room of St. Stephen's Established Church. The congregation so increased that a larger place of meeting was necessary and found in York Buildings, Queen-street. The congregation is again in need of a larger hall. Few worshipping congregations in Edinburgh know anything of this little band of deaf mutes, and of their long wish for a place of worship. A bazaar will be held in November, by ladies who can hear, assisted by deaf mutes, in order to help the building fund. Contributions and information will be received and given by Miss Dewar, 22, Grosvenor-street, Edinburgh.

SOUTH NORWOOD is the field of a vigorous evangelistic effort on the part of Mr. J. J. Browne, one of the agents of the London City Mission. The seventh anniversary services of Mr. Browne's Mission were recently held in the spacious tent in Portland-road, South Norwood. At a public meeting Mr. Frank King (hon. superintendent) gave an interesting sketch of the work during the past seven years. Through Mr. Browne's influence, he said, many men and women have been saved from drink and sin, and are now helping to bring others to Christ, both here and elsewhere. A strong appeal was made for funds to enable the friends of the Mission to erect a hall on the site where the tent stands, it being observed that, if one may judge from the blessing which has attended the work in the past, such a building is essential to carrying on the work with efficiency. The proposed hall will cost about £450, towards which £250 have been contributed locally. Mr. King's address is, Cumberlow House, South Norwood, London, S.E.

A BASKET OF SUMMER FRUIT.

By Anna Shipton.

> "All thy works shall praise Thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless Thee."—Ps. cxlv. 10.

"God might have made the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The palm-tree and the cedar-tree,
And not a flower at all."

He might have given us corn for bread, and vegetables for food, and not have provided the beautiful and refreshing fruit according to the season, a token of his fatherly care of the children of men. His gifts are on our daily path. If the wealthy have their pines, and melons, and grapes, the poor have their fruits for the gathering. The bramble bears its luscious blackberries, the wild raspberries in the thicket, the strawberries on the green bank, the hazel-nuts hang thick upon the woodside in their gold-tinted leaves, and all are free! Surely the joy and pleasure which the wild fruits bring in their seasons is worth remembering, as among God's good gifts; and yet how seldom do we take it from Him. One of the prettiest sights on the Swiss mountains is in the chestnut season. The children gather them up as they are beaten from the trees. It is a rare holiday time; as, under the shelter of a bank, I have seen them lighting a fire to roast them for dinner, with many a merry song.

In the vintage in Italy there is always a little troop of boys and girls with small baskets attached to their shoulders. Like the older labourers, they can glean the grapes that lie low on the ground, so that children share the joy of labour. "Young men and maidens, old men and children," rejoice together in the harvest. When they know the hand of Him that opens to bless them in these daily mercies, they will praise Him for his goodness, for only those born of God can praise Him.

A friend of mine in Italy had a large basket of magnificent peaches offered her for sale, unlike any she had seen for beauty and fragrance. She would have purchased a few, but the vendor was not disposed to divide the basket.

Suddenly it occurred to the lady that she had heard that a neighbouring family had to forego the mother's care, in order that she might accompany her sick son, a boy of nine years of age, to Zermatt.

Zermatt is a secluded village in Switzerland, in the Canton Valois. It is a valley of snow, where the sick and ailing are sent for the reviving air of the glaciers. Many invalids remain summer and winter, and return in health and strength to their home. Rising above the valley, the mighty mountains of the Matterhorn and Monte Rosa remind us of many who have perished in their health and youth for the ambition of scaling their lofty peaks.

Oscar Keil had faded away in the heat of an Italian summer, and the physicians said he must be taken to the snow valley of Zermatt, and he would soon be well, with a mother's tender nursing. He was greatly beloved; his unfaltering obedience to his parents and teachers, and his grateful recognition of the care his sickness called forth, told from whence he received the strength to suffer patiently.

There is no fruit at Zermatt, and suddenly my friend said, "I will purchase the peaches, basket and all, and send them to the dear sick boy in Switzerland." She did not know, but the Lord knew, how his sick child longed for some cool refreshing fruit for his parched lips and burning throat.

The basket arrived: when the layers of vine-leaves were removed, the peaches, in their pink velvet beauty were revealed, and Oscar beheld them with an exclamation of delight. His mother chose one of the finest, and placed it on a plate before him; he did not venture to touch it. His mother, remarking his silence, asked, "Will you not eat it, my child?" His fragile hands were clasped, and his eyes looked wistfully into hers, as he said, softly:

"Mother, let us praise God for it," and the childlike thanksgiving fell like a gentle reproof on the mother's heart, who, unlike him, had forgotten the Giver in the gift.

For every peach he praised still, and, when the last was taken from the basket, his loving glance upwards and "Praise God for the peaches" was the close of his child-testimony. Loving hands laid his wasted form amid the snows of Zermatt, leaving a lesson for many hearts.

Since then I have never seen a peach upon the sunny wall, or on my table, that I have not said, "Even a child is known by his doings. 'Praise God for the peaches!'"

I'LL SAY, NO.

When, some summer day,
I am coaxed to stay
Out of school to play,
I'll not go,
I'll say, No.
I'll do right
Day and night;
To God for help I'll pray.

I'll not lie or steal,
Nor the truth conceal,
Nor with sinners deal.
I'll not go,
I'll say, No.
Where they hide
And divide
Their spoils I could not dwell.

Should I ever hear
Friends say, "Come for cheer,
Take a glass of beer,"
I'll not go,
I'll say, No.
Do you think
I would drink?
The drunkard's end I fear.

Others may do wrong,
I'll not go along
With the wicked throng.
I'll not go,
I'll say, No;
And I'll pray,
Night and day,
The Lord to make me strong.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Cunningham Free Church, Strathbungo, Glasgow, September 23—30; various places in Glasgow, October 1—4; St. Silas' Schools, Handsworth, Birmingham, October 13—21. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Southport, October 3; Hull, end of October.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Sept. 23, Psalm lxxxiv. 1—12; Monday, Sept. 24, Psalm lxxxv. 1—13; Tuesday, Sept. 25, Psalm lxxxvi. 1—17; Wednesday, Sept. 26, Psalm lxxxvii. 1—7; Thursday, Sept. 27, Psalm lxxxviii. 1—18; Friday, Sept. 28, Psalm lxxxix. 1—18; Saturday, Sept. 29, Psalm lxxxix. 19—37.

EDUCATION IN CHINA.—Miss Fielde, Baptist missionary in Swatow, says that a great revolution has taken place in the educational system of China. During the past year a remarkable change has been made in the scheme of the competitive examinations whereby successful candidates for literary degrees obtain honours and offices. In the past, only a knowledge of the native classics, with skill in the use of the native hieroglyphics, has been required of the scholar. Now, geography and natural philosophy have been added to the subjects for examination, and this action of the Government has turned the attention of students throughout the Empire in a new direction. The indications are, in her opinion, that China is to follow Japan in the path of progress in Western science and philosophy, though it may be with the slow step that accords with the magnitude of the nation.—British Weekly.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

A biennial thanksgiving service was held at these Homes, situated at the Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire, on Tuesday, September 11. The special design of the meeting was to dedicate three new Homes to the service of the orphans—"Somerville," "Ashgrove," and "Fairknowe"—making twenty-nine buildings in all. The weather in the morning was hazy, drizzly, and uninviting; notwithstanding, about eight hundred people gathered from Glasgow, Paisley, Greenock, and other places. After noon the day brightened, and the sun shone pleasantly down upon what one of the visitors called a "magic scene." All the cottages looked lovely; everything was clean and tidy, and flags waved from every roof. On the front gate you had the words, "Welcome to the Orphan Homes of Scotland," and inside you saw the words, as if expressive of the spirit of the founder, "Praise the Lord."

Previous to the hour of service in the new church, the visitors looked round to see the buildings, some going into one and some another, and many boarding the ship, the James Arthur, that stands ready for sailing at the head of the main avenue. The captain at the gangway gave all a welcome, and the boys with their flutes and drum played merry tunes.

One distinguishing feature of these Homes is their family character. Each house has about thirty young people, with a father and mother to care for them, give them food, mend their dresses, and buckle their toes, if they should get them bruised; and all seem quite happy under this arrangement, with no charity mark upon them.

At half-past one the big bell of the church rang, and the visitors flocked in, filling it nearly to the door. Mr. Cameron Corbett, M.P., took the chair, and after praise called on Rev. Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, to lead in prayer, in which thanks were offered for the gift of the Saviour, for the gift of the Spirit, and the Word, and all means of grace, and for a holy providence that makes room for the incoming of the blessing. In a few well-chosen words, the Chairman expressed the pleasure he had in presiding, and observing the steady advance of such a noble institution. Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang, after a short speech and prayer, dedicated the "Somerville" Home; Rev. James Wells offered prayer in connection with the "Ashgrove" Home, after which Rev. Dr. Fergus Ferguson made reference to "Fairknowe," the new Receiving Home, in Canada, and asked the Divine blessing to rest upon it. Rev. Dr. Stuart, of Dunedin, then came forward, and expressed the great delight with which he had visited the Bridge of Weir that day, and said that on going back to New Zealand he would see whether it was not possible to erect similar buildings at the Antipodes.

Mr. Quarrier, the esteemed founder and director of the Homes, addressed the meeting, reviewing his experience during the previous two years, and asking that additional Homes might be built. Some of the little boys gave recitations with great spirit, while a company of the orphans sang a number of hymns at intervals. It was a day long to be remembered, while many received lessons likely to be helpful to them in their after life, as to the great fact that there is a providence over us, and that God hears prayer, and that while we cannot all be leaders, we can all be helpers in a good cause. Mr. Quarrier is carrying on a great work, worthy of all support. £10 pays for the passage and outfit of one child to Canada. £12 will keep a child in the Homes for one year, while £1500 will build a house to hold thirty children. Money cannot be expended on a better object than helping the fatherless and widows of our country.

Sir,—I shall be obliged if you will kindly allow me to make an appeal, through your columns, with reference to the case of three children which was before the Law Courts in June last, and fully reported in The Times and other leading daily papers of June 13.

Perhaps it will be as well I should first give a short statement as to how the litigation arose.

I was, in 1886 and 1887, one of the assistant clergy attached to St. Anne's Church, Soho, W. In the course of my visitations in that parish I became acquainted with a working man, who was residing with his three children (girls) in one miserable room in St. Anne's-court. The man was in an advanced stage of consumption, though a first-class bootmaker, and able to earn, when well, good wages; then, owing to the sad state of his health, both he and the children were almost destitute. His wife was not living with them.

The three children were attending the St. Anne's week-day and Sunday-schools, having been placed there by the father, who had removed them from a Roman Catholic school in the neighbourhood. From the Church funds and from other charitable sources, I was able to assist the father and his children throughout the winter; but, as he grew rapidly worse, I obtained his admission to the North London Hospital for Consumption, where he died on April 21, 1887.

In the preceding January the eldest child had fortunately been placed in Mrs. Gladstone's Home at Notting-hill, and previous to the father's admission to the hospital, I, at his special request, had been endeavouring to find homes for the other two, as he was in a constant state of anxiety that they should all be provided for; for, if not, he knew that when he left them they would be homeless and friendless. He also expressed his earnest desire that they should be brought up as members of the Church of England. I obtained the admission of the second child into the Marylebone Home, whence she was sent out, with her father's written consent, to Canada, where she is now in a situation.

The eldest child has been removed from Notting-hill to the Sudbury Hall school, one of the late Lord Shaftesbury's Homes, and the youngest is boarded out under the supervision of Lady Clementina Mitford, of Batsford Park, Moreton-in-the-Marsh, with a foster-parent in the village. All the children are doing well and are very happy.

About three months after the death of the father, an application was made to me on behalf of the mother, by a firm of solicitors, who admit that they are acting in the matter on behalf of the Roman Catholic community, for the delivery to her of the children, with the view of their being brought up in the Roman Catholic faith. Having regard to the solemn promise given by me to the father, when before his death I received the children from his hands that I would take care of them, and that they should be brought up members of the Church of England, and for the sake of the children themselves, I considered myself bound to refuse the request made to me. The consequence was that long and expensive litigation ensued. The solicitors acting in the name of the mother made an application to the Queen's Bench Division with a view to compelling me to hand over the children to the mother.

They soon found, however, that they were not likely to obtain possession of them by means of the mother's application, and they then altered their tactics and applied for the appointment of a Roman Catholic lady as co-guardian with the mother, with a view to the children being placed in Roman Catholic Homes and their religion changed.

I, on the other hand, in fulfilment of the promise which I had given to the father, asked the Court to appoint Protestant guardians, and secured the consent of Lady Clementina Mitford and Miss Lee (a member of the committee of the Waifs' and Strays' Society, 32, Charing-cross) to act in that capacity.

The competing applications came on to be heard in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, before Mr. Justice Stirling, and, after a protracted argument, and after having reserved judgment for some weeks, he ultimately, on June 12 last, delivered a long and carefully considered judgment in my favour. He held that the fact was established that the father not only removed his children from the Roman Catholic school, but took active steps to cause them to be brought up Protestants, thus asserting his right to direct their religious education. He further held that it was not right that they should be left in the control of their mother, and he accordingly appointed the two ladies I have already mentioned as guardians with a view to the children being retained in the Homes which had been found for them.

The solicitors acting in the name of the mother have now given notice of their intention to appeal from this judgment. The question being thus still sub judice, it will be obvious that I am not at liberty to refer to the facts and reasons which in my judgment made it imperative upon me to keep the children from the mother's influence, and to retain them in Protestant Homes. But I may without impropriety point to the fact that those reasons have been approved by Mr. Justice Stirling, and I am also authorised to state that the course which I have pursued has received the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury and of the Bishop of London.

The Archbishop of Canterbury in a letter to me dated Oct. 10, 1887, states that "he has reason to believe I have taken the proper course in supporting the just rights of the father." And the Bishop of London in a letter dated Oct. 22, 1887, states "that, after careful inquiry into the case of these children, he thinks that I have taken the only course open to me, and hopes that I may be warmly supported by all to whose knowledge I may bring the facts."

Again on Aug. 7, 1888, he writes that, "As I have been involved in a law suit to defend my trust against an attempt of some Roman Catholics to take the children from my care, he thinks I ought to be helped to defend my trust."

I am informed by those that are acting on behalf of the Roman Catholics that every possible step will be taken to withdraw the children from the Homes in which they now are, in order that they may be educated as members of the Roman Catholic Church, and that no money will be spared with this object.

In proof of this I may point to the fact that at the hearing of the case three eminent counsel, one of them a Queen's counsel, conducted the case for the Roman Catholics, and that the expense for each side amounted to some hundreds of pounds. It will be perfectly plain that no part of this expense can have been provided by the mother, who is a very poor woman, absolutely without means.

Hitherto I have stood in the position of a single individual resisting an attack supported by wealthy members of the Roman Catholic Church. I am much indebted to the kindness of some friends who have assisted me to a certain extent in bearing the costs I have already personally incurred, but I am still called upon to pay a balance amounting to over three hundred pounds, and I am threatened with a serious addition to this sum by reason of the appeal now being prosecuted. Whatever the result of the appeal, I cannot hope to recover anything from the other side, because the mother, in whose name of course the suit is carried on (as I have said before), is wholly without means.

In these circumstances I venture to appeal for assistance in the expensive contest which, to my sincere regret, has been cast upon me, in the course of my ministerial duties; not only to members of the Church of England, but to all who feel with me that the just and absolute right of a father to have at all events a voice in deciding what religious education his children shall receive, should not be forfeited simply because he is dead and unable to defend it himself.

I felt, when I promised the dying man that I would endeavour to carry out his wishes, I was incurring a heavy responsibility, and I shall to the best of my power discharge the promise I gave him. Personal labour and anxiety, such a case must bring; this, however, I do not mind; but I am not in a position to bear without a painful effort the heavy pecuniary cost.

I feel sure, therefore, that to those of your readers who sympathise with me in the task I have felt bound to undertake on behalf of the dead father, and in justice to the living children, I shall not appeal in vain for help. Any sums which they may be prepared to contribute can be sent either to me at the address given below, or to my solicitors, Messrs. Deacon, Gibson, & Medcalf, 4, St. Mary Axe, E.C.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

Ernest Neville-Davies.

A RE-UNION.

An interesting gathering took place on Friday, August 31, in one of the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. in Liverpool. Mr. L. B. Armstrong, who formerly conducted a Bible-class at St. Bride's Church in that city, but who, for the last twenty years, has been doing the work of an evangelist in Spain, being in this country on business, was desirous of meeting as many of the members of the old Bible-class as could be found. Of these, some have gone abroad: one, notably in the Master's service, to Japan; some are in distant parts of the land; some entirely lost sight of; and some, doubtless, gone to be with the Lord. Others were prevented by engagements from being present, but still a gathering of fifteen took place. It was plain that the hand of time had wrought its changes, as one after another came in and was unrecognised until the name was given.

After a social meal, the beloved leader gave personal testimony of the Lord's goodness to him, and affectionately invited others to state their experience. One after another told of trials and victories, and God's faithfulness. A note of praise followed, and before separating it was unanimously resolved that the renewed bond should be sustained by quarterly meetings for united prayer and praise, as long as there should be any left to meet. Thus was the solidity of the old work evidenced by this gathering of fifteen, after the lapse of twenty years, each being a "light-bearer" in his own sphere. What an encouragement to those engaged in similar work! "Your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Should this meet the eye of any member of the old Bible-class who was not apprised of the meeting, if he will send his name and address to Mr. Drewett, 41, Walmer-road, Birkdale, Southport, he will have an invitation sent quarterly; if unable to attend, he might join in spirit, and would at least ensure his name being remembered at the throne of grace at the meeting.

SAILORS IN CARDIFF.—Having been engaged for some time past in the seafaring profession, and having seen the way in which our seamen are treated whilst on shore, I resolved, under the guidance of God, to take the premises called the Sailors' Welcome Home, of 179, Bute-road, Cardiff. Here seamen of all nations can find comfort and safety whilst ashore, and are away from all kinds of evil. Tracts, and books, and papers will be thankfully received at the Home for distribution to seamen. Our object is to send seamen from one Christian Home to another, if there is such a place in the seaport whither they are bound.

Perth Christian Conference.

The twenty-sixth annual gathering of this Conference was held in the City Hall, Perth, during the past week, September 11, 12, and 13. On the Monday evening a happy re-union was held; intended as a welcome by the Perth Christians to the strangers from a distance. It was pleasant to meet, after another year had come and gone, those with whom we were linked by the bonds of Christian fellowship, who were members of the same body, owning a common headship in the person of the one adorable Lord Jesus.

A woman's meeting was afterwards held in a large hall of the same building, which was crowded to excess, and an impressive address was given by Mrs. Quenlin, of Philadelphia. At the same hour, in a smaller hall, a meeting for prayer was held, to plead for the Divine blessing on the public gatherings on the morrow and following days.

TUESDAY.

This morning many old faces were again seen on the platform, and the large hall presented the usual attendance. All anticipated a blessing on the gathering again for another year of the Perth Conference. The chair was taken by Mr. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, in the room of Lord Polwarth, who from sickness in his family could not be present. The opening prayer was led by Rev. Mr. Train, of Hull. The chairman briefly alluded to the removal by death of friends long associated with the Conference, Lord Cavan, and Rev. Mr. Wilson of St. Leonard's, Perth, conveying the lesson to them who were left behind, of diligence in the Master's work, realising that the time was near when they, too, shall lay down their burden of service, and be called into the rest of the Master's presence.

The two important addresses which were given, were by the Rev. Mr. Cowan, of Elgin, and the Rev. Principal Simon, of the Congregational Theological College, on the subject of the day. The former dwelt chiefly on the precious foundation truths, Acceptance in the Beloved of the Father, who, as our substitute, bore the judgment on sin, and provided a ground for righteous reconciliation; vindicating the old theology of atonement, by the death of the divinely appointed substitute, and consecration for service and sanctification or separation to the Lord, resulting from faith in this divine provision for the remedy for sin. The other address, by Principal Simon, dealt with the partnership existing between Christ and the Church, and brought to view the great variety of and wondrously rich blessings embraced in the inheritance of Christ by his redemptive work, and all promised to and conveyed over by the Lord to his body the Church. The believer participating in all that belongs to the mediatorial fulness of Christ.

In the evening, Rev. George Wilson, of Edinburgh, gave us some of the rich provision furnished in Col. iii. 1—17, the heavenly supply to meet all earthly duty and trial in the life of faith down here, the secret of strength being sustained communion with God; and this was followed up by a fervent address by Major Ross, of Aberdeen, pressing for the full surrender of the heart and the will to the mind of God, experienced only in conscious personal companionship with the Lord Jesus.

The closing address that evening was given by Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh, a most searching and amusing exposure of the hollowness of the Christianity of our churches. His text was Rev. iii. 20, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." He said it was a little difficult to exclude from the scope of his remarks the great number of Christian people who were there, and to speak to those who were not Christians. The words of his text were addressed not to the lapsed masses in the streets, but to the lapsed masses in the pews. Some of them might be saying how flat, stale, and unprofitable the church service was getting; the minister was now so dull, and as for the elders, they were never seen; so that they could hardly drag themselves through the routine. He would not say the message was sent to sinners, because they were now getting fearfully technical in their terms, but it was sent to the Church. Christ could be sarcastic without sinning, but it was hard for ministers to be sarcastic. He referred to the churches in what he called the belated towns of Edinburgh and Glasgow. He did not know Perth, but he was almost sure there must be churches in it that had the terrible dry rot of Laodiceanism, which had got so deep into them that nothing would lift it out but the evangelising of the lapsed masses, not in the outside, but in the inside. They were wanting to be done with the humdrum form and routine of the congregation, and to get back to greenness, verdure, sap, and life again. They could imagine a service in all parts, preaching, prayer, and praise, such as to fit the most cultured and refined, and that they were just going to begin business, when suddenly there was a knock at the door. They were actually trying to work the Church without Christ. That was the great blight of the Church to-day. They were a mere Sunday crowd. Their doctrines were sound, and their lives were correct, but they were dying at the heart because of that heresy, lukewarmness. He was up in the North recently, where they prided themselves on their soundness of doctrine, but he felt constrained to say that the heresy of lukewarmness had got north as well as south of the Grampians. The serious fussiness of congregations would be ludicrous, if it were not heart-breaking.

When he began his ministry in Edinburgh, he resolved to take nothing for granted, and to begin at the beginning. When he delivered an evangelistic address at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, some of his hearers sat back in their seats in wonder, and he had heard them say, it might do for missions, but it was not feeding for Christians. Such benighted people! Perhaps some of them would say, "I am sick tired of going to church." So they were, and he did not wonder at it. Take care of the minister who flattered them, for he was not their friend; he was thinking far too much of himself. Don't let them begin to find fault with the elders, although they might deserve it. He had often found that those who wished a revival were the most uncomfortable people in the kirk.

WEDNESDAY.

Sir William Muir presided in the forenoon, and in an opening address referred to the subject of the programme, "Power in Christ for Service." He remarked that we must first know rest in Christ before we can have any power for service. It is only by experience that there can be effective work for Christ. The soul in the enjoyment of forgiveness can best tell of the way and the blessedness of forgiveness. The love of Christ, the constraining power, conveys the truth in sympathy with the condition of the sinner.

In the address which followed, by Rev. N. J. McNeile, of Hafferton, we had the elements of the necessary power for service. Of these he enumerated seven: (1) Power in the assurance of God's love; (2) power for prayer; (3) the power of praise; (4) the power of love; (5) the power of knowledge; (6) power in communion sustained with God; (7) power in hope, and realising the "blessed hope" of the appearing of the Lord, and sharing with Him the glory of the inheritance of the saints. These go to constitute the power for Christian duty, and the impulse to devoted service in the cause of our Lord among the masses that know nothing of his claim on their love and service.

In the next address, by Rev. Mr. Train, of Hull, we were led to the motive that should constrain to this service, not only the experience of rest in Christ, but regard to the Divine order as our guide: "Glory to God in the highest; good will toward men." It is first glory to God, the higher sphere of service; and, next, our testimony as to the name and purpose of God before the world. Our life is linked with a past eternity: "chosen in Him before the foundation of the world"; thence is the map of everyone's life prepared, to be filled up afterwards in time. The highest sphere of service is the Enoch walk with God. The second sphere is in the love of the brethren in Christ; and the third, in our commending the love of God to the world, which is at enmity with God, and in league with the adversary of God. Three L's might very well express this threefold service—Life, Love, and Light.

The evening of this day, as well as the afternoon, was given to the cause of missions. Mr. Charles Guthrie, Advocate, brought before the meeting the condition of the Jews in the Holy Land, in which he had made a recent tour. Dr. Barnardo gave a thrilling account of his work amongst the waifs and strays of the overcrowded City, and the happy fruits of emigration to Canada. Colonel Oldham told of the mission work in India, where he had recently been as a delegate of the Church Missionary Society to their stations in India.

THURSDAY.

On the last of the three days we had refreshing teaching, and the hallowed ordinance of the Lord's Supper. The subject, "The Soul at rest, and satisfied with Christ." Mr. James Balfour, W.S., of Edinburgh, presided.

Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, led us into some rich pastures for sustaining the spiritual life. Starting from the text in Heb. iv., "We who believe do enter into rest," he showed us the blessedness of the restfulness of the soul when yielding all to the will of God, and illustrated this from the teaching of the successive books in the earliest portion of our Bible; finding in each a step in the spiritual experience of the Christian. Genesis, life; Exodus, redemption; Leviticus, worship; Numbers, the walks and wanderings of the redeemed; Deuteronomy, the guidance in the past of the Lord's hand; and lastly, Joshua, victory and possession of the land. The narrow stream of Jordan dividing the period of the strugglings and unrest of the soul from the quiet and peaceful possession of the certainty of God's love, and the assurance that all is well in the Lord's hand, and then this rest of faith is cheered by the hope of the full fruition in the day of his appearing and his kingdom.

The other address in the forenoon was by Rev. Dr. A. A. Bonar, who cast a glance over the whole programme, noticing the variety of meaning our translators have given to the word in the original, sometimes rendered "Communion," in other instances "Fellowship," "Partnership," and "Partakers," as seemed best to suit the context. Between fellowship and communion there is much of likeness, both expressing sympathy in the thoughts and affections of the Lord Jesus. It is different, however, with the word "Partnership," that signifies share of profits in the undertaking in which both are united. Thus Jesus, condescending to become a partner in our nature, assumed all the responsibilities involved, and, having met every claim to which we were exposed—"delivered for our offences, He was raised again for our justification"—now shares with all who trust Him the rich rewards of his purchased possession. All that Jesus has acquired by his mediatorial work, He divides with his brethren—his Spirit, "He breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." His peace, "My peace I give unto you." His love, "As the Father...so have I loved you." "His glory"..."I have given them." "Co-heirs with Him" in the heirship of "all things," and the promise to him that overcometh "to sit with Me on my throne." These precious fruits of Christ's work and his love, presented to us in all the fervency of an experience ripened in patriarchal years, left with the assembled Christians a holy feeling of joy in the Lord, over the riches of their possession, at the closing moments of the Conference proper.

One short half-hour of an interval and we were seated at the table of our Lord, to commemorate his love, and anticipate his coming again in glory—a quiet sweet hour of fellowship with Him while within the veil. The address before the breaking of bread, given by Dr. Bonar, sustained our thoughts on the heavenly privileges associated with the rest of faith "we do now enter," while waiting for the day of the "manifestation" of the sons of God. The second address after the "Bread" and the "Cup" had been partaken by all, given by Rev. E. W. Moore, directed us to "Abiding in Christ," in order to be fruitful branches in the living vine; showing fruitfulness in the consecrated life of service we owe Him who gave his life for us.

Then, with a deeply solemn evangelistic meeting in the evening, closed again for the twenty-sixth time this useful and valued Christian Conference. J. M.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

OPENING OF THE "SALLE RIVOLI."

THE Rue St. Antoine is one of the oldest streets in Paris. It runs from the Place de la Bastile to the more modern Rue de Rivoli. In it the old Lycée Charlemagne is situated, in which many illustrious Frenchmen have received their education; and close by is the church of Ste. Marie, given by Napoleon I. to the Protestants, and which has for its pastors to-day Messrs. Gout and Theodore Monod.

This is a densely populated quarter, and is become more and more democratic in its appearance. The palaces and hotels of the nobility of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries have become warehouses and printing establishments, or lodgings for the people.

On the site of the garden of the palace of a Queen Blanche, about one hundred years ago a ballroom was built, called the Bal de la Reine Blanche. It was largely frequented by artists and their models, and was thus used till the year 1844. Then it was, for a few years, turned into a billiard-room, to be re-opened as a dancing-saloon, under the name of the Salle Rivoli, of a lower kind than before. It was then used three or four times a week, especially on Sundays, and the worst class of society frequented it. It was also a meeting-place for the Anarchists. More than once has Louise Michel made her passionate appeals from its platform. In fact, the hall had about as bad a name as could be for low society, and for tumultuous political gatherings.

In the spring the lessee died, and the hall was therefore to be let. When we heard of this, there was at once the desire expressed by all that, if possible, the Mission should secure it. But could it be done? There was only one way—by removing into it the work that had been carried on with so much success in the hall on the Boulevard de Sébastopol, the lease of which would shortly be ended, but which it had been Mr. McAll's intention to renew. After much anxious consideration and much prayer, the matter was decided, and a lease was signed for four years for the Salle Rivoli, the landlord giving immediate possession of the place, that the needful repair might be commenced, though no rent was to be paid until three months later. It is a fine building, well arranged, and will seat, with the galleries, 800 people. There are also side rooms for classes and smaller meetings, and the noise of the busy street is deadened by the short corridor which gives access to the hall.

Although the regular meetings will not be begun till the month of October, it was resolved to have an opening meeting while several friends from America were with us, especially Mrs. Chase and Miss Lea, the president and treasurer of the American McAll Association, and also our good friend, Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, who has paid us two visits—all too short, but full of blessing and help.

Tuesday, September 5, was fixed for the opening meeting. The three halls in the neighbourhood were closed that evening, and special tickets were issued, inviting chiefly the attendants of the Mission stations. By the time of the opening every seat was filled, and many went away who desired to get in. Altogether over 900 were counted in the room. It was a cheering sight. The place was clean and fresh; the old paintings and tawdry decorations had been all removed; texts of Scripture adorned the mirrors that had reflected very different objects formerly; the hearty singing of the sweet hymn, instead of the song and dance music, or the shouting of some revolutionary song. Then the loving earnest addresses by Mr. McAll, Pastors Mettetal, Gout, Dr. Pierson, M. Réveillaud, M. Saillens, Mr. Brown, &c., all praising God for the good things that He had made to pass before their eyes, and that He had prepared in the midst of Paris. It was good to see so many gathered from all parts of the city, who had been blessed by the Mission, who were there to rejoice that so "great a door and effectual" had been opened in the country.

> Marchons avec joie, dans le bon chemin:
> Redites moi l'histoire de l'amour de Jésus,

This is, we believe, a most important step in advance for the work. We have this hall in the very centre of Paris, of so large a size that we can hold meetings as we have never before been able to do. We trust that, as the Gospel is nightly preached, it will be the birthplace of many souls, and the centre of light to thousands. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that the evil that has been done in the Salle Rivoli during the past 100 years may be speedily outbalanced by the blessing that God will bestow on its new occupants.

Paris. W. SOLTAU.

NOTE BY REV. DR. A. J. GORDON, OF BOSTON.

The religious and the political reactions in France have been quite parallel in their character. The one has been from imperialism to republicanism and the other from formalism to informalism. Everything clerical or ecclesiastical is at vast discount with the people. Priestly attire of every cut and church ceremonies of every degree are so distasteful that they must be entirely disused if the interest of the masses is to be in any degree regained. To say nothing of the church, which the large majority have long since deserted, even the name of chapel is repelling. Therefore the hall in which the McAll Mission is doing its work is found to be exactly the place; and the simple evangelistic service—reading of Scripture, popular singing, and brief conversational address—exactly the service that draws the people.

One is astonished to find what meagre audiences even the most eloquent Protestant preachers get in their churches and chapels. We addressed several of the week-night meetings of Mr. McAll in his various salles, and invariably found large audiences. It was noticeable that everything savouring of ecclesiastical formality was avoided, and that the service was simple, direct, friendly, and helpful to the last degree. In this Mission the starting-point of Christianity has been resumed; religion has returned to the common room; Christ is set forth in the dialect of every-day life, and once more the common people hear him gladly.

It is a most interesting experience to worship with the humble companies that gather in these halls, and to speak to them the word of life, as we have done evening after evening of the present week (July 9). They manifest a deep sympathy with what is said; and in the after-meetings they speak and pray as those who evidently know the grace of God and the love of Jesus Christ his Son. The plain rooms, the bare floors, the wooden benches, seem more attractive to them than the magnificent cathedral into which they might step for special worship, but for which they evidently have no taste. In a word, here is a genuine revival, which always means a return to primitive Christianity.

One is struck by the fact that revival and apostasy are advancing side by side in Europe. The ritualism of the English cathedral is rapidly carrying the Anglican Church back to the Middle Ages, and reinvesting her with the trinkets and trumpery of "the scarlet woman." But the evangelicals of that body are moving in an exactly opposite direction towards simplicity in worship and warm fellowship with all true Christians. As the one party becomes more formal, the other becomes more informal; as the one is moving for restoration of organic unity by reunion with the Greek and Roman churches, the other is moving for spiritual unity by fellowship with all believers who in simplicity and in truth hold the Head. The McAll Mission is a symptom of the present-day revival, not something unique or abnormal.

Ecclesiasticism is reviving alarmingly in England; but in England also, and in France, and in Italy Lollardism and Huguenotism and Waldensianism are reviving also. All the last mean the same, a return to primitive Christianity—a reassembling in the upper room.—Our Day.

MEETINGS OF MINISTERS

AT REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL.

ON the invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer a large number of Baptist ministers from all parts of the country spent parts of three days at Regent's Park Chapel, with the view of quickening their spiritual life, and acquiring new power for service during the coming autumn and winter. Hospitality was shown them by members of the congregation and other friends, and arrangements made for lightening their travelling expenses.

The meetings continued from 4 p.m. on Monday until 11 on Wednesday, when they concluded with the observance of the Lord's Supper. High expectations had been raised as to the blessing that might accrue, but they were more than realised. The tides of holy feeling and consecration rose very high, and the meetings broke up with many expressions of gratitude to God on the part of those who had been privileged to take part in them.

The earlier sessions were devoted to heart-searching and confession of sin, and many were the confessions of the inferiority of the motives which had actuated the holiest services. And from these the course of thought led through consecration and faith in the keeping power of Christ to definite waiting on Him for the power and filling of the Holy Spirit, which was shed forth abundantly. There was abundant exposition of Scripture and teaching, and addresses on the various subjects were given by selected ministers, whose words will be long remembered. Revs. J. R. Wood, W. R. Skerry, W. Fuller Gooch, W. Cuff, W. Hackney, J. T. Wigner, J. T. Briscoe, H. Martin, V. J. Charlesworth, W. Page, and others took part.

Special emphasis was laid by Mr. Meyer on the fact that the widespread teaching of the present day on consecration, death and life with Christ leads directly to believers' baptism; and he urged that all the ministers should teach the Scriptural basis of the ordinance from Rom. vi.; also advising them to hold themselves ready to baptize members of other churches who might desire to obey the Lord's command, without requiring them to attend their ministry or identify themselves with their body.

We believe it is in contemplation to hold more of these meetings, with the view of raising and quickening the spiritual life both of ministers and of their congregations.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Thomas Holt, of Sydney.

Dr. and Mrs. Pierson, of Philadelphia, sail from Liverpool by the Umbria on Sept. 29. While acquiescing in their decision to return home, in view of the congregational and public claims on Dr. Pierson, the Edinburgh Committee are extremely anxious that he should pay another visit to this country, to continue the work of missionary advocacy so well begun by himself and Dr. Gordon. They have requested Dr. Pierson to take the proposal into consideration; and if he is able, in due season, to resume the work, it is hoped that the movement will extend to all parts of the United Kingdom. Dr. Pierson will address several meetings in Liverpool prior to his departure.

We congratulate the Baptist body on their escape from a dilemma which threatened it. Rev. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, had been asked to preach the opening sermon at the Autumnal Session at Huddersfield. But in view of his recent book on "Inspiration," it would appear that many strong protests have been presented against his selection by the Executive for this post, on the part of those who felt that, however estimable he is as a man, they could not sanction his views as a public teacher. Mr. Horton facilitated the action of the Committee by expressing his willingness to withdraw, and it has therefore been arranged that he shall not preach. We regard this as a distinct gain for the evangelical party in the Union, and hail it as a sign that the recent protests of Mr. Spurgeon have not been without effect.

It is not always that we can heartily endorse the utterances of our comic contemporary Punch, but the following words are those of seriousness and wisdom:—

> Is it not within the bounds of probability that to the highly coloured pictorial advertisements to be seen on almost all the hoardings in London, vividly representing sensational scenes of murder, exhibited as "the great attractions" of certain dramas, the public may be to a certain extent indebted for the horrible crimes in Whitechapel? We say it most seriously; imagine the effect of these gigantic pictures of violence and assassination by knife and pistol on the morbid imagination of unbalanced minds. These hideous picture-posters are a blot on our civilisation.

Can any of our readers oblige us with the words of a poem, written by Mr. Morsehead, and published as a leaflet about forty years ago? It began thus:—

Peace in Jesus! Blessed promise!
Covenant word of changeless love,
Sealed with blood, and daily witnessed
By thy grace, eternal Dove.
Peace in Jesus! Oh, what rapture
Pure and deep our spirits know,
When, the things of earth forgotten,
All our joys from Jesus flow.

A weekly paper at Woolwich is now issuing a story by Zola. Germany has forbidden the admission of such ordure and France is moving in the same direction. Is England to suffer its love of liberty to degenerate into licence and the dissemination of licentiousness?

We have heard with much interest of a project for opening a place of safe and friendly shelter in Rome for the many young English and German women engaged in various ways in that city. The temptations and moral dangers that surround these young people in Rome are said to be very great, and it is believed that this work, carried on by two Christian ladies, will be an invaluable one. Particulars will be furnished by Mrs. Braden, 44, Burlington-gardens, Acton, W.

Preaching recently at Penmaenmawr, the Dean of Norwich denounced the loose views now too often held upon the subject of marriage, and the tendency to increase the facilities for divorce. Certainly the flippant and disparaging tone in which the divinely ordained institution is too frequently discussed in social circles, the carelessness and lightness with which the solemn step is taken, the growing disposition to shake off home responsibilities, and the loosening of family ties, are among the worst features of the social life of to-day. Dr. Goulburn's protest comes as a timely antidote to the teaching which has been spread by the correspondence on the subject in a daily contemporary. Our recent allusion to it may be supplemented by quoting the following passages from the letter of "An Old Clergyman," which go to the root of the matter, and deserve to be seriously laid to heart:—

> All who acknowledge the authority of the Bible must feel sure that the institution called "marriage" is not a failure, for this sufficient reason, that it is ordained of God. Wherever this ordinance fails, the failure must be owing to the faults of the creatures themselves. Multitudes of happy homes bear witness every day to the loving-kindness of our heavenly Father, who has so ordered that the little families on earth shall be a type of the one great family hereafter in heaven....One thing is certain: it never will be a failure where there is the love of God, and where that is wanting it never can be a success.

An article in The Globe last week, entitled "Drink in France," draws a most distressing picture of the extent and effect of the liquor traffic in that country. The consumption of intoxicants has been largely on the increase for many years, and, judging from the multiplication of facilities for their sale during the last few years, is likely to continue so. Licences to sell liquor are granted to all applicants indiscriminately, and the number of public-houses in the country now reaches the alarming figure of over 400,000, or, at a rough calculation, one for every thirty inhabitants. The principle of "free trade in drink" is carried to such an extreme that no provision is made for supervising the quality of what is sold, and the consequence is that liquid poison of the most noxious kind is everywhere purveyed.

The natural result of this terrible state of things is an enormous increase in the lunatic rate. The number of lunatics confined in asylums has more than quadrupled during the last half century, and the proportion among them of those suffering from alcoholism has increased from 13 to no less than 22 per cent. since 1862. In Paris the proportion is larger, as many as 40 out of every 100 cases admitted to the madhouse being due to drink. The number of suicides, cases of disorderly drunkenness, and accidents due to intoxicants, has also increased to an alarming extent. Perhaps the saddest and most soul-searching feature in the whole account is the terrible fact that alcoholism is now no longer confined to grown-up people in France, but has also become a habit among children of both sexes. Altogether the effects of the drink-demon among our Gallic neighbours are a most solemn and instructive example of the degradation and misery that must inevitably follow an imperfect supervision of the drink traffic, and the obstructors of the temperance cause in this country may learn a salutary lesson from the results of their mistaken policy in France.

The crop of accidents (so-called) arising from the wanton risk of human life for the amusement of others, or for the sake of notoriety, promises to be an abundant one. The death of the poor "charioteer" at the Italian Exhibition, the case of Mr. Simmons, the perilous balloon ascent at Leicester, and the collision at the Crystal Palace, have followed each other in rapid succession. Very many of the spectacles which are now provided in order to satisfy the increasing greed for amusement, are not only foolish and repulsive, but vicious and criminal: the more morbid and dangerous the entertainment the greater the crowd. It is sometimes urged that the Legislature should step in to arrest the evil: but it would be difficult to frame an Act applicable to every case, and which would suppress criminal risk of life without unduly pressing upon some forms of healthy recreation. The real remedy is simple, and rests with the people themselves.

The sad news of the assassination of Major Barttelot by his carriers, while advancing to the succour of Mr. Stanley, has come as a painful commentary upon the assurances lately given by Sir F. de Winton, and others, that no anxiety need be felt as regards the latter. With the Major's death the situation in Central Africa has become doubly serious, and both Mr. Stanley and Emin Pasha are probably in a worse position than ever. It is sincerely to be hoped that the mournful intelligence will lead to some definite and decided action respecting the various suggested relief expeditions. We would, however, strenuously deprecate any violent or hasty action by way of revenge or reparation for this murder, and urge that any expedition which may ultimately be despatched should keep steadily in sight and operate for the attainment of that other and supreme object which the intrepid explorer is not unreasonably presumed to have in view, namely, the suppression of the slave-trade.

At the recent annual meeting of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company, after a declaration of a dividend of 8¾ per cent., some of the shareholders expressed a hope that arrangements might be made so as to enable the servants of the company to have "every other Sunday as a holiday." On the face of it this seems not an unreasonable desire, but apparently the gentleman who gave expression to it must be in the minority, for the chairman is reported to have made answer that he would do his best to reduce the hours of labour "so far as was consistent with the interests of the shareholders"; after this assurance the subject dropped. That the shareholders' interests in this matter run directly counter to the Fourth Commandment, and to the physical and spiritual well-being of the men, does not appear to be considered of any moment. This is to be deplored; for, as the matter stands, we can scarcely expect the overworked servants to have a very high opinion of nineteenth century Christianity.

Goldsmith has somewhere referred to the distinction between a splendid nation and a happy one. The growth of our national wealth and the yearly increase in the national revenue may well remind us of the passage. Unfortunately, much of the accumulated wealth and national income are based upon unrighteousness, and it would be vain to expect a blessing upon it. The report of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the year ended March, 1888, which has lately been issued, shows an increase in the receipts of the Excise of £175,437 on spirits, and £215,879 on beer. These figures, with those showing the great increase in the quantity of spirits charged with duty, are not pleasant to contemplate.

"Poor Ireland," alas! does not show very satisfactorily in this report. Although Scotland paid the greater duty, the consumption of spirits in that country was less by nearly 100,000 gallons than the previous year; but in Ireland the consumption had increased by nearly 28,000 gallons. The total consumption of spirits "as beverages" in Ireland was 4,954,428 gallons, or over a gallon per head for every man, woman, and child in the island. It is dreadful to contemplate the misery which hides behind these startling figures.

A further expulsion from Rome of Capuchin Nuns and "Sisters of Perpetual Adoration" is being carried out by the Italian Government, the communities in several convents having had notice to leave the city. Possibly they will migrate to England, which at present seems to be ready to welcome with open arms all those communities whom the Roman Catholics of the Continent of Europe seem to be heartily tired of.

It is satisfactory to note that a movement on the part of some of the ladies of Paris in favour of the shop girls in large establishments has resulted in arrangements being made for the girls to sit, when possible, during their long hours. Gratified by this success, a large number of ladies of high social position are endeavouring to get the Sunday morning delivery of shop parcels abolished, and are pleading also for a whole holiday on Sundays for the employées of the large shops. We trust the movement will meet with the success which it deserves; for, perhaps, in no place are the shop assistants worse off than in Paris in the matter of Sabbath rest.

A correspondent protests elsewhere against a performance at the Italian Exhibition. The offensive display has not even the justification of historical accuracy, and we agree with our correspondent that Christians should not take their families to visit such scenes.

We notice with great satisfaction a fact which says much for the state of many of the Jews in London. The first of some special services for Jews was recently announced for St. Mary's Church, Whitechapel. Bills were distributed warning them against attending: a counter-attraction was started in the form of an address by a popular Jewish lecturer. In addition a delegate from the Jewish Board of Guardians was placed at the door of the church to take down the names of those who entered. The result, however, was that the audience of the Jewish lecturer was about twenty, whereas 150 Jews listened with the greatest attention to a discourse in the church on Isa. i. 18. The London Jews' Society is to be congratulated at the success of such an open and straightforward attempt on behalf of Israel.

Mr. Edmund Sturge wrote last week to The Times strongly reasserting the connivance of the French with the slave traffic on the East Coast of Africa. It was, therefore, with peculiar pleasure that we read the following paragraph among the telegraphic items in Monday's papers:—

> Paris, Sept. 15.—It is announced this evening that, by the request of M. Goblet, the French Admiralty has ordered the men-of-war in East African waters to chase all slave-ships, no matter under what flag they may be, and to pursue with especial energy any which may be flying French colours.

According to Mr. Sturge the French are by no means the sole offenders. He asserts that "in Madagascar, where till lately the import of slaves from Mozambique had been stopped and the slaves liberated, the Hova Government have now entered upon a retrograde, or, it may be said, renegade course, and seem to be fast relapsing into the savagery of the past." But the statement that most closely affects Great Britain is this:—

> With reference to the concubinage slave trade on the East Coast, it is even more disgraceful, as almost all the real owners are British subjects, Christians, and often highly educated. In its details, too, I think that possibly it is the more cruel slave trade of the two. This slave trade could easily also be checked in a week or two by requesting the Hova Government to carry out their own law, with the assistance of a gunboat on the East Coast to back up and support the native governors there, and to watch against attempts to bribe them. This plan was formerly pursued with success on the Zanzibar coast, when the slaves were taken from the British Indians.

Surely our Government cannot do less than the French authorities appear to be doing, and take the needful steps to stop this inhuman, not to say unchristian, commerce.

In an article on the recent East-end murders, The Daily Telegraph has the hardihood to make the following assertion:—

> The deplorable public hypocrisy which professes to ignore the existence of prostitution, and refuses to license, to register, and to subject to wholesome regulations the hapless victims of profligacy, throws upon the crowded streets, more especially in maritime London, a legion of miserable women without homes, and it may almost be said without names, wholly unnoticed and uncared for by authority, till their corpses turn up horribly hacked and mutilated in canals or in backyards.

How the refusal to license and register those unhappy women who trade in vice should involve "public hypocrisy" passes our comprehension. It is one thing to "ignore the existence of prostitution," which nobody does; and quite another thing to assert its necessity, as The Daily Telegraph seems to do. It is no more a necessary evil than theft or murder, and we presume that not even the oracle of Peterborough-court would license and register the numerous members of the thieving and killing fraternities.

Moreover, we cannot see how the unhappy victims themselves would be bettered, on the whole, by covering the evil out of sight. We fancy the miserable denizens of the registered abodes of vice in Continental cities would rather run the risk of murder in the open street, than drag out an existence little better than a living death, in their prison-houses. When The Daily Telegraph has the complete and impartial courage of its convictions, and advocates the registration of male as well as of female traders in vice, it may begin to be listened to; but, we hope and trust, not till then.

The secession from Romanism of a learned Oxford scholar, and devoted Roman Catholic priest at Sydenham, is reported. This, we are told, makes the fourth eminent Oratorian who has seceded. Elsewhere the Spirit is moving and answering prayer. A letter recently received from Rev. J. McDougall, of Florence, speaks of "several men of considerable power" who lately have left the ranks of Rome and joined the Free Italian Church. One of them is attracting crowds to the Gospel by his eloquence at Pisa. It is to be noted also that the Roman priests are, by a recent Act, no longer allowed to preach sermons which assail the political institutions of Italy. They are very angry about this, but the Protestants regard it as a step towards religious equality. If Italy is the most difficult of mission fields, it contains Christian workers of noble valour, and should ever receive an unfailing remembrance in sympathy and intercession.

The Calcutta correspondent of The Times sends to its Monday issue a despatch, in which he says:—

> There have been recently two prominent cases exhibiting the evils of child-marriage, and the urgent need for reform. In one case a girl-wife, aged eleven, was branded with red-hot irons by her mother-in-law. In the other, a girl aged eleven, of good position, was found by the police dead, her throat having been cut with a razor. Her husband alleges that she committed suicide, but the matter is being investigated. If the native Congress would address itself to the reform of horrible social abuses, their efforts would enlist European sympathy in every direction; but these barbarous customs are accepted apathetically, without the faintest attempt at amendment.

Another telling argument in the same direction is found in the telegraphic news, published the same day, of the voluntary burning of a young Indian widow on her husband's funeral pyre. Surely when a woman prefers death to the sorrows and penalties of widowhood, it is time that something drastic should be done to alter the custom that produces such a result, however antiquated that custom may be.

MR. ALLEN'S WORK, FOLKESTONE.—Mr. Martin Henry, hon. sec. of the Pembroke House Young Men's Home of Rest, Folkestone, calls our attention to certain statements in a communication under this title which appeared in our issue of August 24. It seems that the Home in Dover-road is an independent institution, the private undertaking of Mr. Allen, who is also manager of Pembroke House. Far from being a source of profit, Pembroke House has required much Christian liberality to keep its doors open for the benefit of commercial young men, preference being always given to the applications of members of branches of the Y.M.C.A.

A CONFERENCE ON MISSIONS.

The Harvest Festival of St. Mary's, Spring Grove, Isleworth, was very profitably celebrated at the beginning of the week by services and meetings, in which special attention was directed to work in the great field which is "white already unto harvest." The speakers on mission work included Revs. W. Hay Aitken and R. D. Monro. On Monday, about thirty clergymen connected with the Church Parochial Mission Society met in conference, under the presidency of Mr. Aitken, as general superintendent of the Society.

In the first place, attention was directed to the question, "What are the best means of exciting parochial interest, and of ensuring a good attendance in the early days of the mission?" The principal suggestions were that the missioner should pay a preliminary visit to the parish, and not only seek to learn its special needs, but to secure the interest of the people; that the mission should be well advertised throughout the district; and that Mr. Moody's ticket system of admission should be adopted.

The second subject discussed was, "What shall the Missioner read in Preparation for his Work?" Unfortunately, the missioner gets but little time for reading, but, as the Chairman said, the subject is a very important one, for the mission preacher must be something better than a wind-bag. "Reading makes the whole man." Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, vicar of St. Mary's, Spring Grove, who is the energetic secretary of the Church Parochial Mission Society, spoke of the great necessity of due account being taken of modern history, modern literature, and modern questions. Hearers are more or less familiar and agitated with these, and while ignorant of them the missioner cannot sympathise with or interest many of those whom he wishes to reach. Of course, the Bible must be systematically and thoroughly studied. Rev. C. Green carried everyone present with him when he remarked that all preachers to intelligent congregations should endeavour to become in some measure acquainted with the events, books, and speculations that colour the thoughts of the people whom they address. When holding missions, however, he for the most part tried to get at those who were not troubled with doubts, but who were desirous of experiencing spiritual peace. Objections to Christianity are not always sincere, and, generally speaking, he was disposed to confine his attention to great spiritual verities, and leave cases of intellectual doubt for subsequent treatment. Rev. G. R. Thornton urged a more thorough acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures. The words of the Lord Jesus Christ ought to be more dwelt upon in mission preaching.

Among the books suggested for the study of missioners were: The late Bishop Wilberforce's Ordination Addresses, the Works of Prebendary Row and the late Thomas Cooper, Professor Milligan's Lectures on the Resurrection, and Tulloch's book on Modern Forms of Thought. It was generally held that some acquaintance with speculative subjects would go far to enable the preacher to understand the position of many of his hearers.

A METHOD WITH SCEPTICS.

In some concluding words Mr. Aitken maintained that much of the scepticism of the age is a revulsion against the sadly unsympathetic attitude assumed by a large number of good Christian people. Multitudes of men are seeking after truth, but unless preachers are to some extent en rapport with their sentiments and motives, efforts to reach them with the Gospel will be productive of much harm and but little good. Although not called upon often to preach evidential sermons, missioners must always be ready for doubters. It is. said Mr. Aitken, a rare thing with me now, in conducting a mission, not to be brought into contact with a doubter. At Belfast a short time ago I was leaving the pulpit to meet inquirers in the gallery, and praying as usual that my steps might be ordered aright, when I came upon and spoke to a young man—I believe the Spirit of God directed my action. I put my hand upon that young man's shoulder, and said, "Would you not like to have a talk with me?" He replied, "I should, very much indeed." Arrived in the gallery, that young man said, "I think I ought to tell you at once that I am a sceptic. I don't think we have anything in common. I should dearly like to be a Christian, if I could be." We had some conversation, and parted pleasantly. That young man came to see me three or four times; his difficulties were discussed, and one by one disappeared. I followed the course which I always have followed, of presenting to such persons the minimum of what it is necessary to believe to obtain peace and hope and salvation. I am pleased to say that I got from him, only about three days ago, a most touching and beautiful letter, in which he tells me that he has fully consecrated himself to Christ, that he has found rest, that he is now working for Christ, and has offered himself for mission work. I am quite sure that if I had been dogmatic in tone to that young man, I should have had no influence at all. He told me that many had scolded him, and spoken harshly to him, and added that he had been driven further and further by such treatment. He is a young man of considerable powers, and I hope that, by God's mercy, he may be a very useful man. Among other things, Mr. Aitken recommended missioners to study men as well as books, and to carefully keep a commonplace book.

The third subject of conference was, "How shall the missioner best preserve a quiet mind, and a true devotional spirit, under the excitement and strain of his work?" The Chairman, in some opening words, quoted a sage remark of his father's. Noticing how certain people, supposed to have a savour of piety about them, kept their heads well between their shoulders, and walked with a subdued air, and a stiff and unnatural gait, he said, "Let us be natural, until we are divine." Rev. H. Pelham Stokes made some observations on the physical, mental, and spiritual bearings of the subject, and the discussion was carried on by Revs. A. R. D'Arcy, D. Fox, H. Armstrong Hall, J. F. Andrewes, and others. As so much depends upon the temperament, the remarks were as varied as the individual experience. On the one hand it was shown that circumstances of hilarity in the house of his host could not generally be helpful to the working missioner. On the other hand pharisaic asceticism was shown to be vain and hurtful. The preacher was recommended to concentrate his energies upon his work in cheerful trust upon God, and it was left to be inferred that this sanctified diligence would be likely to leave a fragrance in the family in which he stays, while engaged in his difficult task of calling upon men and women of all classes to repent and believe the Gospel.

THEATRICAL TEA-MEETING.—At one of Mr. William Forbes's gatherings of theatrical employés, on Wednesday, last week, a very interesting address was given by Mr. Fry, a grandson of Elizabeth Fry. Mr. A. Robertson also spoke. The Bible Flower Mission sent bouquets of flowers with texts attached. One of the young women asked Mr. Forbes for letters for the Surgical Aid Society, for an invalid mother. Can any of our readers furnish these?

MALVERN.—A ten days' united Christian mission, conducted by Mr. William Sampson, was brought to a close here on Tuesday, last week. The meetings were held in a marquee, which was always well filled each evening. Mr. Sampson's preaching was with power, and the Holy Ghost was felt to be present to convict and convert. In the after meetings a large number of persons decided for Christ, and believers have received a quickening impulse in their Christian life.

"JUST AS I AM."

Sir,—An account of the hymn "Just as I am" recently appeared in a foreign paper, but was so painfully incorrect in all particulars, save one, respecting the authorship, that I am induced to send you its history as given me by the authoress, my aunt, the late Miss Charlotte Elliott.

The hymn was composed under the following circumstances:—About the year 1840, when in her fifth decade, my aunt, one night, after retiring to rest, was greatly depressed by doubts touching her acceptance before God. Whilst agonising in prayer, some promise, I think John vi. 37, coming to her mind led her to breathe forth her thoughts to Christ in the well-known words, "Just as I am, without one plea..."; and in the morning she wrote them out exactly as they now stand, save that a few years afterwards another verse, the last, was added.

A friend who read her MS. was permitted to take a copy, but on the condition that the words should not be printed. However, they did, somehow or other, find their way to the press, and my aunt's first knowledge of the fact was from the hymn, as a leaflet, being enclosed in a letter with the inquiry, "Had she ever seen it?"

Miss Elliott then published the hymn herself, in, if I remember rightly, "The Christian Remembrancer Pocket Book," of which she was at that time the Editor.—Yours, E. Elliott.

MÉDICAL STUDENTS IN LONDON.

Dear Sir,—In October, as most of your readers are probably aware, the great yearly influx of students to the London Medical Schools takes place, and the one question which will be exercising the members of the different Hospital Christian Associations is, "How may we best hope to get hold of the new comers?" Only too often, I fear, it happens that failure to reach the medical student at the commencement of his life in London means failure to reach him throughout his whole student career.

Then, again, we find, year after year, that many Christian men come up to hospital without making themselves known to us, so that weeks, or even months, may elapse before we are able to get into communication with them. Thus they lose help, which they might have had, at a most critical stage in their lives; whilst we, the Christians at the hospitals, lose the benefit of their sympathy and co-operation.

It would be, I believe, of great advantage on both sides, if the friends of intending students, or, far better, if the latter themselves, would communicate personally, or in writing, with the Secretary of the Branch of the Medical Prayer Union at the particular hospital to which they intend to attach themselves.

They would thus identify themselves with the Christian men, and—most important, I believe—would be known as of them, from the very commencement.

The General Secretary of the Medical Prayer Union, at 47, Endell-street, St. Giles, W.C., will, he tells me, gladly send on application a list of the branch secretaries at the various Medical Schools. The latter, who are usually senior men, would, I am sure, in most cases, readily give advice regarding the medical work, and help any freshmen so introduced to them in every possible way.

Yours very sincerely, Arthur Lankester,
Hon. Sec. St. Thomas's Hospital Christian Assn.
St. Thomas's Hospital, Albert Embankment, S.E.

Canadian Missionary Crusade

By Miss ANNIE MACPHERSON.

The visit of Mr. Hudson Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe to this land is being greatly blessed. Many things would seem to hinder; it is the time of the year when the pastors are taking holidays, and the people are in the harvest fields. Still, though the time to make the arrangements in the various towns and cities visited has been limited, many hundreds have gathered in each place, and much profit and quickening of faith have been the result.

The distances are great, involving much travelling and little rest; yet, to the praise of our ever all-sufficient heavenly Father, the brethren have been upheld, and filled with the power of the Holy Ghost. Churches, town-halls, and church rooms have often been filled at a few hours' notice. Meetings for the Gospel in market squares, though impromptu, have been attended by deeply attentive listeners. Much connected with this blessed, powerful crusade on Foreign Mission work has partaken of the character of a new departure; there has been no "limiting the Holy One of Israel." And the result has been that some have offered to accompany Mr. Hudson Taylor to the Empire of China.

It would startle some workers in the old land to receive a message, "Call a meeting." The church filled; the meeting commenced in faith that Mr. Taylor would arrive. After two hymns were sung, and the train brought him in, without rest or refeshment he ascended the pulpit, and the listeners sat thrilled as with a new Gospel, and many a burdened heart was lifted up and weak faith strengthened. One said, "Oh, he just talked to my heart, and all the worry rolled away." Men talked to each other all through the town that a new light had fallen on old promises, ending with, "Could we but hear more of this!" It seemed a new doctrine of Holy Ghost power.

Next morning, by five o'clock, this man of God started for another, as he called it, "magnificent distance!" Then the awakened interest was followed up in each town by some of the band of workers being appointed to hold a second meeting. On this occasion, Dr. Howard Taylor held a large meeting, which was deeply stirred by his taking up his father's theme, and for one hour pressing home with sanctified, holy, youthful enthusiasm, the crying need of heathendom. The knowledge that ere very long he hoped to be labouring in the ripening field gave a peculiar charm, and all present felt that special unction rested upon this young "David." Who can tell the results which will follow these meetings? Many books were purchased, which will still further enlighten those who have been so stirred; and, in answer to prayer, we are looking that from this town of Stratford, where the first gatherings were held, many will yet be called forth to devote heart and life to the Master's work in China.

In another town, Mr. George Studd speaks first. A deathlike stillness is felt as he portrays the readiness of the people to listen to the story of the Cross. One trembled for the responsibility of these assembled so-called Christian people, should they continue any longer dwelling at ease. And yet was felt the living power, which would ere long cause hearts and earthly treasure to be laid at the Master's feet; that within a few more years the need would be met, the round world hearing that Jesus Christ had died, was risen, and is coming again, to the glory and praise of our God.

Then Mr. Taylor, who has lived out the thirty brightest years of his life in China and has nearly three hundred missionaries now representing him in that land living "under his shadow among the heathen," realising that the Lord hath commanded them to be a light, that they should be "for salvation unto the ends of the earth," tells out the principles upon which the China Inland Mission is founded, not omitting the first beginnings, difficulties, &c., the whole bristling with Holy Ghost touches upon injunctions and promises, from rich experience, proving God's never-failing faithfulness to those who put their trust in Him. To Canadians, this simple childlike trust in God for everything was a new theme, a new way, which the powerful address of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, the following evening, drove home in fuller application for the crying need to men and women to arise for the evangelisation of the world.

In two of the churches in Toronto, Sunday, August 26, each of the elder brethren took a service. Mr. Radcliffe read Matt. xiv. 15—21, showing in a very tender but direct way how the members of Protestant Churches had been selfishly keeping the bread and fish, and not giving forth the Gospel to the heathen—how we had ships, money, and men enough to send plenty to tens of thousands of perishing souls. Then he showed that it was the business of the Churches not to send money only, but to give up their sons and daughters for the work, or go themselves, as in the days of the early Church. He also showed very powerfully that the people of America and Great Britain were but a fraction of those for whom Christ died. Then followed an account of the scattering of the Apostles, closing with burning words on the Master's injunction: "Go, and teach all nations," "Lo, I am with you alway." At Galt similar meetings were held on August 28. In this town $300 were handed to Mr. Taylor, for the support of a missionary lately gone to China, who was well known there.

The brethren have now returned to the States, to continue the work in which the Lord is so greatly blessing them.

AMONG LONDON COSTERMONGERS.

By many agencies the Golden-lane and Hoxton Costermongers' Christian Mission engages in works of love and mercy among a very needy class. In the report for 1887, details are given of the operations of the Mission. Some thirty Gospel services are held weekly in the Costers' Hall, Hoxton-street, N., and in the open air. An association of voluntary workers carries godliness and cleanliness into the slums and by-ways of the district.

Temperance and thrift are advocated and assisted by vigorous means. Among social and benevolent efforts may also be mentioned labour, sick, and burial societies. The children are helped into the country for summer holidays, and parties of adults are taken on trips which are greatly enjoyed. Many other things are done to lighten the lot of the poor.

As a last word, Mr. W. J. Orsman, the Hon. Supt., emphasises the need of a Convalescent Home by the sea, to which deserving poor may be sent. Towards this, about £700 has already been collected; £1000 is still needed. Mr. Orsman says: "If we should secure that sum in our jubilee year (entered on August 13 last), we shall feel that the twenty-seven years of our life, given—without fee or earthly reward—to the service of God among the poorest of the poor, have not been unrequited by his people." Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell-green, Hackney, E.

SUNDAY CLOSING IN WALES.—In a report to the magistrates of Cardiff, the Chief Constable states that while in 1882, the year before the passing of the Sunday Closing Act, the number of persons proceeded against for drunkenness on Sunday was only 43, since that date the number has largely increased, amounting in some years to 118, 127, and 139 cases. A large percentage of the drunkenness, he states, is due to bogus clubs and illicit drinking houses. Owing to a recent decision, many of the clubs which had been closed have recently re-opened, and there are now thirty-one in the borough.

LESSONS FROM THE MOUNTAINS.

The mountains high of Alpine lands
Remind us that God's promise stands,
Eternal, grand, unchanging, true;
Fresh beauty seen at every view.

Their lofty heights all capped with snow,
Reflecting oft the sun's bright glow,
Tell out, O God, thy love and grace
That clothes us with thy righteousness.

Their ragged peaks stand out so clear,
Though distant far, they seem so near;
So, when our faith is keen and bright,
The eternal glory seems in sight.

Sometimes their tops are lost in clouds,
And mist the prospect then enshrouds;
Behold how changed the beauteous scene.
For all is hid behind a screen.

So, often in our life we find
The things of earth fill up the mind,
And heavenly joys recede from view,
And passing things replace the true.

But there they stand, unchanging, sure,
From age to age they still endure;
No winds can shake, nor storms remove;
Until Thou biddest, God of love.

But firmer e'en than these, thy Word
Stands fast eternally, O Lord;
Thy covenant all sealed with blood,
Thy precious promises, O God.

Help us, O Lord, from them to learn,
And thus thy faithfulness discern;
Remember e'er thy Word is true,
Eternal, and yet ever new. J. E. H.

STRATHPEFFER (says a correspondent of The Times) has become fashionable as well as famous, and there are undoubtedly many objectionable features in foreign spas from which the Highland health resort is entirely free.

THE SCIENTISTS' PRAYER-MEETING.—The American Association for the Advancement of Science held its meeting this year in the beautiful city of Cleveland, Ohio. In former years an interesting prayer-meeting has been held on the Sabbath during its sessions, by those members who desire to testify their belief and acceptance of the Gospel. The prayer-meeting was arranged for this year in the handsome rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association. A regular Sunday afternoon service for young men is held there; and the proposal was made by the Secretary that instead of this, the young men should be invited into the Scientists' meeting, as he judged that it would be very helpful and instructive to just that class of young men, to see and hear a body of Christian men of science give testimony to their faith. This was done, and the rooms were crowded with an attentive audience. Many of the attending young men were deeply interested, and it is hoped that much good may result from the occasion, as a counter-influence to the prevalent ideas as to scientific unbelief.

THE HOXTON TEMPERANCE ARMY.—Mr. William Noble and his supporters on Saturday evening opened a sixteen days' temperance mission for Hackney, Shoreditch, and East Islington, in a large marquee, erected in a field within a short distance of Dalston Junction. They left their headquarters at Hoxton Hall soon after five o'clock in procession, with bands and banners, and proceeded viâ Kingsland-road, parading in various streets off the main thoroughfare, for the purpose of beating up recruits. At the Dalston meeting, working men and women spoke briefly on the many advantages resulting from sobriety, and the countless evils of intemperance, these brief addresses being interspersed with sacred songs and temperance melodies. The promoters of this movement do not merely induce people to sign the pledge. Having done this, they well look after them at Hoxton Hall, which has many educational and recreative agencies, foremost among them being a girls' guild, in which they are instructed during evening hours in domestic economy, dressmaking, and other useful arts.

OUR EAST-END POOR.

A pathetic and realistic picture of the condition of large masses of people in the East of London is given in a recent editorial in The Morning Post; it was evoked by the revolting murders that have lately stirred the community. The writer says:—

THE veil has been drawn aside that covered up the hideous condition in which thousands, tens of thousands, of our fellow-creatures live, in this boasted nineteenth century, and in the very heart of the wealthiest, the healthiest, the most civilised city in the world. We have all known for many years that deplorable misery, gross crime, and unspeakable vice—mixed and matted together—lie just off the main roads that lead through the industrial quarters of the Metropolis. The daily sins, the nightly agonies, the hourly sorrows that haunt, and poison, and corrupt the ill-fated tenants and sojourners in these homes of degradation and disease, have been again and again described with more or less truth and force by our popular writers; but it is when some crime or accident, more than usually horrible, has given vividness and reality to the previously unrealised picture, that we are brought to feel—what our keenest powers failed adequately to conceive before—how parts of our great capital are honeycombed with cells, hidden from the light of day, where men are brutalised, women are demonised, and children are brought into the world only to be inoculated with corruption, reared in terror, and trained in sin, till punishment and shame overtake them too, and thrust them down to the black depths where their parents lie already lost, or dead to every hope or chance of moral recovery and social rescue. Then comes a terrible crime, bringing a revelation that fills every soul with horror, and makes us ask why sleeps the thunder, and how these things can be?

The answer is in the facts disclosed. Take the latest as a sample of the rest. A wretched back street is crowded with houses of the most miserable class. Nearly all of them are let out in lodgings of a single room or part of a room. The house where the murder was committed had no less than six families, all toilers for daily bread, some of questionable honesty or sobriety, and all, we may be sure, contaminated in greater or less degree by the vicious surroundings of their distressful home. Loose women have as free run in these abodes as rabbits in a warren. There is a continual coming and going. Precepts of decency are not observed, the standard of propriety is low, the whole moral atmosphere is pestilential. Poverty in its direst form haunts some dwellings, ghastly profligacy defiles others, and this in street after street, alley after alley, cul de sac after cul de sac, garret after garret, and cellar after cellar. Amid such gross surroundings, who can be good? With this atrocious miasma continually brooding over them and settling down among them, who can rise to anything better? Morally, these people are not only lost; they are dead and buried.

This is the part of the subject that clamours for immediate consideration, these are miseries that need immediate remedy, these are the lamentable conditions of human existence, which may well tax the wisest counsels and the most philanthropic consideration of the best men and women of the day. Side by side with all the luxury, the ease, the magnificence, and abounding plenty of our vast Metropolis, are all these pitiable ground-down people, bowed with misery, and steeped in crime. Happily there are here and there, like far-off stars in darkest nights, exceptional instances of honesty. What can be done? How shall the help, the sympathy, the succour of the better circumstanced, the wealthy, and the well-to-do, be brought to bear with sweet reclaiming power among these lost ones?

It is not so much the truncheon of the policemen that is wanted as the wand, magical in its power and healing in its touch, of higher moral ministries—some centres at intervals in their very midst where the gentle ministrations of Christian love shall never be sought by the weary and heavy laden in vain, where the veriest outcast may knock and feel that there at least are pitying hearts and open hands, the instruments of God in the recovery of man. We take into the reckoning all that is being nobly done for the wretched people, but what we want to urge is that it is not half enough. The saddening sight of pent-up misery which the recent four murders disclose confirm our complaint, that the better off classes have not yet risen to the height of self-denial and charity which the hardness of the lot of these close-packed, hard-working, much-suffering poor require to enable them to break through the fetters that bind them down and gall their necks, till they are fain to let things drift; while they, like Lazarus in his grave, are without the wish or power to rise to anything better.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW AT AGRA.

WE had a very interesting and happy day here on July 22. In the morning there were three natives who confessed Christ in baptism. The service was held in the open air, and there were many Hindoos and Mohammedans, as well as Christians, assembled to witness the ceremony. We preached the Gospel to them, to which they listened very attentively, and then the candidates were baptized, one a Hindoo, another a Mohammedan, the third a nominal Christian. In the evening we baptized six soldiers of the Manchester Regiment. I am thankful to say that besides those baptized there are several others who have stood up for Jesus, so that we have a goodly band of Christian men among our soldiers here in Agra. But we are hoping and working and praying for more.

I want to thank friends who have sent us papers, books, and tracts; but they are all used up. We have more than a thousand men here; if we had a very bountiful supply of narrative tracts, how many we could give away! It does one good to see how eagerly in the barrack-room, as well as in hospital, the men take and read these tracts.

Though July 22 was a happy day, it had a dark shadow; for, on his way home from the baptismal service in the morning, our good brother, Mr. J. C. Stark, known to many of your readers, was taken very ill. He died on the following Wednesday; but not without clear testimony that his trust was in Christ. Some away in China may read these words. On his way to India, in 1884, Mr. Stark was fellow-passenger with a number of missionaries of the China Inland Mission. He was then a Freethinker, and bitterly opposed to the Word of God; but Miss Broomhall and her brother were made instrumental in God's hands of leading him on board ship to openly confess Christ. He gave up much for Christ—a very lucrative commission in the liquor trade; and threw overboard a lot of infidel literature which he intended sowing broadcast in India on his arrival. He was kept by the grace of God; and we magnify that grace that changed one so determinedly opposed to Christ, and made him a child of God.

Surely the blessing of God resting upon the labours of his children on board ship should encourage all Christians when travelling to sow beside all waters. It was not argument that convinced Mr. Stark, but the testimony of Miss Broomhall.

A MISSIONARY BUREAU.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be interested to hear of the resuscitation of the Missionary Intelligence Office. Those of us officially concerned in the Bureau are most anxious that it should be (as we have good reason to expect) a means of gathering information of all kinds concerning missionary work and the missionary field, and, under God, the instrument of stirring up individual members of the Church of Christ to fulfil her Lord's command in bearing to the heathen the knowledge of his Word.

The object of the office is pretty well known; but it may be well to say, briefly, that we purpose, first, to collect and put into practical form reliable information concerning spiritually destitute and neglected places, as well as Christian work in operation, throughout the world, and to disseminate this through suitable channels.

To designate promising fields of labour for evangelisation. To report on suitable openings for missionaries which could be made of a self-supporting character.

To urge on Christian congregations their responsibility respecting the heathen, so as to promote representation on the foreign field.

To keep the office supplied with all available information concerning missionary work and needs, for the use of Christians travelling or emigrating.

Details of the several departments in operation, or contemplated, may be obtained from the office by forwarding a stamped envelope. Mr. John M. Pamment has just been appointed secretary, and we feel confident the office will speedily become of great value to workers at home, and the work abroad.

Any volumes of missionary effort and work, or the reports and magazines of missionary enterprise will be gladly received. A good atlas of recent date, and large size would be very acceptable. Financial help is also needed. The treasurer, Mr. H. W. Fry, Dashwood House, Broad-street, E.C.; the secretary, whose office is 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.; and others associated with the office, will be glad of opportunity to give missionary addresses in connection with the Bureau, particulars of which may be had by enclosing envelope for reply.

Commending this work to the Lord, and to the prayers and sympathy of his people,

I am, dear Sir, yours sincerely,

F. B. MEYER.

ASHBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.—A mission in St. John's Hall has been conducted here by Mr. John M. McAuliffe and Miss Tompkins, of Eastbourne. Interesting Bible-readings were given each afternoon on the spiritual life, and Gospel addresses in the evening. Direct and definite blessing accompanied every service, and some of the poorest people of the town were reached. Meetings were also held by Mr. McAuliffe in the market-place and surrounding villages.

THE EXPERIENCES OF SOME ZENANA VISITORS in this city, says The Bombay Guardian, show that a spirit of inquiry is abroad that is very encouraging. Many women are believed to be Christians at heart who cannot see it to be their duty to come out for baptism, or dare not face the outcasting from home and friends that would ensue from open declaration of faith in the crucified Saviour, but who abstain from heathen practices and receive direct answers to prayer. Among the men too, are some who, like Nicodemus, come stealthily to hear the word of God. These almost persuaded ones, and secret disciples, need the prayers of God's people. With the spread of education in this country, there is, and will be, an increasing demand for literature, and while the forces of evil are pushing their mental and moral poison on every hand it behoves Christians to use every effort possible to spread books that will elevate and ennoble the readers, and benefit their souls as well as their minds.

"We heartily thank the Rev. J. Macpherson for his well-written, graphic, and telling life of this 'Christian Hero.' It is a book to be read by all, but especially adapted to do good to the working classes."—The Baptist Messenger.

"From first to last the book is full of interest, and valuable lessons from the life of this humble but honoured servant of Christ. His noble though tragic death, while saving a child from drowning, lends a deep additional interest to the record of his brief but useful career upon earth."—Word and Work.

"TELL JESUS:" Recollections of Emily Gosse. By Anna Shipton.

"This book presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. 'Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God'—is an injunction which in that life was literally and strictly obeyed. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that all our practical Atheists and Christian Pantheists might read it and be instructed; that indolent professors might read it and be quickened; and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—The Christian Times.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS—BREAKING UP OF THE RIGHT LUNG—CASE AT BIRMINGHAM.

The patient, who is in business at Birmingham, requests me, in the event of publishing his case, to give the initials of his name only,—"Mr. R. O.,"—saying that I can refer to him at any time as to the wonderful results of my treatment.

The case was brought under my notice about two years ago. The patient had never been strong since he had pleurisy and inflammation of the lungs about five years before. In October, 1885, he caught cold, followed by successive colds, which reduced him much. He was under several eminent doctors, who began to entertain grave fears respecting him. He was sent to Bournemouth, with no marked result, and after his return home gradually declined still more, until he applied to me.

At this time the expectoration was of the worst character: pains in the chest and right side severe; respiration constantly difficult; prostration of strength; wasting of flesh, in the legs and arms especially; and night sweats. He had been under medical treatment for twelve months, and the doctor's report was that now "the right lung was breaking up." Tonics and iodine applications and cod liver oil had been tried in vain.

In three weeks after first writing me he says: "My expectoration is not so streaked. The liniment relieves my chest. The pain is less, and only felt occasionally. The breathing is slightly better."

In three months he writes: "I have taken your medicine regularly, and must say I am much better, though still weak."

After this he progressed fast. He continued under my treatment for six months longer, until quite well.

His brother, Mr. W. O., writing me in February of this year, about another case, says: "Your medicine did my brother immense good, and restored him to health, which has been permanent. He has married, and gone into business. He is working hard at it, and feels better than he has for years. He has unbounded faith in your treatment."

Letters to the Editor.

THE ITALIAN EXHIBITION.

Dear Sir,—May I caution your readers against the character of the processions and games which take place in the Colosseum at the Italian Exhibition. A visitor to London is naturally attracted to this entertainment by the character of the advertisements, which give the idea that it will be instructive to the young. The truth is that there is a most immodest display, which is unfit for those who bear the Christian name to witness. M.

VEGETARIAN DIET.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see in a recent issue so friendly a commendation of the vegetarian movement. The sympathy of those who, with us, are working for the amelioration of the conditions of mankind, is of great value. In addition to the personal matter of "eating to live," instead of "living to eat," there is another phase of vegetarian effort which will appeal strongly to Christian workers; I refer to the greater economy of vegetarian food, by which our poorer brethren may be enabled to supply themselves and families with a sufficiency of good and nourishing food, instead of suffering from want in consequence of expending their means upon an expensive article of diet.

Of course the great obstacle here is want of knowledge. If the poor were but instructed in the nutritive value of many vegetable food stuffs, especially the cereal, farinaceous, and pulse foods, much might be done, not only to drive away want, but also to remove some of the temptations by which they are too frequently beset. This Society has published some leaflets that are specially suitable for distribution among the poorer classes. I should be glad to send copies to any reader who will write for them, or some for distribution to any who will undertake their careful disposal.

Yours faithfully, Joseph Knight,
Secretary Vegetarian Society.

THE EMPIRE OF MOROCCO.

Sir,—In a recent issue of your paper, I was interested to read the letter on Morocco, from Mr. George Pearse, of Algiers. At the same time, I regretted to see that several errors had crept in, which, of course, detract from the influence of the letter with those who are better informed. I will be obliged by your allowing me space to correct them, especially as I am sure Mr. Pearse would not wish to propagate a single error.

In the first place, the Sultan of Morocco is represented as engrossed in his harem, and merely amusing himself. I am informed by those best able to report on the proceedings at Court that there is not a harder-worked man in the Empire. I do not believe the Sultan ever made kesksu (called by Spaniards "couscoussoo"), the national dish. He seldom rides in the carriage referred to, which is led behind him, while he rides on horseback, on state occasions.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs is no servant of the Prime Minister (Wuzir el Kebîr), any more than in other countries. Foreign trade is not impeded by heavy import duties, though the export duties are ruinous. There are several made roads, and a dozen or twenty good bridges, though the number of each is but a drop in the bucket compared with the number required. The Lighthouse at Cape Spartel, far from being sometimes lit up with candles, is maintained by foreign powers, and has an excellent light, visible twenty miles out at sea, being kept in a state rivalling that of the best lighthouses in England. Functionaries do receive some pay, though ridiculously inadequate. The corn (wheat and barley, oats being unknown in Morocco) exported by the Sultan, is not bought, but the tithes paid in kind.

Education is by no means compulsory. Only a very small proportion of the people learn to read and write, though this is cheaply learned. Locusts being so rare a plague in Morocco, cannot be given as a usual cause of distress, the Government alone being responsible. Pacha is an Eastern word: in Morocco we have Káids and Bashas.

The estimates of population given are of no value whatever, being only guesses. It is enough to say that here is a vast Empire, full of oppressed people dying without any knowledge of the Gospel, whose number is variously estimated at from six to twenty millions.

While missionaries have been going out to all the ends of the earth, this fine country, right in the centre, so to speak, has been totally neglected till within the last few years; but if any good is to be done, in proportion to the need, hundreds must come and labour here. Anyone interested in the work should communicate with Mr. E. H. Glenny, hon. secretary North Africa Mission, Linton-road, Barking, London, to whom those who cannot come should send contributions towards the support of those already in the field. Moghrebi.

THE GREAT LONE LAND.

Dear Sir,—I am an evangelist of the Methodist Church. I am spending the summer in what is known as the "North-West Territory." It is British-American soil. Will the Moses ever appear who shall lead forth the despairing millions of your land to people those vast solitudes? As I write, the pleasant August sun is shining on untold thousands of square miles of unoccupied prairie, just waiting for the plough to turn it over and produce abundance for starving multitudes. A great cry of longing goes up from my heart that the unfed masses with you and the untilled acres with us could be brought together.

For a thousand miles north of me the country is habitable! Much of it a fat land. British capital, now unremunerative, could here find a golden field for investment, and on lines of broadest philanthropy too. You have men and women of means whose whole being hungers for worthy outflow and outlay. They could find it here. Outflow for their gifts of mind and heart; outlay for their money. I am not a political economist. I have no theories to air. But if some of your "society" people pining of ennui would accept the luxurious appointments of travel across the ocean, and then the equally luxurious appointments of travel by C.P.R. across this Continent, I am sure they would find a mission in assisting the poor of your land to a settlement on the broad fertile acres of this land. David Pavage.

THE STATE OF THE EAST END.

Sir,—Our ears tingle and our hearts shudder at what is taking place week by week in our neighbourhood, in our streets, and at our very doors. We hardly know how to stand under the crushing weight. Jeremiah's lamentation expresses our feelings: "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people."

To think that these poor victims have heard the Gospel times out of number, both in the kitchens, and in the open air, yet have perished in their iniquity. It seems to have made little or no impression on their companions in sin, for they are still to be seen walking the Whitechapel-road and elsewhere, courting a similar death. Many have been turned out of their houses in Lady Lake's-grove, Oxford-street, and Nelson-street, Stepney. But that does not remedy the evil, for no sooner do they leave one district than they infest another, and make that as bad. The root of the evil lies within, and nothing short of the regeneration of the Holy Spirit will suffice to make any lasting change.

These poor women have been deeply affected at times, and when spoken to have said, "Well, Sir, what am I to do? I have no means of support, except I go on the streets to earn a living."

The lodging-house men, too, as a rule, are a desperate class to deal with. They seem to be getting more bold in crime, fearing neither God nor man. Things are coming to a terrible pass, in spite of all that is being done to raise the masses.

May I ask the prayers of your readers on behalf of the mission workers toiling in Spitalfields and Whitechapel, for they seem pressed beyond measure just now? James Sharpless.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—In consequence of the terrible murders at the East-end of London special meetings of the Fallen have been held. There have been large attendances, and the quiet, subdued demeanour of the women was remarkable. About twenty were rescued and satisfactorily disposed of. It is expected that many more will accept the invitation of the organising superintendent, Mr. John H. L. Christien, and apply for help at 8a, Red Lion-square, W.C.

LECTURES ON THE TABERNACLE.

For three successive evenings last week large congregations were drawn together at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle to hear an Australian evangelist, Mr. Benjamin Short, of Sydney, lecture on the Tabernacle in the wilderness. Mr. Short discoursed on the various parts of the sacred structure, and drew a large amount of truth from the symbols. His style was somewhat discursive, but exceedingly plain and simple, and the object-lesson before the assembly, comprised in the tents of Israel and the Tabernacle of the congregation, as well as a display of sheet pictures hung round the foot of the pulpit, served to impress the statements of the speaker. The words "Atonement" and "Redemption" were the foundation and framework, the substance and life of the teaching.

After each of the meetings, people came forward to see the model more closely, and for half an hour or more, earnest conversation followed. One evening, our brother asked of those who had been helped to faith in Christ to remain standing after the hymn, and the request was responded to by perhaps five and twenty persons. A Christian worker pressed forward to thank the speaker for the great benefit she had derived, and brought forward a little girl of twelve years, who confessed she had that evening received Jesus, and knew she had eternal life.

Mr. Short leaves for Australia this week.

TURKISH INTOLERANCE.—Mr. A. Ben-Oliel writes from Jaffa to The Times:—The Turkish Government has issued orders for all books entering its territories to be examined by the local authorities before delivery, in a manner practically prohibitive. The Trinitarian Bible Society sent me a case of Scriptures in five languages. My agent was told to take samples to the Governor for examination. After the lapse of several days I called with him to learn the result, and it was this:—"We have got some one" (who, however, was away from Jaffa) "that can examine French books, but none for other languages." So we (English, the German colonists and residents, who are pretty numerous, Americans, and others) may procure French novels, if we like, but books in other tongues must wait till the Greek Kalends."

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.—This yearly Conference of Christians of all denominations, originated by the late Rev. S. A. Walker, which is about to assemble (October 2—4) for the twenty-sixth time, takes rank, we believe, in order of institution, next after the Barnet Conference. Its development has been remarkable. The numbers of Christians from all parts who annually attend the three days of Conference have gradually increased, and large blessing has been granted on the proceedings. This year the subjects chosen for consideration during three days have met with the most general approval, and a season of edification and refreshing is confidently anticipated. "The Word of God: Written, Incarnate, and Indwelling," is the theme upon which a long list of faithful witnesses will bear testimony. All communications on Conference business, requests for prayer and praise, &c. (verified by signature and address) should be directed to Rev. James Ormiston, Clifton, Bristol.

MONTE CARLO.—A correspondent of The Times writes:—Licensed gambling-houses have been suppressed in every country in Europe, on account of the suicides, murder, robbery, and ruin brought by them, such as is of appalling frequency at Monte Carlo. Even the Prince of Montenegro and the Sultan of Turkey have indignantly refused to entertain a recent proposal for the opening of gambling hells in their dominions, and the King of the Belgians has also just put his veto upon an effort to open a house in Ostend. English people are not alone in condemning Monte Carlo, for the Hon. Signor Berio, an Italian Deputy, declared in Parliament that "he looked upon the casino at Monte Carlo as an anti-human institution, and moral and social pest-house, which ought to be stamped out"; and there is actually a standing Senatorial Commission in France urging the Government to take active steps to put an end to this disgraceful scandal. The respectable press of France, Germany, and Italy loudly demand the same thing.

Personalia.

Mr. John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, has decided to build a large hotel at the sea-shore for his army of employés.

Mr. Richard Hill is at the Wooden Tent, Salt Market, Glasgow. The glorious Gospel is being preached with power. Many interesting cases have been dealt with.

Dr. Marcus Dods, of Glasgow, it is stated, will be questioned by several members of his Presbytery with respect to his utterances at the Pan-Presbyterian Council.

Mr. Henry Varley has recently paid a farewell visit to Brighton in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Many testimonies have been borne to the blessing received at the meetings.

Mr. G. W. Leach, of Deptford, has thrown open his library for the use of anyone who will give a guarantee that the books will be read and returned. His parlour is open on Sunday evenings for conversation.

Dr. Adolph Saphir will preach in Dr. Sinclair Paterson's Church, Kensington Park-road, on September 30, and in the Halkin-street Church on October 7 and 14. He intends shortly to give Thursday morning lectures on the Bible.

Messrs. Wharton and Weaver have closed their Bible Van summer tour at Melton Mowbray. Large audiences assembled in the market-place three evenings, and listened with eager faces to the earnest words spoken by these friends and their helpers. A number of Bibles and Gospel books and text cards were sold.

Mr. Oscar Owers recently gave at Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. four talks on "The Bible: Its Inspiration"; "Man a Fallen Creature, or Christ no Saviour"; "The Fatherhood of God: What is It?" "The Hereafter of Man." Mr. Owers deals thoroughly with his subjects. Other Associations would do well to secure his services for the delivery of these "Bible Talks."

Pastor S. Bost, of the Reformed Church at Salies de Béarn, and brother of John Bost, the founder of the Laforce Asylums, died at the end of last month. He was born in 1821, and was trained for missionary work at Bâle. In 1846 he was ordained by the English C.M.S., and sent to India, but failing health necessitated his return to his own land after a year or two. He was distinctly evangelical.

Dr. R. N. Cust certainly has the courage of his convictions; witness his very outspoken book just issued by Mr. Elliot Stock, entitled, "Notes on Missionary Subjects." In the preface he says: "I stand up for the native races against governments, against the white man, against missionaries; and indignantly reject the idea that any white man has a right to lord it over the black man, whether he comes as governor, traveller, merchant, emigrant, or missionary."

Dr. Thain Davidson in his latest sermon to young men does not give a very roseate picture of rural life:—"Human nature is much the same everywhere. The devil is just as busy in many a Highland hamlet as he is in London. We talk a deal of nonsense about the innocence of village life. I have lectured on 'The Perils of the Great City' in one and another quiet little town in Scotland; and gentlemen have come to me at the close, and said, 'We are just every bit as bad here, up to our measure.' The sad fact is, these Arcadian pictures we sketch of rural life are pure fancy. In truth, the country is not a whit better than the town."

Dr. Joseph Parker writes to the papers expressing the opinion that many Dissenting congregations are too exacting in the matter of preaching. "What mortal man can satisfy an insatiable and irrational appetite for originality, genius, power, and every element and force that can invest pulpit ministration with attractiveness? The sweating system is not confined to manual labour. Far too much is expected of the preacher. Unless ministers take the whole question of pulpit training and pulpit function into thorough and serious consideration, the prospects of the English pulpit will not increase in brightness. I may add in conclusion that this is a question which really affects the people quite as much as it affects the preacher. They must be reasonable if their expectations are to be realised."

Principal Oswald Dykes had no fewer than thirteen ministers to hear him at the opening of a new church in Scotland where he officiated.

Miss Lizzie Johnstone, from Dumfries, is conducting evangelistic services at Hawick, with much apparent blessing. The hall is filled with attentive audiences every night.

Rev. B. Baring Gould, who was lately in India as one of the mission preachers of the Winter Mission to India, has entered on his duties as Central Secretary of the Church Missionary Society.

Rev. Dr. Dowling, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, O., has retired from the Baptist denomination, because his congregation would not endorse his advocacy of open communion.

Mr. J. Murch, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding a fourteen days' mission at Dunsfold, Surrey. The meetings were held in a tent. Each night there was a good attendance, and many were greatly blessed.

Rev. W. J. Mayers asks us to say that his new private address is Singapore, Wallington, Surrey. All communications respecting his work with Dr. Barnardo should be addressed to him at 18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Rev. James Paton has completed his seven years' pastorate of St. Paul's Church, Glasgow. There is at present a bonâ fide membership of 750. During the seven years the congregation have raised, for all purposes, £5,345, including about £2000 for renovation and special objects.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost addressed the Fellowship Meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Monday, Sept. 10, and gave Bible-readings at the noon-day prayer-meeting in the same place the four following days. The audiences were very large, and much blessing was experienced. Dr. Pentecost will speak at the Y.M.C.A., Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, on Oct. 12.

A beautiful memorial window, in remembrance of the late Rev. Dr. Fleming Stevenson, has been erected in the Presbyterian Church, Rathgar, Dublin, by members of the congregation. The window represents St. Paul taking leave of the elders of the Church of Ephesus, and contains scrolls, with the words: "Preach the Word; Watch and pray; Gather the wheat."

Dr. A. T. Pierson's book, "Evangelistic Work in Principle and Practice," has just been published in this country by Mr. R. D. Dickinson, of Farringdon-street. Dr. Pierson dedicates the book to his "cordial friend and true yokefellow," Dwight L. Moody, "whose love for the Word, passion for souls, and zeal in the work of evangelisation have provoked to love and to good works very many on both sides of the sea."

Rev. H. Price Hughes, referring to a report by the London correspondents of several provincial journals that he is "contemplating secession from Methodism, and a return to the bosom of the Church," says in The Methodist Times, "How Mr. Hughes could in any case return to a bosom on which he has never rested is not very obvious. When the London correspondent was about it, why did he not do the thing thoroughly, and say that Mr. Hughes was going to join the Greek Church? That would have sounded much more romantic."

Dr. Colenso, of African and Pentateuch fame, is thus described by a writer in The Times in reviewing his published Life: "Colenso was undoubtedly a remarkable man. His courage was indomitable, his energy inexhaustible; with a habit of self-sacrifice, which in every-day matters was almost an instinct, he was the generous champion of the feeble and oppressed. On the other hand, he was impulsive in all things, and self-confident to an extreme. He leaped lightly to conclusions which he could never be persuaded to reconsider. In critical and controversial theology he showed no regard for the weight of contemporary authority which might have made him less confident of his conclusions. It is characteristic of the man that he composed his destructive commentaries on the Pentateuch and some of the Pauline epistles on the spur of the moment, in his South African exile, where he was hopelessly removed from the means of exhaustive research. Yet when he had enunciated his theories and delivered his message, he set his diocesan, Convocation, the most learned theologians of his Church, and the whole bench of bishops, serenely at defiance. The one dogma he held to throughout, and it has been freely adopted by his biographer, was that of his personal infallibility in things spiritual and secular."

Rev. R. F. Horton has asked to be allowed to withdraw his name from the programme of the Baptist Union autumn meeting.

Mr. Thomas Canning is addressing special evangelistic meetings in Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, and the work is being much blessed.

Professor Gracey, of Mr. Spurgeon's College, is of opinion that we are subsequently not at the end, but only at the beginning, of the Down-grade controversy.

Rev. Dr. Ginsburg says there is a manuscript at Cairo, which, if obtained by our Government, and reproduced, would be of great interest to Biblical students.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond is invited to spend the winter in Michigan. He has been urged to spend a year in Australia. He hopes some time to take a trip around the world, and speak through an interpreter to the heathen.

Lady Frederick Cavendish sailed last week from Southampton in the Athenian, to join her brother, the Hon. and Rev. Albert V. Lyttelton, at Kimberley, South Africa, where he is working as a missionary among the gold-diggers.

Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens is preaching at Eccleston-square Church, on Wednesday evenings, upon the International Series of Sunday-school Lessons. The subject each Wednesday evening is that which will be used by teachers on the succeeding Sabbath.

Miss Emily White, daughter of Rev. Verner M. White, of South Kensington, will leave Liverpool for Calcutta on the 28th inst., to take charge of the Normal School there for the training of female native teachers, under the direction of the Free Church of Scotland Mission. The prayers of the friends of missions are requested on her behalf

Rev. R. G. Wilder, of the Presbyterian Board, in thirty years preached in 3,000 cities, scattered over 3,000,000 pages of tracts, gathered into his schools 3,300 pupils, 300 of whom were girls. Besides all this he was one of the committee on the translation of the Scriptures. He wrote and published Commentaries on three Gospels, and edited and translated many books.—Bombay Guardian.

Dr. John Vincent, of Sunday-school fame, is termed the Bishop of Chautauqua. John Calvin was no more monarch in his Genevan Lake city than this ruler is in his American Lake home. His police, his daily paper, his canonical hours, even his cuisine, is obligatory on all the inhabitants of this large city. In it is prohibition, and a Sabbath, and restricted amusements, and ten thousand human beings are ruled by ideal reform rules for the summer.

Mr. John Haffenden, the Bible Society's agent in the Malay Archipelago, has recently visited the Sultan of Johor at his palace, and reminded him of the Arabic Bible which was presented to him by the Committee of the Society during his stay in London. The Sultan has promised to give a written order which will enable any of the European colporteurs to sleep at any of the police stations in Johor and Moar when they are on their colportage tours.

Mr. Charles Cook sails to-day (Friday) for a week's mission at Gibraltar. From thence he goes to the dungeons of Morocco, to supply the prisoners with the Word of Life, and to feed those who are starving. He hopes to visit the prisons of another dark country with thousands of Testaments. One friend promised £15 for this purpose. Perhaps others may like to aid this beneficent enterprise. Mr. Cook's address for the next three weeks will be, Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar.

Mr. Joseph Cook gave a very fresh and unexpected estimate in his lecture at Chautauqua on "Phillips, Gough, and Beecher." He held Gough up, to the surprise of many, for literary excellence. Of Beecher, he said there are three sets of views: those of believers, unbelievers, and those in perplexity. Mr. Cook ranks with the last named. In the course of conversation, he told of an encounter he had with Colonel Ingersoll at Lake George. The lawyer threatened to personally chastise him for his remarks about his signing the well-known petition for freedom of the mails. Mr. Cook invited him to go on, but he didn't "materialise."

Mrs. Charles Turner, of Liverpool, has placed at the disposal of the Archbishop of York the sum of £20,000 towards the creation of a fund for assisting with pensions the clergy of the diocese who may have become unfit for the discharge of their duties through infirmity.

Rev. John A. Chalmers has recently died at Grahamstown, South Africa. His father was the first Scottish missionary in Caffraria, where the son was born. He was sent to Scotland to be educated. Returning to Caffraria, he assisted Tiyo Soga in the translation of the Scriptures. Later he became the pastor of the English congregation at Grahamstown. He was greatly beloved throughout South Africa, and a power for good.

Mr. Spurgeon purposes leaving for Mentone in November. With the exception of a very brief rest at Brighton, and an absence caused through illness, Mr. Spurgeon has worked on uninterruptedly since the beginning of the year. This long spell has been unusually trying to him, for never before has he had to contend against such long-continued physical weakness. He is, however, somewhat better just now, and is preaching with his wonted vigour to crowded congregations.—Christian World.

Mr. Stephen Bourne, in course of discussion at the British Association at Bath, said the future prosperity of this country depended very much on the diffusion of right views on the population question. At the present time there is no necessity, in the position of our country, for the doctrines of Malthus, or for the still worse doctrines saddled on Malthus, now prevalent. There is within the borders of the Empire means of obtaining comfortable support for every member of the community, if only we could get rid of our national vices and inculcate thrift, prudence, and sobriety on the people.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Varley.—A meeting in connection with the removal of these well-known servants of Christ to Melbourne, will be held on Friday evening, the 28th inst., at Talbot Tabernacle, Powis-square, Bayswater. Tea will be provided for friends coming from a distance at 6.30. Public meeting at 7.30. Pastors F. B. Meyer, Frank White, Charles Graham, Dr. Paterson, Fuller Gooch, Messrs. Russell Hurditch, R. C. Morgan, R. Paton, and other well-known brethren, are expected to take part in commending our brother and his family to the care of the great Head of the Church. Mr. Varley will preach, morning at 11, and evening at 6.30, in the West London Tabernacle, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, on Lord's Day, the 30th inst.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—A party of nine ladies left London on Wednesday last for China, in connection with the Inland Mission. Next week we hope to give some details of the interesting farewell meetings held in various parts of London.

RYDE.—We are rejoiced to hear that God has greatly blessed the preaching of his truth at the Iron Hall, and in Garfield Mission-room, by Mr. Charles Inglis, Mr. Charles E. Faithfull, and others. A large number of young men, who were visiting Ryde from various parts of the country, were deeply interested, and some of them, it is believed, were brought to Christ.

DEATH OF MR. G. W. PETTER.—We regret to announce the death, on Sunday, at his residence at Bournemouth, of Mr. George William Petter, one of the original partners in the publishing firm of Messrs. Cassell, Petter & Galpin. Mr. Petter was in his sixty-fifth year. Mr. Cassell died in 1865, and for many years subsequently the business was under the active management of Mr. Petter and Mr. Galpin, the former gentleman taking a special interest in the editorial work of the house. When the original company was transformed into a limited liability company in 1883, Mr. Petter retired from active work, Mr. Galpin becoming managing director of the new firm. For some months past Mr. Petter's health had been failing, and his death was not unexpected. His religious sympathies were strongly evangelical. Among the many literary and journalistic enterprises in which Messrs. Petter and Galpin were engaged during their long partnership, was the establishment of The Echo, the pioneer of cheap evening journalism in London.—Daily News.

JAPAN.—The Japan Mail states that the sum of 51,000 yen (a yen is equivalent to one dollar in silver) had been subscribed by Japanese officials and men of wealth for the establishment of a Christian university at Kyoto, the ancient capital of the country. This money is contributed by men who are not professed Christians, but who are persons of superior intelligence and deeply interested in the welfare of their country.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

PAUL GOING TO JERUSALEM.

Sir,—I send extract from "Beza," which gives his explanation of Acts xxi. 4. A. Coote.

Acts xxi. 4: "They, understanding by the Spirit what danger awaited Paul, out of love, and not by any special command of the Spirit, entreated him not to go up to Jerusalem, being ignorant of what the same Spirit had commanded Paul." Beza.

Dear Sir,—In Revised Version it reads: These said to Paul, through the Spirit, that he should not set foot in Jerusalem; in other words, he would at once be opposed and prevented from carrying on his work there, as ver. 27 in chapter shows he was. God's will was for him to go up to Jerusalem, as shown in ver. 14. C. Postans.

Richmond-road, Romford.

Dear Sir,—I do not think it possible to imagine Paul outside God's guidance in going to Jerusalem. I suppose it was this journey he mentions, Rom. xv. 26, of which he speaks, Acts xx. 22, 23; the wonderful testimony he was permitted to bear, above all, the Lord's appearance to and commendation of him (Acts xxiii. 11) when there, all contradict such a supposition, and leave, to my mind, but one construction to put on ver. 4. Every child of God knows, if he is in the habit of looking up for guidance, that God does say to him, "Thou shalt not go up to Jerusalem," and yet guides him there (as he had planned under his direction) in his own good time. St. Paul, no doubt, knew what it was to take a step at a time, and listen to the Spirit's "Thou shalt not" as well as his "Thou shalt": and it seems to me he was just doing this as he tarried the seven days at Tyre, the one at Ptolemais, the many at Cæsarea, instead of going on directly. Most interesting, too, taking this view, that though at Cæsarea he was with prophetesses, they do not seem to have had for him any other guidance than that given at Tyre, and not until the prophet Agabus comes down from Judea do we find him moving forward.—Yours truly,

10, Milner-street, N. Lucy B. Ballantine.

Sir,—Taking into consideration in connection with this passage, and xxi. 10—14, also quoted by the inquirer, the other two related passages, xix. 21 ("Paul purposed in the Spirit...to go to Jerusalem"), and xx. 22, 23 ("I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem," &c.), I think we may conclude that in each case it was merely revealed by the Spirit to those who would have dissuaded Paul, that he should suffer by going to Jerusalem, and therefore their human judgment led them to try and save so valuable a person to the Church. This view agrees with Luke's statement (xxi. 14), that they ceased to attempt to turn Paul from his purpose, saying, "The will of the Lord be done." If they recognised it as God's will, the same Spirit which led Paul to go would not reveal to other believers that it was not right for him to go.

There is some indirect evidence in favour of this view in the fact that Paul had previously shown himself under the direct guidance of the Spirit in his journeyings, as in Acts xvi. 6—10. Perhaps we may include amongst the things, none of which moved him (xx. 24), the entreaties of his friends. They were, I think, permitted to try him, and see if he were wholly purposed to do whatsoever the Spirit bade him; for a less wholly sanctified man might have sheltered himself behind the arguments and persuasion of his friends. G. A. F.

[Answers also received from E. M., J. S. K; R. H. B., who proposes an altered, but inadmissible reading; and R. J. L., who seems to be entangled with spiritualism, and says, "these communications, which are somewhat contradictory, are the result of being in communication with different spirits." Nothing in our judgment could be farther from the truth than this. Canon Cook, in "Speaker's Commentary," says:—The foreknowledge was inspired; the advice based upon it was a mere human inference. St. Paul accepted the information, but did not yield to the warning. Christ's approval of his conduct is implied in xxiii. 11. Alford similarly.

We do not think "through the Spirit" implies a mere human inference. We think the counsel was a test of Paul's obedient fixity of purpose, which it tended to confirm. He had the warning of the slain prophet (1 Kings xiii.), and the encouragement of Elisha's repeated reply to Elijah, "As the Lord liveth, and thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee."—Ed.]

"NON-RESISTANCE OF EVIL."

Sir,—In reply to "F. H. H.," who asks, "On what principle of justice or love the teaching of the Lord Jesus in Matt. v. 39 is to be carried out," I think that the principle of non-resistance here emphatically enjoined is found in the preceding verse, also 43—46, and means that Christians are not to resist injury by injury.

It would be absurd, besides being contrary to other Scriptures (as Rom. xiii. 1—10, and 1 Peter ii. 13), to say that criminals, lunatics, and dangerous persons were not to be restrained, and their evil intentions resisted, even by force, if necessary, as it would not be loving them to withhold such restraint.

It is quite another matter to resist injury by inflicting another or similar injury, and it is such resistance that I believe is here forbidden. Many professing Christians consider this injunction to be impracticable, at any rate in the present condition of society; but as followers of Him who is Wisdom, as well as Love, we have nothing to do with conveniences when a matter of principle is concerned. Our very submission to the consequences might be, as in the case of Daniel and his three companions, our best way out of them. Our Lord makes no mistakes; and when the world can show some better proof of success in its mode of resisting evil than we now see, it will be time enough to condemn the command of our Lord and Master as being impracticable.

The history of Daniel and his friends in the Old Testament, and the Acts of the Apostles in the New, ought to convince any true believer that when we obey God, and trust Him for consequences, there will be a power behind all his commands that will be a far better protection than the use of steel or lead.

If "F. H. H." would like to have later facts in support of this view, I would recommend him to read the "History of Friends" during the Rebellion in Ireland in 1789, and the account of William Penn's settlement of the colony of Pennsylvania to be had from almost any Friends' library.

Wexford, Ireland. J. S. Thompson.

Sir,—I do not think that you have hit quite the right point in explaining this difficult passage (Matt. v. 39). In my opinion it is neither upon a principle of justice, nor upon a principle of love, that the teaching of the Lord Jesus in this passage is to be carried out, but upon a principle of peace, avoiding strife and contention at any price, as laid down by the Apostle in 1 Cor. vi. 7. The carrying out of this injunction in Matt. v. 39, of course, depends upon circumstances, for Christ Himself (John xviii. 23) did not carry out his general command under the particular circumstances in which He was then placed, though his words did not express any anger, to which Paul gave way in Acts xxiii. 2, 3. Please excuse these few additional remarks.

WESTMINSTER LODGING-HOUSES. — Rev. Dr. Rigg presided over a meeting, held recently to arrange for autumn and winter work in these lodging-houses, under the auspices of the East London Evangelisation Society and London Lodging-house Mission. It was stated that there are forty-seven lodging-houses in Westminster, with over 4500 inhabitants. These people would never hear the Gospel unless Christian workers went to them. The unsectarian principles of the Society have done much to facilitate the work, and at the present time services are being held in seven Roman Catholic kitchens. On the motion of Rev. A. Bullen, of St. Margaret's, Westminster, the Society was commended to the support of all Christian workers.

AN INFAMOUS TRAFFIC.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily News writes:—"The Russian police has recently discovered the existence at Odessa and Warsaw of well-organised bands, the members of which, under false pretexts, have persuaded a number of young Russian girls to leave their homes and to go with them abroad, ordinarily to Hamburg, where they are embarked on board Transatlantic steamers bound more especially for the great ports of South America. It is stated that Russia and Austria overflow with the agents of these bands, which have their central office at Hamburg. The agents receive up to 5000 roubles for every attractive victim they succeed in bringing on board a steamer. The Russian police is joining with that of Hamburg in putting an end to this infamous traffic."

Temperance Lesson.

Our lesson deals chiefly with wilfulness, exposing it as terrible wickedness ; but as it shows a connection between wilfulness and gluttony and drunkenness, it may well be taken for a temperance lesson :—

A Portrait of a Wilful Boy.—He is "rebellious," worse still, he is "stubborn" in his rebellion. Listen to his talk ; what big, swelling words ! He is very proud of his (would-be) grand, defiant words, e.g., "I won't," "I shan't," "I shall do as I like," "Nobody shall order me about," "I care for nobody, and nobody cares for me," "I take good care to have my own way," "Father shan't order me about, I know ! I mean to be free." He talks thus with the air of a lad who is doing a fine thing. He struts and speaks loudly, as though it made him more manly to say such things. Or, perhaps, the rebellion takes the form of obstinate sulkiness.

He didn't grow wilful all in a day. One act of disobedience made the next easier. He grew bolder ; became more openly rebellious ; the habit of disobedience ("having my own way" is what he called it) strengthened ; and at last he was bold enough to trample on his father's authority, to resist his mother's entreaties and tears, and to resist every punishment, becoming every day harder and more shameless. Authority, love, and chastisement—all fail.

Lesson: The habit of disobedience, being natural to us, is soon formed. Once formed it easily grows into stubborn rebellion, into desperate wilfulness ; and for a thoroughly wilful boy there is little hope. A wilful boy is a bad boy.

Wilfulness is the Mother of Vice.—"He is a glutton and a drunkard." This is generally the case. Too proud to obey the kind and wise commands of parents, he falls under the power of evil men and evil passions. If we were all good sons and good daughters there would be few gluttons or drunkards in the world. Nothing will dispose a lad to the bondage of drunkenness and sensual sins more quickly than the spirit of wilfulness towards parents. "Don't care" takes easily to drink. "I shan't" is soon vicious.

Illustration.—A kite rose high into the bright summer sky. The strong, steady wind took it up and up, till all the string was used out, and it could rise no higher. Then I heard it grumbling in its talk. There was little need, I'm sure, for it looked brave and beautiful enough as it swayed grandly to and fro. "Oh, this bothersome string !" it said. "I wish I could break it : then I could go up ever so far—up to the very clouds." Then I saw it try and strain till it broke its string ; but instead of going up to the clouds, it darted wildly about, but always downward, till it struck the ground, and lay there a broken, muddy, useless thing—a picture of the boy who breaks the string of parental authority, by daring to have his own way.

Learn to obey—parents, and, above all, God, the heavenly Father. This will keep you from drunkenness and vice. "I can't," said a boy, when hard pressed by companions to do some wrong. "I can't, father wouldn't like it !" And he didn't ; so obedience kept him from evil. The Bible, too, tells of a young man who, when sorely tempted to a great sin, cried, "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God !" So the spirit of obedience to God saved Joseph from vice, and made him great and good.

Wilfulness is desperate Sin.—Many think it a fine thing to sulk or rebel. Some boys feel big —more manly—after a loud "I shan't," spoken to mother or father. They like to "show off," as though a rebellious spirit were pretty and admirable.

What did Moses think of it—the great, gracious, and noble leader? He thought it so fearful, shameful, and hopeless a sin, that a boy who resisted all authority and correction should be publicly stoned. A bad son was sure to be a bad citizen. If he disobeyed his father's law, he would break God's laws too, and his country's. He would teach evil to others. So, in mercy to everybody, he was to be stoned. Moses, the man of God, judged that a spirit of determined rebellion against parents was most unnatural, and deserving of death.

Witchcraft and idolatry are often spoken of as terrible sins, among the worst of all sins ; but Samuel said to Saul, "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry" (1 Sam. xv. 23). Some boys think it manly to have their own way, in spite of their parents ; but who knows best what is manly and noble, they or the Bible. The Bible says, "A fool despiseth his father's instructions : but he that regardeth reproof is prudent" (Prov. xv. 5). "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it" (Prov. xxx. 17).

If to be wilful to parents be so sinful, and so shameful, what of wilfulness towards God ! He has more right to will than a father, and loves better than mother. What great reason to be ashamed of our stubborn rebellion towards Him ! What reason to seek his pardon, and the new and obedient heart, which He gives to them that ask ! "I will put a new spirit within you ; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh ; that they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them" (Ezek. xi. 19, 20).

Nicodemus.—John iii. 1—16.

It is probable that Nicodemus came to Jesus by night because he was ashamed to do so by day. There are three references to Nicodemus in the Gospel of John, and in each of these we are reminded of the fact that he came to Jesus by night. In one of these passages (chap. vii. 50, 51) he is brought before us as a champion of the cause of Christ, and in another he is represented as assisting to prepare the body of Jesus for the burial (chap. xix. 39), and in both passages the fact that he came to Jesus by night is repeated, as if the writer regarded it as a remarkable thing that he who came in such a way at first should in the end have been so bold. The narrative from which our lesson is taken deals primarily with the great question of Regeneration. We shall note—

(1) The Need of Regeneration.—Nicodemus was the spokesman of a party ("We know," ver. 2). He was himself a man of the Pharisees, and no doubt uttered what was at that time the conviction of the Pharisees when he said, "We know that Thou art a teacher come from God." Our Lord recognised that Nicodemus had this representative character, and was no doubt thinking of the whole of those who were represented when He said, "Ye must (not "thou must") be born again." But our Lord used words of a still wider significance—words having an application to the whole human race, when He said, "Except a man (any man) be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God" (ver. 3). Nicodemus had characteristics which show how much a man may have without the experience of this important change. He was : (a) A religious man.—Religion is not regeneration. Many have religion who are without God (2 Tim. iii. 5). (b) A man of knowledge.—"We know." He knew about Christ, but he was without a saving knowledge of Him. (c) A teacher of others.—"A master in Israel." (d) One who had respect for Jesus.—He called Him Rabbi. Most men despised and rejected Jesus. This ruler called Him "Rabbi." (e) One who believed in the evidence of miracles.—The miracles of Christ were no doubt intended to be the credentials of his Messiahship (John v. 36) ; and, as such, it would appear Nicodemus had received them. Nothing will do as a substitute for the new birth. The new birth is necessary as : (a) A qualification for the enjoyment of God's favour.—That which is born of the flesh always must be flesh, and "they which are in the flesh cannot please God." (b) As a means of escape from the second death.—"He that is born only once," says one, "will die twice ; but he that is born twice will only die once." (c) For the perception of the things of God.—"He cannot see." Nicodemus could see the miracles, but he couldn't see the kingdom of God. (d) As a preparation for submission to the rule of God.—To enter the kingdom of God is to come under the control of Divine authority. This the carnal nature cannot do (Rom. viii. 7). (e) In order to meetness for living in the presence of God.—A life of communion with God is not possible to an unregenerate man. Heaven would be no heaven to a man not born again.

(2) The Nature of Regeneration.—Regeneration implies a change that is : (a) Radical.—It is not improvement, but new birth. Philanthropists often say, "We must improve men." Social reformers say, "Educate men." Ritualists say, "Make men religious." Christ says, "Ye must be born again." (b) Mysterious.—The question of the natural heart is, "How can these things be ?" The work of regeneration was compared by our Lord to the operations of the wind. Of these operations we know but little. We cannot see the wind or the laws that control its movements, and to many questions respecting it our reply must be, "We cannot tell." So is it with respect to the workings of the Holy Ghost. We can give no scientific disquisition that will explain them. The only knowledge we can have of what regeneration is, is that which comes through the channel of experience. (c) Spiritual.—"Of the Spirit." The Divine Spirit only is the cause of this great change. Hence, regeneration is described as being born "not of the will of man" (John i. 13), "from above" (John iii. 7, margin), "of the Spirit" (John iii. 6), "of God" (John i. 13), "by the Word of God" (1 Peter i. 23).

(3) The Evidence of Regeneration.—We know the wind blows by the effects produced by it. The cloud of dust, the swift-sailing ship, the stir of moving branches in a forest, tell of the operation of the wind. So the changed life is the evident token of the changed heart (1 Cor. vi. 11).

RESCUE WORK IN BOHEMIA.

About eighteen months ago, a committee of ladies, under the presidency of Mrs. A. W. Clark, started a very small "Home" in Prague. The necessity for efforts of this kind is very great. Besides hundreds of licensed prostitutes, there are, according to a prominent police official, at least 10,000 women and girls living more or less on the wages of sin. The few months' experience has shown the Committee that they must work on a larger scale, and they have secured a house and garden near Prague, where they can receive twenty of their poor sisters. The price of the property is about £430, which is to be paid in instalments. A payment of nearly £200 is due on November 1, and help towards meeting this is earnestly asked for. The public conscience in Prague is so far from awake on such matters that local aid is extremely deficient.

SCALLOWAY, SHETLAND.—We have had a brief visit of two evangelistic deputies from the United Presbyterian Synod. There was manifested a good deal of unity, and the appeals of the deputies were heard with solemn interest. Though the mission was very short, it was of great value. Will friends join us in prayerful sympathy for large blessing in Shetland this winter? The books and periodicals sent by some of them were judiciously used, and others would be valued.

William Falconer.

MISSION WORK IN TOTTENHAM.—Under the auspices of the London City Mission a new iron mission-hall was opened in High Cross-lane, Tottenham Hale, on Thursday last week. Evangelistic services were formerly held regularly in an old cowshed near by ; but when the present missionary, Mr. Saveall, was appointed to this district, the meetings were so largely attended that the house soon became too small to hold the people who flocked to hear the Gospel. Mr. Stacey, a gentleman well known round about for his Christian zeal and philanthropy, therefore secured a piece of land, and had the present hall erected ; it is capable of seating nearly 200 persons. Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P. for Tottenham, who takes a warm interest in such good works, presided at the opening ceremony, and delivered a very sympathetic address, referring with gratitude to the work accomplished in the district in recent years by the Mission. With regard to the mass of the people, he said he did not know anything calculated better to meet their religious needs than such mission halls. Other speakers followed.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Sultan of Zanzibar has remitted customs dues to the extent of 500 rupees annually on goods imported for the Church Missionary Society.

Bishop Mackarness is lying in a very dangerous state at Cuddesdon Palace, and has not left his bed for a month. His lordship is somewhat better than he was three weeks ago; still his recovery seems impossible.

Rev. Canon Quirk, vicar of Rotherham, has declined the offer of the rectory of Spitalfields. The living has now been offered to Rev. T. J. Madden, vicar of St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness. Mr. Madden is a spiritually-minded Evangelical Churchman, and is still quite a young man.

At a meeting at Scarborough last week, in aid of the Missions to Seamen, Archdeacon Blunt directed attention to the needs of seamen, and with emphasis insisted that it was the duty of all to give vigorous support to this Society of the National Church working among over 700,000 of our seafaring classes afloat and ashore.

The Church Home Mission has commenced operations for the winter. Missionary preachers will be sent to any part of the country where a group of parishes can be arranged by a local honorary secretary. Rev. Dr. John Gritton, one of the hon. secs. (20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.), calls attention to the committee's need of "faithful Gospel preachers—men not ashamed to be known as evangelical—willing to carry their Master's message in week-day ministry to country parishes through the autumn and winter months."

On Tuesday, last week, Dr. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff, and Master of the Temple, commenced at Cambridge the retreat which he annually conducts for the benefit of clergymen who have been his pupils either at Harrow or at Doncaster. His plan, says The Record, is to borrow some scholastic or collegiate building with a chapel belonging to it, and there for three days he and his flock live a kind of community-life of prayer and meditation, varied by addresses from the Dean. A very large number of parochial clergy are found to respond to the invitation.

The "Yorubans" is the name of a Young Men's Missionary Band, in connection with the Church Missionary Society at Hull. Its object is to interest young men and others in the cause of foreign missions. During the past year twenty-eight meetings of members have been held, at which addresses were given and papers were read on mission work in some of the countries where the Society labours. Besides these, several magic lantern lectures were given, and short missionary addresses to Sunday-school children. Several new subscribers to the C.M.S. were enlisted, and a sale of work was held which realised £6 13s.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Daniel Jones has bidden farewell to the congregation of Fabius Chapel, Liverpool, on his being appointed delegate-secretary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

A week's special mission services were opened on Wednesday last week, at Graham-street Chapel, Birmingham, by Rev. F. B. Meyer. In the afternoon Bible readings were given in the schoolroom, and in the evening an evangelistic service held in the chapel, which was well attended.

The memorial stones of a new Baptist chapel at Fulham, in connection with the London Baptist Association, were laid on Thursday last week. The new building will provide accommodation for 700 persons, and the cost will be £4000, one-quarter of this amount being contributed by the Association.

In the village of Loose, an agricultural district of about 1500 inhabitants near Maidstone, for nearly ten years, evangelistic work has been carried on in a small iron building with much encouragement and blessing. The room becoming inconvenient and out of repair, the people, under the leadership of their pastor, Rev. F. C. Haggart, resolved to erect a substantial chapel and schoolroom. Three months ago the new buildings were opened, but a debt of £350 still remains upon them.

SALVATION ARMY.

The hot season in Jamaica has proved very trying to the hard-working officers, to whom, however, much has been vouchsafed in the shape of tangible results.

Captain and Mrs. Holdaway have been commissioned from Wellington, New Zealand, for special work amongst the Maoris; there are already several very promising native converts.

Considerable progress has been made in Holland. The last town in which operations have been commenced is Flushing. Jose and other towns are also on the list to be shortly opened.

A very happy meeting of London Slum Mission workers was held last Friday afternoon at headquarters. Branches of this lowly but most necessary service have been just established at Glasgow and Liverpool.

During five years' persistent work at Woodbridge, where the opposition and prejudice for a long time were very cruel, over five hundred persons have come out to the penitent form seeking salvation. At the recent anniversary services a holiness meeting was held in the beautiful grounds of Mr. Alexander, the banker.

Five more members of the Salvation Army at Ware have been conveyed to Holloway Gaol to undergo a week's imprisonment for declining to pay fines imposed upon them by magistrates for holding religious services in the streets of the town. This brings up the number of imprisoned Salvationists to ten, but others have been sent down from headquarters to take their place, and the Army is carrying on its work as vigorously as ever.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A valedictory meeting to five missionaries proceeding abroad is to be held in St. John's-wood Church (Dr. Monro Gibson's), on Tuesday, October 2.

The Stratford Presbyterian Church being closed for renovation, at the invitation of Rev. James Knaggs the congregation will worship with his in Stratford Congregational Church on the next two Sundays, the services being conducted by Mr. Knaggs and Rev. A. Jeffrey, minister of the Presbyterian congregation.

At the ordination the other day, at Berwick, of Rev. P. J. Maclagan as English Presbyterian missionary to China, Principal Cairns preached the sermon, and Rev. W. S. Swanson, ex-Moderator of the English Synod, gave the charge. Rev. R. W. Barbour, of Bonskeid, a Free Church minister, and Mr. J. T. Maclagan, secretary of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Established Church of Scotland, uncle of the young minister, were present. Thus the three great Presbyterian Churches of Scotland and the Presbyterian Church of England were represented.

METHODIST.

A new Wesleyan Chapel at Claycross, Derbyshire, was opened last week by Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich.

Gospel meetings have been held in the open air on the sands, at Hastings, during the summer, by the Primitive Methodists. Much good has resulted.

Mr. and Mrs. John Dawson, Primitive Methodists, of Leeds, who have for some years been devoted to evangelistic work in England, have just sailed for Australia, where they go to take up Christian work.

The Leeds District Primitive Methodist Evangelisation Committee has engaged four evangelists to labour during the present year. Several important conventions on evangelistic work have been arranged for in different parts of the district.

Special services have been held to bid farewell to Rev. R. and Mrs. Fairley, of Belfast, previous to their departure to engage in missionary work at Fernando Po, West Africa, under the auspices of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society.

There has lately been a very remarkable revival at Walkden, near Manchester. A correspondent of The Methodist Times says:—"The mission here shows no sign of abating. Nearly every night the room is crowded, and many turned away. Every church in the neighbourhood is being blessed. The beer-sellers are alarmed, and some quite angry. Lots of pledges are taken, and there are numbers of conversions nearly every night."

Carrying out the recommendation of the recent Wesleyan Conference, Rev. Joseph Bush, President, has issued a brief pastoral to Wesleyan Methodists, reminding them that Friday (to-day) is to be observed in the societies as a day of special prayer and supplication, and suggesting that special attention be directed thereto in the pulpits of Methodism on the following Sunday.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A ten days' mission has been held in the Congregational Chapel at Monmouth. The meetings were well attended each night, many remaining to the after-meetings.

The City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, has been thoroughly cleaned, repaired, and renovated. The church is to be reopened next Sunday, when Dr. Parker will preach at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. The mid-day service will be resumed the following Thursday, at 12 o'clock.

At Broom-park Congregational Chapel, Sheffield, the other day Mr. E. Sherman Oakley was ordained as a missionary of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Oakley's destined field of work is India, and he is to be attached to the Ramsey College at Almora, N.W.P., which has 700 students in training.

The examinations of the young in religious knowledge, in connection with the National Council of Congregational Church Guilds, will take place on the Tuesday and Wednesday of the last week of March next. A circular with full particulars may be obtained from the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

Rev. H. Evington, of the Church Missionary Society, writes that the efforts for the union of the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches have made considerable progress during the year, and the delegates from the different churches seem to have hope that their labour will not be in vain. If these two unite, says Mr. Evington, they will form a very powerful body, embracing nearly half the Christians in the Empire.

At a missionary meeting at Birmingham last week Rev. George Owen delivered an address on "Work in China." He said he had no fear as to the value of the work in China; he believed the Chinese, comprising nearly one-third of the human race, would, in time, adopt Christianity with a heartiness and vigour that would astonish the world. He pleaded for sending out to that country three thousand more missionaries at a cost of £180,000 a year.

A special mission has been held by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, at Chinley, Derbyshire. Much prayer and Christian activity, says a correspondent, preceded the mission, and the blessing of the Lord came with his servant. Night by night the meetings increased in numbers and power, and several persons have given testimony of spiritual blessing received. Special services are being continued by the pastor, Rev. J. E. Moore, assisted by Mr. James Townley, of London, a former minister of Chinley Chapel.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Isabella Young, of York, has got a minute for service among Friends in Scotland.

In North Carolina yearly meeting of about 6000 members, only 93 use intoxicants as a beverage.

Joseph Farrar, of Kendal, has held a series of meetings at Hopetown Hall, Darlington, and Arthur Dixon has had similar service at Shields.

From a wide area of country in Kansas the cry is sent to Friends, "Come over and help us," and in Indiana, where a month's mission was held last winter, there were 40 conversions, most of the converts joining the Friends.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Tent services are being conducted with encouraging success in the neighbourhood of Donore, Dublin.

Successful Gospel services have been held during the past two months in one of the Irish Evangelisation Society's tents at Gortnessy and the neighbourhood, by Messrs. Carleton and Crawford.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The memorial stone of the large new mission premises, in connection with Pollokshields (Glasgow) Free Church, was laid on Saturday afternoon. The new halls are situated in a populous working-class district. There are at present thirteen different agencies at work in the mission, embracing 1000 families.

A Conference of Christian workers was held in the hall of the Bridgeton (Glasgow) Evangelistic Association on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 8. There was a large attendance. Rev. J. Jenkins gave an interesting and stimulating word from Isa. vi., after which Mr. William Allan addressed the workers. In the evening a tea meeting was held, when over 250 took tea. A deputation of young men from Partick Y.M.C.A. gave testimony.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Wilhelm Lutheri Voss, of Mozufferpore, Northern Bengal, a missionary since 1868 in connection with Gossner's Evangelical Lutheran Mission.—Rev. W. Calvert, senior pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, North Berwick.—Rev. J. Fallowfield Longrigg, late vicar of Emmanuel, Leeds.—Rev. David Bell, M.D., for thirty-three years vicar of Goole, Yorkshire.—Rev. James W. Sibley, of the American Board's Marathi Mission, Bombay, for ten years an earnest and devoted missionary in India.—At Aghalee Glebe, co. Antrim, Rev. Robert Hill, M.A., formerly rector of Soldierstown, in the 88th year of his age.

The Book World.

 Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.

Cassell's Shilling Cookery is a work of real utility. Written on the basis of the doctrine that economy and simplicity are not incompatible with excellence and elegance, it is at once comprehensive in its contents and reasonable in its instructions.

Woman, Her Rights and Duties (1s. Jarrold & Sons), is a well-written, thorough-going brochure, in which the claims of the gentler sex are chivalrously upheld. Young women should read it to see where they stand in the eye of the law, and young men may receive from it some impetus in the direction of true knightly behaviour towards "the better half" of the human race.

Aids to Spiritual Life. By Rev. John Bate. 3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. It is gratifying to observe that this admirable compendium of experimental truth has reached its fifth edition. Sound in teaching and helpful in style, it may be safely put into the hands of young people, while experienced Christians will be charmed by the freshness and force of many of the reflections, which are well arranged in sections for every day throughout the year.

The Toleration Act of 1689. By Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff. 1s. Nisbet & Co. This essay is a fitting contribution to the bi-centennial celebration of the great event of which it treats. Comprehensive as to facts, and judicial in tone, it is likely to serve a good purpose at the present time. The author does not overlook spiritual considerations. In summing up, he well says: "The Church commends itself best to the world by confining itself to its proper spiritual and moral duties and powers, instead of using the secular arm. It can only lose by force and violence; it can only gain by truth and love."

The Son of Man in Relation to the Race. Purporting to be a re-examination of Matt. xxv. 31—46, this book deals in a forcible manner with what its anonymous author calls the principles and processes of the Divine government. Rejecting the prophetic construction of the well-known passage concerning the judgment of the nations "when the Son of Man shall come in his glory," the author founds some singular teaching upon a "private" and far-fetched interpretation. We are to a large extent unable to follow him in his handling of Holy Writ, and as for his reasoning in support of Universalist theories, it may be tersely expressed, but it assuredly is not based on Divine revelation. Yet there is in this book much plain and very important teaching as to the true motive and spirit of the worship and service of God. (2s.6d. Longmans.)

Studies in Worship Music (1st series). By J. Spencer Curwen. Second edition, enlarged. (7s. 6d. J. Curwen & Sons.) Though the title is hardly good English, this is a delightful and most instructive book. The division of the subject into three parts—historical, practical, and descriptive—is an excellent plan. Organists and choirmasters will be chiefly interested in part ii., general readers will be attracted by part iii., while part i. deserves the perusal of all writers on sacred music. In compiling his book Mr. Curwen has travelled far, and interviewed musical authorities of all denominations. He wisely illustrates his subject with copious quotations. Without condemning choirs, he strongly advocates congregational singing. His pungent criticisms of the music in particular churches are always tempered by kindliness of spirit, and commendation wherever he can give it.

Holland. By J. E. Thorold Rogers. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. This is another useful volume of "The Story of the Nations" series. From the nature of things, it is mainly taken up with a recital of how the people of the Netherlands achieved their independence against a monarch who was supposed to possess the mightiest powers of the age. Philip II. of Spain represented the two distinctive principles of sixteenth century despotism—entire authority over the lives and fortunes of the people, and entire authority over their consciences—and Professor Thorold Rogers here tells with conciseness and accuracy how the Hollanders not only resisted and defeated the King, but established the first precedent for civil and religious liberty. This memorable struggle is the sum and substance of the history of Holland, and the volume before us was worth writing if only to again tell the instructive tale of the Beggars' Revolt and its grand issues.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus will publish shortly, in a small volume, the studies of "Bible Characters" which Charles Reade wrote for a magazine a little while before his death.

In The Last Day (Sealy, Bryers & Walker, Abbey-street, Dublin), there are earnest appeals to those who are frittering away their lives without regard to "the whole duty of man."

Weak Hearts and Delicate Lungs, by Walter Johnson, M.B., are two envelope tracts. They may be had at a penny each, from the Malvernbury Hydropathic Establishment, Great Malvern.

Dr. Parker is engaged on a devotional book for daily reading. The title is "Every Morning, First Thoughts for First Hours." Messrs. Charles Burnet & Co. will issue it before the end of September.

A Bright Example of a Christian Soldier who Showed his Colours. By Miss Barnett. 1d. Alfred Holness. This is a brief memoir of the late Quartermaster-Sergeant Perry, of the first 14th Regiment, who during many years practised what he professed as a Christian. He was accordingly greatly blessed to the soldiers among whom his lot was cast in various parts of the world.

"THE CHILDREN'S BREAD."

September 17th, 1888.

Dear Christian Friends,

I have now a larger family to support than ever before. Nearly THREE THOUSAND Homeless "Waifs and Strays," the majority of them orphans, are at present under my care.

God has sent to my doors very literally of late, "the lame, the halt, and the blind"; some of them mere Infants, crippled for life, quite blind, or afflicted with incurable disease, have been rescued from the common lodging-houses and the lowest purlieus, not only of London, but of large towns throughout England and Scotland. Many little girls have quite recently been snatched from nameless degradation, and boys from the custody of thieves and evil persons seeking their ruin.

Throughout the summer months this BLESSED WORK OF RESCUE has never ceased, day or night, and now, as I have said, my family is larger than ever before, and, as may be imagined, it is no easy or light thing to supply their daily wants. God's goodness has been unceasing, but I have learnt that He uses the instrumentality of even such a statement as this to unite the hearts of His people everywhere in increased love for, and sympathy with, HIS LITTLE ONES under my care.

For FOOD ALONE our daily need is quite £100, and during the past three weeks I have on many days been sorely pressed to meet the numerous claims which cannot be avoided.

The month of September is always one of special burden bearing, I will not say of anxious care, but of more than usual exercise and trial of faith; and this year, owing to the larger numbers to be provided for, the sense of need is even more deeply felt.

ONE HUNDRED LITTLE GIRLS will, I hope, leave for Canada on the 20th of this month. This will be my last party of Emigrants for the year, and will bring the total number of trained boys and girls Emigrated to Canada during 1888 up to about 510. I have not yet all the means required to pay the travelling and outfit expenses of this last party, and I shall indeed be thankful if it is laid upon the hearts of some of God's people to send me the £9, which will defray the entire cost of a single child's emigration.

For all God's goodness to my large family, I would give Him, now and always, grateful praise, and to the thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN who for years have encouraged me by loving and generous help, I desire to express my cordial acknowledgments, while at the same time I seek a continuance of their prayerful sympathy and loving remembrance of my poor bairns.

Ever sincerely yours,

In the service of Christ's Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO

THE LATE HON. THOMAS HOLT,

Philanthropist.

"HE is a grand old man, the very ideal of a patriarchal saint." Such were the words of a popular minister of London, concerning the late Hon. THOMAS HOLT, whose name has been for years associated with all kinds of philanthropic efforts in England, on the Continent, and in the colonies.

The deceased gentleman, whose sudden death many hundreds regret, was for nearly seventy years engaged in that work which lay nearest to his heart—viz., the alleviation of the sorrow and distress of so many of the poor. His desire was to carry out the injunction of his Master, who said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," and "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Hence, while some of his deeds of love came to the public ear, the greater part are only known to a few of his most intimate friends who assisted him in his great benevolent work.

Born in 1811 near Horbury, in Yorkshire, Mr. Holt was the eldest of a family of eleven. His father, Thomas Holt, a wool merchant, was a pious Christian, a member and liberal supporter of the Wesleyan cause. In his school life the subject of our sketch was conspicuous for his perseverance, Dr. Cope, of Wakefield (grandfather of the Editor of this paper), regarding him as his "best pupil." He loved his teacher, and said in after life that if he had done or experienced any good, it was all due to the teaching, preaching, and advice of Dr. Cope, whom he regarded as the guiding-star of his life. The spirit of quiet, indomitable perseverance characterised the whole of his life, and doubtless contributed largely to his success as a merchant, politician, and philanthropist.

The deep piety of the home of his childhood, and the influence of his godly tutor, led to his giving himself in early life to the Lord, which was brought about through attending one of the love-feasts in connection with the Wesleyan body, and for more than sixty years his life was spent in the service of his Redeemer.

At the early age of fourteen he left school and joined his father, remaining in Leeds three years to acquire a practical knowledge of the business. Afterwards he went to London, where he was engaged in buying wool. His next experience was in Germany, where he attended all the wool fairs. From Germany he went to Spain, and remained there over two years. On his return to England he was, after a very short stay at home, again despatched to Germany. During his stay there he visited on several occasions Austria and Hungary, and in 1832 he was admitted a partner in his father's business. After a lapse of several years his eyes were turned towards the colonies, and in 1842 he landed in New South Wales, having previously relinquished his interest in the firm of Thomas Holt & Son. In Sydney he became one of the leading wool merchants, carrying on the business until 1855, when he retired.

During his commercial career he acquired large tracts of country in Queensland and New South Wales. In 1849, assisted by two or three other gentlemen, he was the prime mover in the establishment of the Australian Mutual Provident Society, and was for years one of its directors. To crown the work of the Society, and make its objects a permanent blessing to its members, Mr. Holt, by his indefatigable efforts, caused a Bill to be passed in Parliament for the purpose of securing the annuity against any contingency that might arise through bankruptcy or any other cause. For many years he held the office of deacon in one of the leading Congregational churches of Sydney, and took an active part in its work and prosperity. To Mr. Holt's liberality is due the establishment of a college for Congregational ministers, for which he gave the land and subscribed largely.

In 1856, at the request of a number of political friends, he contested Stanley Borough (Brisbane and Ipswich), and was elected by a large majority, thus entering the first responsible Government of New South Wales. On the formation of the Ministry he accepted the office of Colonial Treasurer. He afterwards represented Newtown, and remained a member of the Assembly until the dissolution of 1866, when he visited Europe. In 1868, shortly after his return, he was nominated and elected to a seat in the Legislative Council, and later on was made a member of the Council of Education.

the colony. On arriving in Europe he travelled for nearly two years with his family, visiting all the places of interest; and in March of 1885 he settled at Bexley, in Kent. In this country he soon became notable for his large-hearted liberality. All kinds of institutions that had for their primary object the relief of the poor were helped, irrespective of the section of the Church of Christ to which they belonged. The winter before last something like 12,000 were assisted to free dinners, and during the past winter over 20,000 in London were benefited by Mr. Holt's generosity, and to each of them was given some present which would, in a measure, brighten their dark and cheerless lives. There were gatherings of the halt, maimed, and blind, sandwich men, seamstresses, widows, tramps, waifs and strays, thieves and vagabonds, out of work dock labourers, and representatives of the great army of the unemployed, in companies varying from 300 to 1500, according to the size of the halls in which they were entertained. These sights will never be forgotten by those who witnessed them. Not only were their bodies looked after, but Mr. Holt's great desire was to bring them to the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Not only in London and other places was he mindful of the distress of the poor, but in his own immediate neighbourhood all that thoughtful and loving care could suggest, and a liberal hand could supply, was done to alleviate the want that abounds there during the winter months. Crayford Baptist Church was made the centre of an extensive system of relief; several thousands had food, clothing, and firing supplied to them in their homes, besides giving liberally to every deserving charity in the locality. On the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, the Bexley Heath Cottage Hospital was enlarged through his munificence. Not many days before he passed away, Mr. Holt tried to bring a little sunshine into the heart of earth's sorrowful ones by entertaining in his own grounds the inmates of the Dartford Union, and also by sending over 300 of the poor of St. Giles' district to enjoy a day among the Surrey hills.

Space will not permit a recital of acts of generosity to Orphan Houses, Hospitals, Asylums, Institutions, and Missions of every description. For the last three years he was unable to take any active part in the distribution of his charity, being almost a confirmed invalid, but he was always represented by Mrs. Holt and the members of his family.

His death was sudden, but his end was peace. A few minutes before seven on the evening of Wednesday, September 5, in the presence of his family, relatives, and his intimate friends, he fell asleep.

He was married in 1840 to Sophia Eulert, daughter of Frederick Eulert, of Berlin, by whom he had nine children; three sons (in Australia) and three daughters, with his sorrowing widow, survive him. He was buried on Tuesday, September 11, at Abney Park Cemetery, in the presence of a very large number of mourners (English and colonial), besides many of the poor whom he had so lovingly helped. Funeral sermons were preached the following Sunday at St. John's, Bexley, and Crayford Baptist Church, to very large congregations.

During the last few months of his life, Mr. Holt had printed a pamphlet, which he had written, entitled "Christianity, the Poor Man's Friend," which he circulated gratuitously among the poor and the different charitable societies, to the extent of over 800,000.

PROF. CAVE ON INSPIRATION.*

To a Christian the question of the inspiration of Scripture is very easily settled by an appeal to the words of our Lord on the subject. Its inspiration by the Holy Spirit is repeatedly affirmed by Him; so much so that He quotes the words of David as being what "David said by the Holy Ghost"; and, as to its authority and infallibility, such words as, "The Scripture cannot be broken," "The Scripture must be fulfilled," show what his thoughts on this matter were. We know that the canon of the Old Testament in his time was the same which we now possess, so that, as "the disciple is not above his Master," those who recognise the claims of Christ bow, and thankfully bow, to his teaching on a subject on which He knew infinitely more than we can possibly do.

But we have to deal with a profession of Christianity which is for the most part infidel at heart, and which really does not admit the claims of the Lord Jesus, or admit his competency to decide such a question for us. Under the pretext of not believing anything which cannot be scientifically proven, his authority is treated as if it were worthless, and the Scriptures are looked at as if they were but human writings, which must make good their claim to be treated with more than ordinary regard by such methods as their censors may deem satisfactory.

Hence it is that modern critics of the school which claims to be considered that of "higher criticism," approaching the subject with the strongest bias against believing in the supernatural, find no difficulty in explaining away all that they do not like as "unhistorical," and in advancing theories as to the origin and character of the sacred writings which too often "beguile unstable souls," and lead them into the mazes of doubt and infidelity, and sometimes carry them so far as to reject Christianity altogether.

This book on the inspiration of the Old Testament by Principal Cave is a very able defence of the orthodox view on the basis of the inductive method of inquiry. He does not profess to take the high ground of appealing to Christ's teaching on the subject, but comes down to the low level of the non-Christian standpoint, and from this he very powerfully and clearly argues the truth of what is "most surely believed among us." Viewed as a refutation of the popular theories of Kuenen and Wellhausen as to the date and authorship of the Pentateuch, the book is a most satisfactory one, and should be read by those who are at all tempted to receive their conclusions. One of the most interesting features of Principal Cave's refutation of their theories is his argument that, admitting the difference supposed to exist between the Jehovistic and Elohistic elements found in the early part of the book of Genesis, it may be accounted for by Moses being himself the Jehovistic writer, to whom the name Jehovah was first revealed, and the Elohistic writings being previously existing written traditions, which he, as it were, re-edited by inspiration, and remodelled as we now have them. Many most convincing illustrations tending to confirm this position are given.

As to the great question of inspiration, he recognises fully that the prophets spake "not their own mind, but the mind of God," and further asserts a "transcriptive" inspiration, a "co-operation of the Spirit of God," prompting and superintending their committal to writing, "so that the record should be at once faithful and adequate." He also recognises a "canonic" inspiration—an important point often overlooked—"which resulted in the collection of the several books of the Old Testament into one canon." This is a far more satisfactory ground on which to rest the authority of the canon than the usual ground of so-called Church authority.

The weak point of Principal Cave's book we take to be its total silence as to the teaching of our Lord and his Apostles on the subject of Old Testament inspiration. It might possibly have been outside of the scope of his mode of treating the subject to refer to it; but it should surely have kept him from advancing views that do not accord with their teaching. Thus, in dealing with the books of the Old Testament known as the "Hagiographa," including the Psalms, Proverbs, Canticles, Ruth, Esther, &c., he says, "They lack the prophetic element. They recount history for its own sake, not for the sake of its Divine lessons." Again, "Even the Messianic references of the Psalter do not seem to be new revelation, but the reiteration after assimilation of revelations already received." But compare this with Acts ii. 30, where David is distinctly called a prophet, and see the prophetic revelation in Psa. xxii. of facts literally fulfilled at our Lord's crucifixion. See also Psa. lxxii. as to the future kingdom of Christ. It may be added that he must be a dull student of Scripture who cannot see the Divine lessons in the books of Canticles and Esther. Attention to the way in which the Psalms are quoted in the New Testament would have kept Principal Cave from so unworthy a view of one of the most distinctly prophetic books in the Bible.

* THE INSPIRATION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT INDUCTIVELY CONSIDERED. By Alfred Cave, B.A., Principal of Hackney College. Published by the Congregational Union.

SCARBOROUGH.—A correspondent sends us an account of Gospel services held by men belonging to four ships of the Channel Squadron, whilst lying in the bay at Scarborough recently, for five days. Each afternoon during their short stay these Christian sailors held a meeting on the sands in the afternoon, and the Landside Temperance Room each evening. The meetings attracted large numbers of the townsfolk, and a fair number of fishermen and sailors. As the men told out by speech and song the "Old, old story," the message went home to the hearts of their hearers, and many souls have been quickened into spiritual life.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

(Concluded.)

We have now to ask (3) how their work will be done. The sphere of their activity is not heaven, but earth. The earth, during the millennial period, is to be populated just as it is now. We read still of the nations. From those peoples living at the extreme limits of the then existing world danger is to arise at the close of that period. Gog and Magog, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea, are to be gathered together to battle against the people of God.

From all this, as well as from the promises in other predictions of millennial peace and fulness, we gather that the conditions of human life will largely remain unaltered. Men will still eat and drink; they will wake and sleep; they will marry and be given in marriage. Are we, then, to import such gross notions into our conception of the risen life? Is it to be a repetition of the life which we live now, only without its burden and its sin? Such a notion, repellent even to common sense, is completely disposed of by the words of our Lord: "In the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven" (Matt. xxii. 30).

It would seem, too, as if in the Lord's own experience there is a prophecy of that of his people. The promise was given on the cross to the repentant but dying criminal at his side: "Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise" (Luke xxiii. 43). That word was kept. Jesus met his redeemed one that day in the Father's home. The meeting took place while the body of the Saviour was being laid in the sepulchre, and the broken corpse of the robber was being cast into its dishonoured grave, or thrown, it may have been, to be consumed by the worm and the fire in the Valley of Hinnom. As the Redeemer felt the pang of "soul and body's parting," so He experienced the bliss of the soul's entrance into the unveiled glory of the Father. Then came the morning of the Resurrection when soul and body were re-united never to be separated again. But that perfected and immortal humanity was not at once taken up to the right hand of God. It had still a period of allotted service upon the earth—such service as till then earth had never known.

The intercourse of those wondrous years was renewed, but on a loftier plane. The Lord appeared to his own as they mourned at the sepulchre, while they walked by the way, as they sat in their chamber with fast-closed doors. He met them on the mountain top, and in the dim morning light by the seashore. That risen life drew them into fellowship with itself. Their hearts were thrilled by what we might call the birth of a new sense—the sense of things unseen. That other world opened, so to speak, and received them into it. Though in the world, they ceased to be of it. The world's claims grew light. Its pleasures appeared like fleeting phantoms. Communion with that risen life imparted to theirs its own lofty elevation. They were risen with the risen Christ.

Now, if Christ's people pass along Christ's pathway; if his story is but the prophecy of theirs; if the harvest is like the firstfruits; then we can understand how the saints may hold the earth for God. Like their Redeemer, they will taste of death. The body will rest in the grave, and the spirit will ascend to God who gave it. Then will come the day when the word will be fulfilled, and those that slept in Jesus, God will bring with Him. The risen body will be joined to the glorified spirit, and that perfected and deathless humanity will enter on the service prefigured in the forty days. Those whom the Lord has won for God by the judgment and the mercy which will attend his coming, his saints will hold for God. They will fill the hearts of these, as the risen Lord filled the hearts of his disciples, with the sense of the unseen. The life of earth will be raised and hallowed. By that ministry passing from the unseen to the seen, heaven and earth will be made one. The veil will be raised; the walls which separate them will disappear. They will reign with Christ's own sway. They will be judges after a grander fashion than that of Israel's ancient heroes. Beholding the face of God and of Christ, and ministering among men with the glory of a life that has triumphed over sin and death, they will be priests such as earth has blindly yearned after, but will never find till then.

(4) There is one question more: for whom does this destiny wait? Who are they who may take to them this hope of the first resurrection? The promise is first of all given to those who have to part with peace, and property, and life, because of their fidelity to the truth. "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and who had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." These words have assuaged the anguish of many a heart. Many a poor, weak, trembling spirit has been able to look death in the face, though it came in its most dreadful shape, and to lay this mortal life with joy upon God's altar.

The words have still a mission to perform. There are yet fiercer fires through which the faithful ones must pass, and therefore, no doubt, it is that to them this clear assurance is given. The cup of consolation is first applied to the lips which need it most. But it is not confined to these. The martyrs have not been alone. There have been multitudes who have shared their spirit, and who will also share their glory. This, which seems to be intimated in the words "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection," is plainly promised in the assurance that "they that are Christ's" shall rise to meet Him at his coming (1 Cor. xv. 23). Those who have lived for Christ, who have been his and not their own, who have served Him and suffered with Him, who, like the Apostle, have striven that they may attain unto the resurrection of the dead—these shall also share his triumph. "It is a faithful saying: For if we died with Him, we shall also live with Him: if we suffer, we shall also reign with Him: if we deny Him, He will also deny us" (2 Tim. ii. 11, 12).

The promise is for us. That glory shall be ours, if we only open our hearts so that God may fill them with his Spirit. The time is short. Everything around us proclaims that He who cometh shall come and shall not tarry. God has done mighty things for us. This also is in his plan: we shall share his Son's glory. Let us not defeat our Father's purpose; but through faith that in lowliness grasps this hope, and through obedience which, girding itself to serve, seeks direction and strength, let us cleave to Him who is "able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

THE JEWISH BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

Among the valuable evidence given before the Poor Law Relief Committee, whose report has been recently issued, is a description of the various classes of work done by the Jewish Board of Guardians; and, considering that comparatively little is known by the general public of the operations of this excellent voluntary association, which relieves almost all the destitution among the Jewish poor of London, the following summary of the evidence given by Mr. Stephany, the hon. sec., may be of interest to the many among our readers who are exercised by the great social question of how best to deal with the poverty of our great cities.

The work of this institution, then, is divided into the following branches:—

(1) The Relief Department, which provides for weekly allowances to old and decrepit persons; the leading principle, however, of this department is not so much to give out doles of relief as to help people to help themselves, by judiciously furnishing them with small sums of money, either by way of gift or loan, this system being much appreciated by genuine workmen in search of employment.

(2) The Industrial Committee apprentices young people of both sexes to various trades, numbering upwards of seventy, the premiums being advanced to the parents, and the money repaid by the apprentices out of their weekly wages. This plan has been found to work very successfully.

(3) The Loan Department lends small sums of money, to be repaid by instalments of sixpence in the pound per week.

(4) The Board has several work-rooms, where girls are taught dressmaking, gold and worsted embroidery, and other kinds of work requiring female labour. This is also a very successful branch of the operations.

(5) The Emigration Committee has sent a very large number of persons to America and the colonies; and, by requiring every intending emigrant to produce half the passage-money himself, guards against despatching undesirable and destitute persons, not one of their cases having ever been returned by the New York emigration commissioners. It is also made a sine quâ non that there should be someone on the other side to receive and look after the emigrants on their arrival.

(6) The Sanitary Department has a paid inspector who visits the houses of these poor whom the Board relieves, and this committee, though possessing no strictly legal powers, has by moral suasion and the exercise of tact been very successful in inducing landlords and local authorities to keep property in good condition, the dwellings of the poor being now much better than they were some years ago.

(7) There is also a Ladies' Visiting Committee, the members of which visit the poor at their homes, and inculcate habits of tidiness, &c., and in suitable cases give the women work to do (collected from charitable ladies), for which they are paid small sums, the work being afterwards sold at the end of the season, when most of the things are bought by the poor people themselves.

From this brief description of a many-sided work it may be seen how very much may be done to cope with Metropolitan distress by judicious and well-directed energy on the part of Poor Law Guardians and other bodies, under the powers already belonging to them, without the necessity of waiting for further legislative assistance.

Points for Preachers.

TRIALS.

How often we complain about trials and disappointments. If we could see things as God sees them, we would know that these things are for our good. When we get to the haven of God's rest we shall find that every strong wind was but driving us into the harbour.

COURAGE.

An Indian once lost his way in the forest. Failing to find the path to his cabin, he said, "Indian lost!" and then, straightening up and striking his fist on his breast, he exclaimed, "No! Indian here! wigwam lost!" Many young men would do well to emulate his courage. Many make themselves miserable by thinking of their losses, their failures, their misfortunes, and their sad prospects. Such persons depend too much upon externals, and run in pitiful ruts of discouragement and despondency. A braver heart rises above such things, and sings amid the storm, and makes the best of life as it is.

TEMPTED SOULS.

Satan is after you, is he? I'd like to see the devil and all his angels get a heart that is hid in the Rock of Ages. A wasp might as well try to carry away the money from the vaults of London, or a crow fly away with a corn-crib. Don't fear, tempted one! Put your hand in that of Him whose name is Jesus—Saviour, and walk right on with confidence to the open gate of glory. Satan cannot get inside that. He may follow you right up to the entrance; but, once through, you can turn round and laugh in his face. Heaven is full of once tempted souls, and hour by hour the number increases.—C. H. Yatman.

"I CAN'T AFFORD IT."

"Indeed, I can't afford it," was the frequent reply of a merchant when asked for a contribution to religious or missionary objects. He was doing an extensive and apparently lucrative business, and professed to be warm in his devotion to Christ. Yet his givings were very meagre, when he gave at all; and generally his ready excuse was at hand, "I can't afford it," as his apology for refusing even a trifle. A gentleman called one day at the merchant's dwelling-house to solicit a contribution. Often had he been denied at the office with the words, "I can't afford it"; and in the grand residence, as his eyes rested on the magnificence which several open doors unveiled, he began to discern that there was some truth in the apology after all. He explained the reason of his call, but immediately added, "I see, sir, that you really cannot afford it, and I cannot think of presenting any claim upon you. Such a scale of expenditure, as I see indicated by everything around me, can indeed leave you little, if anything, for the cause of Christ. I must look elsewhere for support to our operations. Good morning, sir." The well-meant reproof did its intended work. The merchant, ere long, sought an interview with its faithful monitor, and thanked him warmly for his straightforward but brotherly remarks. Handing him a cheque for £200 as a donation to the missionary society for which he was collecting, he said that henceforth he meant to act as a steward for God, and that never again would his style of living prove a hindrance to the exercise of ardent piety and practical love.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

XXVI.—A TRANSACTION WITH GOD.

I was speaking one afternoon in a drawing-room upon the subject of spiritual religion. I said, "It does not consist in knowing Scripture truth, or in assenting to articles of the Christian faith; but rather in definite transactions with God. God says, 'Give me your heart'; and you reply, 'Lord take it.'"

A gentleman of high state and good degree was sitting by reading a newspaper, in which he appeared to be deeply absorbed. I did not imagine that he was listening to our conversation; but, putting down his paper, he said, "I quite agree with you, sir; I do not suppose there is much good in simply assenting to words of Scripture."

I inquired, "Have you then ever had a transaction with God?"

"Yes, I have," he replied, "a very remarkable one, nine years ago; but I have never told anyone of it."

"Surely," I said, "it is time then to say something about it now. What was it?"

"I have no objection to tell you," he answered, wheeling his chair round. "I was away, and in danger of my life. It was just a choice between yellow fever and being shot during an insurrection. I did not like to face the one or the other, and in great perplexity walked about my room. I took up a book, laid it down again, then took up something else; but I could not rest. At last, I fell to unpacking my portmanteau, and there I espied my mother's Bible. Taking it up, I said to myself, 'Ah, my dear old mother was the one to help me out of trouble. I never applied to her in vain!' So thinking, I began to look over the leaves of her precious Bible. It was marked from end to end, both in pencil and in ink. Here and there were strong marks attracting attention. One such caught my eyes, and I read the verse opposite to it. It was, 'Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me' (Ps. l. 15).

"Sir, when I read these words, I felt as if my mother's spirit was in the room speaking to me. I knelt down at once, and called upon the Almighty to deliver me out of danger; and, would you believe it, sir? I received an answer in my mind, as clearly as if my mother had given it to me!"

"Yes," I answered, "I can readily believe what you tell me; but what did you do?"

"Do," he repeated, "there was only one thing to do; I packed up my traps, and came off immediately, wondering why I had not seen this way before. I had a safe journey, and reached London without any harm. Now, what do you think about that, sir? Is not that a transaction with God?"

"Yes," I replied quietly, "that is part of the transaction. The text says, 'I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me'; but you say that you have never told anyone. What did you do when you reached London in safety? Did you kneel down and thank God for answering your prayer?"

As he remained silent, I continued, "Do you mean to tell me that you never thanked God? and that nine years have passed away without your making any acknowledgment to Him, and that you have not even told anyone of his goodness to you?"

He looked somewhat ashamed and confused, I thought; so I said, "You had better do it now—at once—better late than never—thank God now."

He pushed back his chair, and, kneeling down, gave the Almighty thanks for having saved his life, and apologised for not having done so before. "Upon my honour," he said, "I never thought about it."

"Now," I proposed, "that you are on your knees, why not let us ask God to save your soul, and show you the way to heaven. He would rather do that than save your life."

As my friend continued in the attitude of prayer, I prayed for him to this effect; and after a little while he prayed for himself. When he rose from his knees, he could not help expressing surprise at his forgetfulness.

I said to him, "Supposing that you had exercised your influence to obtain some favour for me, and I went off to enjoy it without thanking you, or taking any notice, would you do me another favour, do you think?"

"No, sir," he answered; "certainly not."

"Well," I said, "now you may understand why it is that nine years have passed away without you having had any other transaction with God. When we receive such distinct answer to prayer as you did, we ought to acknowledge it, at least as earnestly as we prayed for it."

"Yes, yes, I quite agree with you; but why did I forget like that?"

This gentleman began from that day to seek the Lord, and in due time found Him, and was found of Him.

The next time I met my friend, he told me of his conversion; and added, "This time I did not forget to thank the Lord, I assure you; or to make known to others what a forgiving and loving God He is."

Henceforth, it became the mission of his life to speak to people upon this very subject. He made it his business to ask individuals, "Do you pray? I do not mean, do you say your prayers, as they call it; but do you pray?"

"Many people do not; but sometimes I meet people who do pray," he said; "then my next question is, 'Do you get or expect answers to your prayers?' Many do not expect an answer, and others are surprised when they get it; but some really expect an answer, and have it too. Then I ask, 'Do you thank God for the answer?' Oh, I am not alone," he exclaimed; "you would be surprised to find how very few persons there are who think of going to their closets to thank God for the answer He has sent them.

"Some go away and keep the answer to themselves, as I did; others tell about their faith in prayer, and its result; while comparatively few return to give glory to God.

"This is my mission, sir," he continued; "and I find plenty to do in it. I remember that my dear sainted mother used to be very particular about this matter, and she tried hard to teach me the importance of it. All this makes me wonder so much the more how it was I could forget to thank God, and that for nine years!"

"Ah, well," he continued, "He has kindly forgiven that now, and I thank Him, and thank you, too, my good sir."

"Yes," I said, "I am sure that grateful acknowledgments are never in vain. Many people shut themselves out from further transactions with God, by not owning what has taken place. Thanking God is like keeping open the window or door of communication between God and your soul, so that you can always come to Him freely. Whereas withholding thanks has the effect of setting up a barrier between Him and yourself.

"If you had done me some great favour, and I was aware that I had neglected to thank you for it, I should be ashamed to meet you, and could not brook your gaze, if I did so. And the longer the acknowledgment was deferred, the greater would the embarrassment be. 'Short accounts make long friends,' and I am quite sure it is, as the Psalmist says, 'a good thing to give thanks.'"

CORRECTION.—Directing our attention to a statement in The Christian of September 14, a correspondent writes that the father of Rev. Joshua C. Harrison was pastor of a church at Wooburn, Bucks, and not Woburn, Beds.

FROM CENTRAL AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—THE CHRISTIAN has been for many years the channel of great blessing. It was, therefore, a kind thought to have it sent to lonely workers toiling in distant parts of the world. As for us, we are deeply grateful to you and to the unknown friend to whose kindness we have so long been indebted.

The mail from Europe and news from our nearest neighbours, nine hundred miles off, reach us only once a year by occasional traders or travellers. The rest of the year we are entirely cut off from the outer world. I send these lines by a caravan of Portuguese traders returning to Benguela. We hope that in time communications may be opened with the West Coast through our American brethren of the Bihé. The beginnings of a mission like this, far away from the great arteries of trade and immigration, are expected to be hard. Pioneers ought to be giants in faith and courage.

The climate, you are aware, is most trying to Europeans; it is hardly less so to the natives also. The land devoureth its own inhabitants. Independently of that, there is much worry in settling in a place so difficult of access, and in labouring to make a wild sand-hill overlooking marshes somewhat habitable. Material life is very difficult. It is a constant struggle and trial of faith, a daily lesson of trust and unreserved confidence in the loving-kindness and the faithfulness of our heavenly Father. Far from complaining of hardships and privations, I must say that, on the whole, they are less than we had anticipated.

Those who read our monthly Journal des Missions Evangéliques, know that when we crossed the Zambesi, we penetrated into one of the Prince of Darkness's strongholds. During thirty years of mission life, I have found nowhere the ideal heathen, so good, so meek, so yearning after the things of God which some preachers at home represent the African savages to be. But nowhere have I met with a tribe so hopelessly, humanly speaking, yes, so hopelessly degraded. The Barotsé themselves say, and alas! too truly, that theirs is a land of murder, that no one is allowed to grow old; their soil is saturated with blood; human bones bleach everywhere in the sun. The spear, a terrible plaything in the hands of these Zambesians, does not ever get rusty. Superstition and witchcraft spread their wings of darkness and death over every village, hamlet, hut, and individual. We live in the middle ages, but the middle ages in savagedom. The insatiable greediness of these poor people, their inveterate habit of stealing and lying, the total absence of anything like justice, the utter powerlessness of the so-called government, foster a universally spread sense of distrust and insecurity. Everyone sees a foe in his neighbour and a snare in friendship. The life of the chiefs, great and small, is one of extortion, sensuality, and intrigues. Revolutions, like fever, are endemic.

Some time ago, in London, the cloak of respectability was torn asunder, and the world shuddered. Here, there is no cloak of respectability, no law, no public opinion to fear. Passions are let loose without any restraint, and the grossest bestiality goes about in broad daylight, barefaced and shameless. There is no innocent childhood or family ties. National brigandage and slavery have borne their fruits, and brutalised man.

Forgive me, if I have said too much. However painful, it is a duty to let our friends know what it is to battle with unmixed heathenism, in order that they may pray for us more intelligently. Oh! it is a stifling atmosphere, this! It would be unbearable without Him "in whose presence there is fulness of joy!"

The year which we have already spent here has been one of absorbing manual labour. We have been able to put up, with poles and reeds, a small cottage of two rooms, a workshop, and storehouse, all of a most temporary nature; but which, if not too quickly destroyed by white ants, may shelter us until we can build more substantially. An experiment at brick-making has been partially successful, and has shown that this great work could be undertaken, had we the means of doing it speedily, in a few months between the last rains and the annual flood. Our Scotch friend, Mr. Waddell, a skilful tradesman, has greatly endeared himself to us by his readiness to do any work which is not in his line, when needs be. He is not naturally a strong man, and sawing timber into planks is too much for him. The natives themselves have taken an aversion to that kind of work, which they find too hard, and, when put to it, prefer to leave our service. Besides, the chiefs are so jealous of our influence that they seldom allow any of their slaves to stay with us more than a month.

The King Lewanika has left two months ago at the head of a large army for his long talked of expedition to the Mashi Kulomboe. These people live on the Kafue River, south of the Lake Bangweolo; they are the "Go-naked' of Livingstone, and the same who have lately attacked Dr. Holub's expedition. They have no paramount chief, every village is independent; their country teems with cattle. The neighbouring tribes, and especially the Barotsé, unable to subjugate them, occasionally make raids, sweep off the cattle, capture women and children, and kill as many men as they possibly can. An army like that of Lewanika, a mass of men of all ages and conditions, without any commissariat, once let loose, is almost uncontrollable, and becomes a fearful scourge. If even in their own country and among their own people their passage spreads terror and destruction, what will it be among the doomed Mashi Kulomboe! Mashi Kulomboe lads who have been captured in former razzias are said to be the fiercest.

The King has gone, and our political horizon is not cloudless. The country is said to be threatened with an invasion from the south; rumours are afloat of another approaching revolution. Lately a rebel chief, who has been a fugitive for these two last years, fell upon Sesheke and killed some of the principal chiefs. The spirit of discontent is spreading and forbodes new troubles on the return of Lewanika. To us it is a time of anxiety; but the Lord reigns.

Our pupils have all gone with the King "to learn war," and our school is all but disbanded. Our neighbours dare not as yet send their children, as the school is considered the exclusive privilege of the chiefs' sons.

We are more encouraged in our evangelistic work. It is interesting to see the people beginning to keep an account of the days of the week. Lewanika does it in making every day a cut on a piece of wood, and a big deeper one for the Lord's day. There are some faces now which we seldom miss, and it does one good to see with what eagerness a few listen to the preaching.

A boy who has been with us as a servant ever since we came to this country professes to have found the Lord Jesus. He is a wonder to many. It can truly be said of him, "Behold, he prayeth!" His closet is the adjoining wood; his New Testament is his constant companion, it is well thumbed; but his work never suffers from it. It is surprising what respect Christianity commands even in a slave boy. One day Lewanika said, laughingly, to him, "Nguana Ngombe, do not kneel and clap hands before me, you look so awkward; those who do it are liars, you are taught the truth." He is a dear lad, so clean, so honest, so truthful, so affectionate and devoted. He was something of all that before his conversion, but now the grace of God shines more and more brightly in his daily walk. We have hope of one or two others. May they be the first drops of the coming shower.

In October last we welcomed three brethren who have joined us. Rev. L. Jalla and his wife, of the Waldensian Church, have temporarily remained at Sesheke to initiate themselves to the language and to the Zambesi Mission life. Dr. Dardier, of Geneva, after a few weeks' stay with us, has returned to Sesheke, also partly on account of ill health.* M. Goy, a young man from the Canton de Vaud, has joined us as an agriculturist, but has to struggle with repeated though mild attacks of fever. We look for more helpers, for the time is pressing. The harvest is great.

Our eyes instinctively turn towards Basutoland for native teachers. The natives have, as evangelists, aptitudes which we have not. As a rule, I do not think it right that native teachers should become the paid agents of a European Mission Society. They ought to be sent by their own churches, and these, if too poor to sustain them, can be helped, but the responsibility of the native part of the work must be theirs. Unfortunately, the civil wars which have desolated Basutoland since 1877, the anarchy into which the country seems to have hopelessly fallen under the British protectorate, and other causes, have sadly impoverished the nation. The churches are unable not only to take the smallest part in our Mission, but even to meet as formerly the expenses of their home work. We deplore it all the more because we believe that the Makololo (Basutos), in conquering these tribes and implanting their own tongue among them, were preparing a vast field for the evangelistic development of the Basuto Christians. But we are waiting and hoping for better times. Let our English brethren remember us in prayer.—Yours in the Lord's service,

F. COILLARD.

* News has since been received of the death of Dr. Dardier.—ED.

Jottings from Miss Weston's Log.

DEAR FRIENDS,—By the good hand of our God upon us, we have had very much blessing lately in our work. Above 2000 anti-infidel tracts were circulated in the blockading and defending squadrons during the manœuvres, and I have since met with several cases of men really converted to God by the reading of them. They have been most kindly received, even by the infidels, and the ships' companies remarked, "Well, our mother Weston knows what we really want in sending along those anti-infidel books." I should be thankful if means allowed to circulate 100,000 in the British fleet all over the world. We hope to get 20,000 afloat very shortly.

The next expansion must be at Portsmouth, where I want to put up a corrugated iron room for the sailor boys who flock to us, our Bible-classes, &c. The room will hold 260, with a portion taken off for an inquiry-room. This room will connect by large doors with the hall, and can be thrown in when we are crowded. The estimated cost will only be from £250 to £300. We also intend to add sixteen more cabins. One has already been secured for £30 in perpetuity, as a memorial to a young naval officer, and we hope the rest will soon follow.—Yours, in the Master's service,

Sailors' Rest, Devonport. AGNES E. WESTON.

THE LIVERPOOL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION has been fixed for Thursday and Friday, October 4 and 5, in Hope Hall. The subject for consideration is "The King and the Kingdom," to be opened up in various phases by Revs. T. Graham, C. Garrett, A. E. B. Lawrence, Dr. Pentecost, R. Lewis, and S. R. Macphail. The meetings will be presided over by Canon Taylor and Mr. T. Matheson. Communications to the Hon. Sec. should be addressed to Rev. Arch. Gardner, 35, Kelvin-grove, Prince's Park, Liverpool.

Perth Christian Conference.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

Mrs. Brown Douglas presided at the women's meeting on Monday evening. Mrs. Quinton, Philadelphia, U.S.A., gave a powerful address on the Influence of Woman, with Bible illustrations, and Miss Angelica Fraser added a few loving words of invitation to the Saviour.

Mrs. Malcolm, of Burnfoot, who presided at the tea-meeting on Tuesday afternoon, read the following definition of Communion: It is Christ abiding in us, and our abiding in Christ; his enjoying our love, and our enjoying his love; his hearing our words, and our hearing his words; his sympathy in our troubles, and our sympathy in his troubles; his joy in our joy, and our joy in his joy (Luke xv. 10); his waiting for our going to Him, and our waiting for his coming to us; his constant thoughtfulness of us, and our constant remembrance of Him.

Miss Mackenzie, from Edinburgh, gave a short account of a tour in the East. During four months and a half she had been in touch with thirty different missions, and had found that seeing these living stones built on the one foundation, Jesus Christ, had been a help rather than a hindrance in other sight-seeing. She had seen something of Miss Whately's work in Cairo and in Palestine, had visited the mission schools at Bethlehem, where the foundation-stone of a new and larger school was being laid; and at Nazareth where everything was in perfect working order. The medical mission at Nazareth is crippled for want of a firman from the Sultan. He is said to be quite inaccessible, but we may get round him by heaven. The medical mission at Damascus was full of interest. The first news that greeted Miss Mackenzie on her arrival at Beyrout was an invitation to be present at the baptism of a woman for whom she had long been praying. Miss Taylor's work there, and the schools at Baalbec and Tiberias are very encouraging. It is a great privilege to visit these "holy places"; but let us not forget that there are holy places wherever God is working by his Holy Spirit in the hearts of men. Such a tour provides a treasure of Bible illustrations. For instance, when Lot was taken captive, Abraham pursued, not only "unto Dan," in the extreme north of Palestine, but beyond the frontier to Hobab, near Damascus. Let us thus seek to follow and rescue our lost ones. Again, when the spies gathered the bunch of grapes at Eshcol, no doubt they were anxious to hurry back to the camp with their spoil, but they first went through the length of the land to Rehob, the most northern point, carrying the grapes on a pole, that nothing might touch them and hurt their bloom. Let us go to the furthest end of God's promise, for He is well able to give us the land.

Mrs. Quinton, Philadelphia, gave an account of what had been done among the North American Indians during the last ten years. They are a noble race, intelligent and discriminating. They are not idolators, but worship "the Great Spirit." They are home-sick for God, and have evidently been prepared by his Holy Spirit to receive the Gospel. The women, living in tents, without comforts, are lovable, modest, and womanly, with a delicate sense of humour: they are kind, indulgent mothers: they learn quickly, and in two or three years become cultured, especially in spiritual things. One woman, who was converted when she was fifty, learnt to read the Dacotah Bible when she was past sixty years of age. They have great faith in prayer, and often receive striking answers. A poor woman who was brought to Christ when in the hospital, prayed: "O Lord Jesus, you know I want to live and tell my people about Jesus Christ; but I want it to be just as you want it." Another woman brought her child to a mission school, on condition that she should be told if it were ill. After a time the child began to ail, and a messenger was despatched to look for the mother. He met her on her way to visit the child. She said, "The Great Spirit told me the child was sick: I asked Him to let me know."

Miss Jourdan spoke shortly of Miss Whately's work in Cairo, and the eagerness of the people to receive copies of the Bible.

WEDNESDAY.

Mrs. Stuart Gray, of Kinfauns, who presided at the breakfast of the Y.W.C.A. and S.G.F.S., read Heb. ii. 18, and iv. 14—16, dwelling on the importance of following Christ's example in putting ourselves in the place of those who are tempted.

Mrs. Stott, of the China Inland Mission, said, before people can take an interest in missionary work, they must be not only converted, but living in the joy of salvation (Ps. li. 12, 13). Much can be done by method in prayer and giving. A devoted young woman, earning 7s. 6d. per week for food, clothes, and lodging, contrived to give 7½d. for foreign missions, and also spent all her spare time in leading souls around her to Christ. We cannot be really interested in heathendom without being also interested in Christendom.

Short reports were given of work during the past year in connection with the Y.W.C.A. and G.F.S., also suggestions made for fresh work.

Miss Angelica Fraser presided at the tea-meeting on Wednesday afternoon, and read Matt. viii. 14, 15. When we are suffering, or troubled, or flurried with work, let us put our hand in Jesus's, and the fever will leave us; then we shall minister to Him.

Mrs. Oatts said a few words about efforts made on behalf of the young women in the Glasgow Exhibition.

Miss Campbell, from Glasgow, appealed for helpers in the Christian Policemen's Association in the South of Scotland, also for funds for the Central Association in London, and spoke of much encouragement in the work.

Miss Johnstone, of Alva, mentioned a Benefit Association she proposes for female servants.

FRIDAY.

A letter was read from Miss Roberts, Florence, to Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, urging that private correspondence should be more consecrated to the Masters' use and recognised as a means for usefulness and encouragement to the Lord's children.

Mrs. Gordon presided over the thanksgiving meeting on Friday morning, and read 1 Chron. xvi. 4, 7, 37, with Heb. xiii. 15, 16.

Mrs. Stott urged on all to praise God beforehand for what He is going to do, and gave a touching account of her own experience of the manifestation of God's love in time of deep trial. After sixteen years of sowing, came a time of ingathering, and much blessing, and they hoped that their difficulties were past. During the Franco-Chinese War the inhabitants of Wenchow rose against the Europeans, and attacked the Methodist Mission, the Roman Catholic Church, and finally the China Inland Mission. Mr. Stott, on his crutches, had just time to escape with the school children by the back door as the rioters attacked the house; they were pelted with stones, but, fortunately, not seriously injured. Mrs. Stott was away from home, and when the news reached her that their happy home, and all their possessions, were burnt, she felt quite stunned. Soon this word came to her, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" She joined her husband at Ning-po, prepared to cheer him with this thought, that the work of the enemy should be vain; but she found that he was already rejoicing in God's own comfort, and He abundantly fulfilled their expectations. Contrary to all precedent, China offered compensation, and the first instalment was paid at once. During this time of trial, only two among two hundred professing Christians turned back, and many have been brought to the Lord since. One, who was baptized at Hankow, nine hundred miles distant, said he had been first impressed by seeing the meek behaviour of the missionary with one leg during the riot at Wenchow.

Mrs. Gordon having invited any present to give a note of praise, several expressed gratitude for blessing at Rothes, Methven, and elsewhere. Miss Jourdan read some "Nile Notes," from Miss Whately. Prayer and thanksgiving having been offered, Mrs. Stott urged all who had been at this Conference feast to go forth to God's service with renewed energy. The meeting was closed with prayer.

LADY ABERDEEN ON CULTURE.

The Countess of Aberdeen presided at the meeting of the Christian Women's Education Union on Friday afternoon. Mrs. Brown Douglas engaged in prayer, after which Lady Aberdeen said they were met together that afternoon to forward the interests of the Christian Women's Education Union. Perhaps some would say—"Education Union!" had not this got something or other to do with higher education—University education? Did they think it quite wise to mix themselves up with that; was it not altogether a secular movement? Girls had so many fads nowadays by which they wished to make themselves independent; and was not this higher education just another fad for exalting and glorifying the intellect, and taking away girls' thoughts from house duties? Did they not think it would be wise to keep clear of this? While they lived so close to one another, and had these conferences and meetings, in what different circles were their thoughts set. For instance, one circle might have the ideas she was indicating that it was a little dangerous and hurtful, and might tend to make women unwomanly, might tend to secularise; while, on the other hand, there was another circle who thought, as a matter of course, that the rising generation were to have this higher education, and who had used the most strenuous efforts to forward the just claims of women to have degrees granted to them at the various Universities. That afternoon they were met between these two circles, and to answer the question whether avowedly Christian women should form this Education Union, and what they had to do with it. They wanted to assert that this higher education, or rather this higher way of looking on women's education, was essentially in itself a Christian work.

Perhaps there had been too much tendency to look upon self-culture as worldly in itself. But was it on one's-self that the time was wasted? Even in ordinary evangelistic work, in Bible-classes and Sunday-schools, who was it who had the most hold on the minds and hearts of those whom it was desired to reach and help? Was it not the woman who, in addition to zeal for work and consecration to Christ, had so accustomed her mind to definite study and thought as to enable her to grasp her subject clearly and make it her own and carry it to others; was it not her who was able to give many apt, fresh, and powerful illustrations from her varied reading—from history, newspapers, poetry, and pictures. Everything might be made up to drive the lesson home and make it stick. After all, if they cultivated their powers of heart and soul, and left their powers of head and mind (which were given to them by God as much as the others)—if they left these powers alone, they could not be surprised if they became weak from want of use, and their work in consequence might become weak and feeble, too. Therefore, from this point of view, it seemed essentially a Christian work to endeavour to get women to work hard at some definite study.

But, from another point of view, they could not deny that in the last few years the position of women generally had undergone a vast change. They might give a sigh for the old times when woman's one realm was home, and when men surrounded her with a sort o tender protection—half chivalrous, half con temptuous. These times had gone for ever There was an ever-increasing number o women who had to work for their living, and daily women of leisure were more and mor awakening to the fact that to be educated for a profession, so as to be able to maintain themselves if need be, was a much happier thing than to be brought up with the vague idea of being ready for a home and a life which it might never be their lot to have. There was a strong call for women to come forward in every field—to serve in School Boards and Parochial Boards, to act on committees, and to take a leading part in various philanthropic, religious, and mission work. And was it not essentially a Christian thing for them to try to help girls to be prepared for this change in woman's position, and to try to induce them to work earnestly and study carefully those great social questions which must be faced and solved; those many problems brought before them by the evidence which had horrified them all—the evidence before the House of Lords upon the sweating system, or the evidence on the Poor Law and upon immigration? Did they not get subjects of earnest study and earnest thought to grasp in the present position of affairs among the people they desired to influence and help on to a higher life? They ought to study carefully the principles and history of co-operation, of trade unions, of all sorts of matters which interested and affected the working classes. If Christian women did not do so, others would; and then, could they complain if, in their various efforts to raise the people, Christianity was left out? Theirs would be the blame if these movements became secular and anti-Christian.

Then, if this definite study of work was desirable, from a Christian point of view, in order to develop and sustain God-given powers, how clear it was that these powers must also be used for patient and regular study of God's Word. They lamented and bewailed the ever-increasing numbers of young people among them disposed to unbelief—or to a want of definite belief, and in a frame of mind which became easily depraved by such books as "Robert Elsmere," showing a lack of knowledge and an absence of study of God's Word; and who thought that Christianity was all founded on emotion, and not on reason. The Christian Women's Education Union came in to help all who were in these difficulties by giving them a definite course of study and books, which would lead them to solutions of any difficulties and inconsistencies they might come across in the course of their reading. They all probably knew many painful cases of children of Christian parents who had been puzzled with certain ideas, and who dared not tell of their doubts to those nearest to them, and who thus either suppressed them and became unreal, or gave way to them and, without real reason, became more or less agnostics because there was none at hand to help.

Having read communications from students connected with the Union, Lady Aberdeen expressed the hope that the Union might become more and more a living power and strength in Scotland. Mr. Forster wrote forty years ago: "It is, indeed, sad to see so much of the high intellect of this age at issue with Christianity. I cannot but believe that this jar, this war of truths, is not altogether owing to the rebellious wilfulness of human nature, but partly to the peculiar character of our age, which is, I suppose, to use the really slang term of the philosophers, an age of transition; but it does seem as though the old clothing of Christianity was worn out, as though a new expression, a fresh texture of the Christian idea, was needed to suit the increased stature of the human mind. Men grumble at Romanism, at Church of Englandism, at Protestant Dissenterism, and cannot be convinced that all these are mere frozen formulas of Christianity, which, after all, is no 'ism' at all." These words seemed to suit the present day. It was an age of transition, and through all the transition it was the aim of the Christian Women's Education Union to help its members to see how miraculously God has revealed his truth in the Bible so as to suit all ages alike, to help them to hold fast to Him who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

Miss CAVENDISH urged on all present to bring all three parts of our nature, "body, soul, and spirit" (1 Thess. v. 23) to the study of the Bible. Early rising, for instance, besides being conducive to health, will be found advantageous to the quiet study of the Word. While the Bible is so simple that a child can learn from it the way of salvation, it is at the same time so deep that we must use our intellects to understand its teaching.

[In our report of the Conference last week, the word amusing was applied to Rev. J. McNeill's address; it should have been arousing.]

A SERMON TO JEWS.

A FEW Israelites were present in Bow Church, Cheapside, on Friday afternoon last, to hear the sermon of Rev. Gordon Calthrop to Jews and Christians, which was the first of a number of such discourses in churches of the Metropolis. Taking for his text the words: "What think ye of Christ?" (Matt. xxii. 42), the preacher described, in a telling manner, some of the scenes of the memorable day on which Christ proposed the question to the Pharisees. The very reason of existence of the Jewish people among the nations of the earth was that in due time the Messiah might come forth from among them. God had made known unto them his will and purpose, and Moses and the Prophets were full of intimations concerning the Christ.

The reply of the Pharisees that Christ must be "The Son of David," was right, so far as it went. The Scriptures, however, had placed Him before the nation as David's root as well as offspring, as his Lord as well as Son. Therefore Christ asked: "How then doth David in spirit call Him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on my right hand?" The true solution of the question is that which Christians know to be true, that the Messiah is human on the one side and Divine on the other.

The ignorance of the Pharisees was with reference to a subject which was of vital importance. Further, their ignorance was upon a subject of which they had ample means of information, for not only had they the Holy Scriptures, and the Temple and its services ever speaking to them of the Messiah, but John the Baptist had prepared the way of the Lord, and Christ Himself had been before them in all the power of his life and teaching. The inability of the Pharisees to answer Christ's question was not merely the result of intellectual confusion. The fact is they did what Christians are too much inclined to do—they read their own thoughts into the Scriptures, and determined to find there only what they wished. The Pharisees would not have the Christ who was David's Lord as well as his son, a child and the Ancient of Days, a man of sorrows and the mighty God, a human Christ and a glorified and exalted Christ, a King who ascends the eternal throne, but who reached that seat by treading the road of pain, and shame, and suffering, and death—the road of the cross of Calvary.

A Hebrew in the audience interrupted the preacher as he went on to say that a one-sided Christ is no Christ at all. Clearly he understood the plain words that were spoken, and it is hoped he will remember them. The preacher concluded by urging the Christians who were present to accept a full Christ—Prophet, Priest, and King—listening to the Prophet's teaching, benefiting by the Priest's atonement, and obeying the King's commands.

MR. CHARRINGTON is, we regret exceedingly to say, very unwell, suffering much pain and weakness, resulting from an operation which it was necessary that he should undergo.

A WEST-END CHAPEL.

CRAVEN CHAPEL is situated in a narrow street called Foubert's-place, a few hundred yards to the east of Regent-street, W. Surrounded by dingy houses, this large square old chapel is to be searched for. Here Dr. John Leifchild began his London ministry.

But vast changes have taken place since then. The wealthy and well-to-do tradesmen who flocked in crowds to the place in those days have gone into the suburbs, and their places have been taken by the children of toil, many of them the poorest of the poor. At the beginning of last year, Rev. Arthur Hall, formerly of Tolmer-square Church, commenced his work, amidst many discouragements: one was an almost empty chapel, and another a debt of £2400. This debt has been reduced to about £600, and a final effort is being made to clear this off by the end of the year. Lord Brassey has promised to open a bazaar on November 27.

Mr. Hall asks from friends in the suburbs and country for help in getting rid of this incubus to mission work among the poor. His address is 1, Oval-road, London, N.W.

WORK IN FRANCE.

MISS S. BURGESS writes to us from Laon under date Sept. 22:—I have just had a most interesting visit, with a friend, to the coal-mining districts of the Pas de Calais, where, amid great difficulties, evangelising work amongst Roman Catholics is making steady and rapid progress. In one village, so urgent was the cry for spiritual help, and so obvious the prospective harvest of souls that the Société du Nord has opened another station, where a devoted evangelist has been three months at work with manifest blessing. The visits in the miners' cottages and conversations on spiritual matters have been of a most interesting and satisfactory character. Many, still nominally Roman Catholics, reject the confessional, and are hastening to have their children baptized Protestants, to save them from the grasp of the priests.

The advance of Gospel truth in this Department (Aisne) is more slow. Soissons is still much under priestly influence. Nevertheless, amongst the poorer classes, the Bible is increasingly read, and is doing its work. An excellent site has been secured and a Protestant church will shortly be built. The scarcity of pastors makes it impossible to have service in many places more than once a fortnight. The French military regulations having been altered, and no mention of a soldier's religion registered, ample liberty is allowed him in the matter.

SAILORS IN DENMARK.—Provost Vahl, of N. Alslev, who is well and widely known in connection with Christian work, is asking for help to finish a Sailors' Home and Institute, at Aarhuus, which, Copenhagen excepted, is the largest sea-port in Denmark. The reason he looks for assistance from Great Britain is that a large number of English sailors are constantly visiting the place. Probably about £500 would finish the work which will afterwards be self-supporting.

BIRMINGHAM GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.—During the five years of the operation of this Mission, some two thousand meetings have been held, and effective aid has been rendered to almost every other temperance agency in the town. In addition to the work of the voluntary helpers and the choir, there is that of the hard-working officials, by whom in addition to routine work, at least 1000 meetings have been addressed, 400 of these by Mr. J. M. Goodchild, the general secretary. Mr. Gaule, the police-court agent, has been carrying on his work from day to day in the Moor-street cells, and the committee strongly feel the importance of this agency.

For the Young.

A TRUE MISSIONARY STORY.

It was fifty years ago. A young missionary from New England, after a long and tedious journey of eight months, reached the banks of the beautiful Spokane River in Washington Territory. The redskin natives who acted as his guide, with great earnestness endeavoured to impress him of roaring falls and picturesque scenes not far away. Soon there opened to his view the lovely spot. The turmoil of the waters, the grandeur of the scene, cataract after cataract, with the mist rising high, enchanted him.

He found the natives numerous, with their faces and heads variously decorated with paint and feathers, for this romantic spot had been their favourite rendezvous for ages untold, when not hunting game or digging canoes. The missionary pitched his tent amid the majestic pines that surrounded the mighty cataract. There, weary after long riding through rough places, he laid his head to rest.

Early next morning he found his tent surrounded with the children of the forest. They looked upon him with astonishment, and in violent motions endeavoured to make him understand that they welcomed him as one who could tell them about the Great Spirit. They had a faint idea of the white man's Great Spirit, received through two travellers that had visited them a few years before. The missionary began his labours among them, and with earnest zeal and devotion continued day by day. By precept and example he commended to them the good and great Spirit of whom he taught them. His labours were not in vain. The Indians listened eagerly and gave heed to his teachings. Soon many of them had log-cabins instead of wigwams, and little garden-spots where they cultivated vegetables of different kinds. A place of worship in primitive style was erected. Though destitute of architectural beauty and adornment, the simple worshippers felt it to be a place where they met their God and were blessed. The missionary had a small bell, and half an hour before meeting-time he was accustomed to ring it in front of the church, and then a few minutes before beginning the service, thus securing promptness in attendance.

For ten years he laboured with them uninterruptedly. The great chief, sub-chiefs, and scores of others of the tribe, became followers of Christ through his instrumentality. Among those baptized was a boy about ten years old, whose Indian name was "Auts-kai-ope-lea," which means "Get out, you wolf!" This boy, to whom had been given the name of William, was peculiarly apt as a scholar, and promising in every respect. Living with the missionary, he learned the English language very fast. For this reason he excited the jealousy of the chief, who deemed it a disgrace to have anyone in the tribe to be considered his superior in anything. So little William was sent away.

The missionary was grieved by this, but he did not lose his interest in the young scholar, though he never expected to see him again. Soon after this, disturbances among other Indian tribes made it necessary for the missionary to leave his field of labour in obedience to military command. This caused him great sorrow of heart, for he felt that all his labours and sacrifices were in vain. But, though reluctant, he had to leave them and travel across the country for eight hundred miles to the Willamette Valley in Oregon.

There he laboured for fifteen years, his heart all the while with the Spokane Indians. Accidentally he met a worldly man who had been putting up a saw-mill on the Spokane River. In conversation with the missionary, the mill-man said that the Spokane Indians, at certain times, on the opposite side of the river from where he built the mill, assembled together in crowds. The gatherings were preceded by the ringing of a small bell. In the midst of the dusky crowd he noticed a tall, lithe, and handsome Indian, who, with many gestures, would talk to them with great earnestness. The story was one of intense interest to the missionary, and he determined, if possible, to start on the long journey to the Spokanes.

Placing on his faithful horse his outfit for the journey, he started. After many days of struggling, pushing his way through thick forests, fording deep rivers, and across vast prairies where the deer and buffalo roved, he beheld again the wild scenes that charmed him twenty-five years before.

Many of the Indians were wild in their demonstrations of joy when they saw their old teacher and adviser. The missionary missed many faces; but few among them did he now know. Many whom he did not recognise were delighted to see him, and among them was one, Saul-like in appearance, who literally embraced him. It was the boy Auts-kai-ope-lea, who had been taken away from the tribe by the jealous chief twenty years before.

He was now Chief William, and the religious instructor of his people. He had not forgotten the instructions received from his teacher in childhood. The good seed had found good soil in his heart, and had borne good fruit. He had endeavoured to imitate the example of his teacher in all things, in ringing the bell to call his tribe together, and in doing his best to teach them the way of life. Chief William lived many years after this, greatly honoured by his tribe, and known by the whites all around as a "good Indian." It is only a few years since, in trying to pacify an angry half-breed, he received a bullet in his side which proved fatal.—The Pilgrim Teacher.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Sept. 30, Psalm lxxxix. 38—52; Monday, Oct. 1, Ezekiel xxxiii. 1—11; Tuesday, Oct. 2, Ezekiel xxxiii. 12—20; Wednesday, Oct. 3, Ezekiel xxxiv. 1—10; Thursday, Oct. 4, Ezekiel xxxiv. 11—19; Friday, Oct. 5, Ezekiel xxxiv. 23—31; Saturday, Oct. 6, Exekiel xxxvi. 22—32.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Cunningham Free Church, Strathbungo, Glasgow, September 23—30; various places in Glasgow, October 1—4; St. Silas' Schools, Handsworth, Birmingham, October 13—21. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Southport, October 6—17; Hull, October 20 to November 10. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Woolwich, October 8—19; Dorking, October 27 to November 9. Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress, Kilburn, October 1—4. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Mission Room, Matthias-road, Stoke Newington, October 21—26.

EMIGRANTS' HOUSE OF REST, LIVERPOOL.—A number of persons have passed through this Institution, and expressed their gratitude for the accommodation it affords. Young persons thinking of crossing the water will do well to communicate with Mr. J. A. Lee, 18, Lytton-street, Everton, Liverpool, who will also be glad to correspond with people interested in institutions such as the Rest is. Landing at New York, emigrants may be met by workers connected with the Battery Park Mission, and receive valuable assistance in finding lodgings and settling down in life. Several ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church are willing to receive young women into their houses as servants.

WHITE SLAVERY.—The country waggoners have long been silent while enduring great hardships. In some parts of the country farmers are in the habit of sending their men to market day after day without allowing time for anything like adequate rest. As a consequence, the men sometimes sleep on their journeys, and occasionally there are collisions and fatalities. Recently, while sleeping on the shafts of a lorry, a Cheshire teamsman fell into the road, and was run over and killed. This has again brought the waggoners' grievance to the front. Magistrates who have had men before them for sleeping while in charge of horses are censuring the employers for their heartlessness, and the Cheshire coroner has been requested to bring the matter before the Home Secretary, with a view to future legislation. Rev. W. H. Summers, of Beaconsfield, Bucks, asks, "Does any City missionary or Christian worker visit the houses of call where the waggoners stop in London?"

AFRICAN ATROCITIES.

Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke, returning to Stanley Pool in July last from the Upper Congo and Mobangi river, by which route he had been attempting hitherto unsuccessful pioneer journeys into the Central Soudan, with a view to future missionary work, wrote a deeply interesting letter, telling of the atrocious cruelty of the slave raids round about Stanley Falls. It affords an easy explanation of the way in which such large stores of ivory are being obtained by the resident Zanzibari traders. These men, he says, have in their pay large bodies of Manyema cannibals, whose wild-beast ferocity is so great, and whose cruelty is so diabolical, that the Zanzibaris express horror and disgust at the bare idea of associating with them in their marauding raids.

"Eye witnesses, both English and Arab, have assured me that it is a common thing, which they themselves have seen on passing through the Manyema camps, to see human hands and feet sticking out of their cooking-pots. To these men the Arabs issue firearms, and send them off to catch the human beings, with whom the ivory must be bought; for buying ivory with cloth is a slow and needlessly expensive process, and Tippoo Tib has discovered a system far superior, by which every tusk of ivory can be wrung out of a district, and that for a few kegs of powder and the loan of a few old flintlocks. Off go the man-eaters, with shouting and yelling and great jubilation.

"What follows is now too well known! No need to hunt up the descriptions in volumes of Livingstone's travels, for the Manyema men, who came under the patronage of the expedition to the hitherto untouched Aruwimi region, have carried on their work absolutely unchecked in the immediate neighbourhood of the camp, and Englishmen have stood and watched, while their Manyema allies fired at the heads of unhappy men and women, who had leaped into the river and were trying to swim across, and have gathered round the Manyema camp-fires at night to hear them relate their prowess.

"The raid is over, the first unexpected volley usually rendering further opposition hopeless, the dead are cooked and eaten, the village is nothing but smouldering embers, the women and children are hurried off as prisoners to the Zanzibari camps, with rich stores of plunder, goats, and fowls, and plantains, and native canoes, and native furniture, far more than covering the cost of the raid. And now 'trade' begins. In a few days the unfortunate husbands and parents of the prisoners come out of the bush; they know what is wanted; they have to ransom their relatives with ivory, and, the price having been agreed upon, the poor creatures go off and collect it. When at last they have scraped it all together the prisoners are returned, and the remnants of a once populous town go off to find a new refuge.

"The Zanzibaris have an object in giving back the prisoners when the ransom is paid; they will do duty again. Hardly have the wretched fugitives settled down again, built some huts, and begun to plant, than the Manyemas sweep down on them afresh, and the whole process is gone through again, as the residents at Aruwimi camp can testify."

Mr. Wilmot-Brooke adds that the 400 Manyemas who had, when he wrote, just consented to go with Major Barttelot, had expressly stipulated that they were not to be interfered with in the pursuit of their horrible methods of raising ivory. There are worse things yet which will have to be thoroughly investigated—tales of raids, murder, even cannibalism, in which it will be a relief to hear that the Englishmen present confined themselves to being passive spectators.

MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, who has been very ill for several weeks, is now slowly recovering at her residence in Hartford.

Dundee Christian Conference.

THE meetings of this annual Conference were held in the Kinnaird Hall, Dundee, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, last week. In every respect the meetings this year have been a success. The attendances were large during the day, and in the evenings the Hall, which holds from 1500 to 2000 persons, was crowded with attentive and appreciative audiences. There were decided manifestations of the presence and power of the Holy Ghost as the speakers urged home the truths of the Gospel. Much fruit will doubtless be the result of the word preached. The subjects considered at the day meetings were fitted to stimulate Christian thought and to lead to increased Christian faith and action.

TUESDAY.

On Tuesday, Rev. W. TULLOCH occupied the chair, and, after devotional exercise, introduced Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING, of Glasgow, who gave an able and thoughtful address on the "Trinity of the Godhead." He said that the Trinity was never taught in Scripture as an abstract doctrine, but as a fact. The Bible did not give any arguments for the existence of God; nor did it seek to prove miracles. So with the Trinity. The name given to God in Gen. i. 1—Elohim—contains the first hint of the Trinity. The three persons in the Godhead are spoken of separately, and are spoken of together. Moses was sent to declare the unity of the Godhead to Israel—"Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one God." He who commanded Moses afterwards sent his disciples to baptize all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. At Christ's own baptism the three persons were strikingly manifested: (1) Christ the Son presented Himself for baptism; (2) the voice of God the Father was heard saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear Him"; (3) the Holy Ghost was seen descending on Christ in the semblance of a dove. Every prayer to the Father in Christ's name is a recognition of the equality of Father and Son; and it is through the Spirit, the third person in the Trinity, that Father and Son have communion with believers.

In the afternoon Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee, introduced the subject for conversation—"The believer in his closet and in his family." In answer to the question, Where is the believer's closet? he said, it was anywhere. But we should cultivate the habit of being alone with God. When should we meet God alone in prayer? The first waking moments should be spent with God; and we ought to have fixed times and special seasons for private prayer. But when filled with the Spirit, we shall always pray and not faint. Premeditation on the Word was essential to effectual prayer.

Mr. LEONARD K. SHAW, of Manchester, made some pointed remarks on Christian conduct in the family. If we would know a man we must see him at home. God should be acknowledged in all things before our sons and daughters. Too many who had a sweet temper outside, manifested a sour temper inside their homes. Rev. Dr. Cumming remarked that closet work is the study of the Word. When we made this our habit, then we had power in prayer. Revs. Dr. Baxter (Blairgowrie), R. Balgarnie (London), and J. Ross (late of Manchuria, China), took part in the conversation.

Evangelistic addresses were delivered in the evening by Rev. T. T. Lambert, Pastor Haegert, and Rev. R. Balgarnie. Mr. LAMBERT spoke with much unction. His subject was, "How the three Persons of the Godhead are engaged in Man's Salvation." God's love is the origin of human salvation. Christ did not die to make God love man, but Christ died because God loved the world. Willingly Christ undertook the work of redemption, and the application of this salvation, which is now in Jesus, to the heart and conscience of man, is the work of the Spirit.

WEDNESDAY.

Wednesday's meetings were begun, after devotional exercise, by Rev. W. D. MACKENZIE, of Montrose, delivering a masterly address on "The Person of Christ: Divine and Human." The ascension, he said, marked two distinct periods in Christ's work. The effect of his Divine nature on his human life was manifested in what He did and taught. No creature could have said, "I am the Light of the world," or, "I am the Bread of life," and established his claims in the minds and hearts of thoughtful men. Christ presented Himself to the world as the source of the life and the rest which the world needs. He claimed to be the final Judge of men, and taught that men became finally righteous or wicked according to the attitude they took up towards Himself. Life—the life that man requires—was in Christ; but in Christ to be evolved under certain conditions—Incarnation, Death, and Resurrection. Now, the human nature of Christ acts on his Divine nature in glory. "The dust of the earth is now on the throne of the universe." The Lord has taken our nature with Him into glory. And this fact should make heaven very real to us, and help us to pour out our hearts with confidence to Him in prayer.

Rev. W. S. BRUCE, of Banff, gave a thoughtful address on "The Atoning Work of Christ." All questions, he said, pivot round this point—What was Christ, and what did He do when in the world? A proper understanding of the doctrine of the Atonement would help us to understand God's love. The death of Christ, as a sacrifice for sin, was the keystone in the arch of human redemption. The atonement was the result of two Divine attributes—God's love and God's righteousness.

The subject for conversation at the afternoon meeting was, "The believer in the Church and in the world." The subject was introduced by Revs. JAMES GRAHAM, of Broughty Ferry, and R. BALGARNIE. The latter said that the Church consists of all who have faith in Christ. Men are called to serve God in their, business whatever it may be, as truly as men are called to serve Him in the ministry. Pastor Haegert, Rev. John Ross, and Messrs. Roxburgh, Jamison, and Lapsley took part in the conversation. At 3.15, Mr. Leonard K. Shaw gave an account of his work amongst homeless boys and girls in Manchester.

The Hall, at the evening meeting, was again crowded in every part with eager listeners. Rev. JOHN YOUNG, of Edinburgh, gave an address on "The Saviour's love, and its constraining power." After Mr. L. K. Shaw had spoken, Rev. R. BALGARNIE delivered a powerful address from the words, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock" (Rev. iii. 20). When addressing a meeting of postmen in a post-office in England, he was told that it was a rule there that a postman should knock no oftener at a door than three times. If he received no answer to the third knock, he had to go away. But Christ knocks at the door of the sinner's heart every day, and all the day long He wants in, to give the poor, naked, blind sinner the goods spoken of in the preceding context, and to have fellowship.

THURSDAY.

The closing meetings of the Conference were held on Thursday, beginning at 11 o'clock. Rev. Dr. BLACK, of Inverness, spoke on "The varied operations of the Holy Spirit." He said that the Spirit's office was to glorify Christ. When we have seen Jesus, we become his witnesses; but we can witness boldly only when the fire of the Spirit's presence burns in our hearts. His work is to unfold the mind of Christ; to bring to a focus the teaching of Christ. He shows us the road, illumines the mind, and makes the life fruitful in every good work. To walk in the Spirit is to manifest the inner life of the Spirit in corresponding outward deeds. The power promised in connection with the descent of the Spirit was not miraculous power. Miracles were just the ringing of the bell at the opening of the Christian Church. The promise was realised in spiritual power. We need a stimulant in our Christian life and work. Christians were, for the most part, far too sober. But the Apostolic injunction is, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." It is the Spirit that seals the believer as Christ's property.

Rev. J. YOUNG, speaking on "The authority and power of the Word of God," said that Christian experience testifies to the Word's power and authority. Among the characteristics of the Bible were the following: (1) It affirms truth; it does not speculate about it. (2) It comes to us as a Word of command, without any doubt in its tones. (3) It claims to utter absolute truth, and treads the highest levels of thought. The Word gives light and dispels moral darkness wherever it is allowed an entrance. It is this Word, vital with the life of God, that heals and quickens and saves. Preachers should preach the word, not in an apologetic manner, but with authority. And they could do this only when they yielded to its power.

The afternoon meeting of this day was devoted to missionary addresses. Rev. Dr. DYER, Pachamba, India, gave a deeply interesting account of his medical mission, and showed how the healing of the body opened up the way for the introduction of the Gospel into the souls of the heathen. Pastor HAEGERT, with the aid of a map, related the origin and progress of his work among the Santhals, and the Rev. J. Young gave a few well-chosen remarks on the need of cultivating the missionary spirit at home.

The evening meeting was very large, every passage as well as every seat, being crowded. Rev. Dr. DYER spoke, with much fervour, on "The Gospel for the world," and exemplified his subject by incidents from his own missionary experience. Rev. Dr. BLACK followed with an able address based on the words "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." His appeals were touching, tender, and telling. The man, he said, who rejected the claims of Christ in these days of light was either a fool or a madman—morally. Rev. J. E. SOMERVILLE concluded the meeting by speaking for a short time, on Christ's words, "I am the door, by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." He said that in Christ we find safety, liberty, and plenty.

An after-meeting was held at the close of the evening service. Anxious ones were spoken to, and some professed to have found Christ. A meeting for prayer was also held every morning at 10 o'clock in the Y.M.C.A.Hall.

WALTHAMSTOW.—A Pure Literature Association has been commenced here, with a depôt at Hoe-street Bridge. Its objects will be carried out by means of agents, who visit from house to house with Bibles, good books, and magazines for sale; by supplying Gospel workers with Gospel books, tracts, and other publications, and Bible-carriage work.

WORK IN FOREIGN HARBOURS.—An English captain, writing from an Italian harbour, says:—"Every port I go to I find the Lord has his believing ones there, and on board nearly every ship; truly He is blessing the work of the various Societies. There is one sad drawback, which, I am sorry to say, is on the increase amongst our steamers, and that is, the unnecessary work on the Lord's day. It is common now to see British steamers working in foreign ports, as much as foreigners. In many cases the captains have no choice in the matter, and have to submit very unwillingly. I am sorry to remark that in some of our English charter-parties, the clause is creeping in to work in harbour on Sundays, if customary. Of course, this keeps many of our seamen from attending Divine worship, and has also a demoralising effect on them. May the time speedily arrive when there will be more captains preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and then we shall gather in our crews."

A HARVEST FESTIVAL.

[FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THERE were wonderful gatherings at the Great Assembly Hall, on Saturday and Lord's day last, in connection with what is called the harvest thanksgiving festival. The spacious and lofty platform was literally piled up to the top with all kinds of fruits, flowers, and vegetables. Huge bread loaves and garnered stores, from all parts of the earth, the whole of which had been willingly given by the people interested in and connected with this great centre of Christian effort, were reared and arranged in the most tasteful and remarkable combinations. The summit was crowned with a kind of triumphal arch, covered over with evergreens, and endless varieties of floral decorations, the whole surmounted with a crowning of floral device.

Special preparations had been made in view of the singing, and the great congregational anthem, invoking everything which hath breath to praise the Lord, was simply overpowering. The powerful organ skilfully led the sound of things inanimate, whilst the volume of praise, from one of the largest gatherings ever crowded into the Assembly Hall, followed the company of singers which filled the platform.

Mr. Henry Varley gave his popular and interesting lecture on Billy Bray, on the Saturday, when the building was crowded to the ceiling. The interest was very deep, and great enthusiasm was manifested. On the Lord's day morning the preacher gave a most telling address on the Parable of the Sower, illustrating some of the many facts in relation to seed-time and harvest, spiritually considered.

In the evening it is said that as many people were turned away from the building as were crowded in every nook and corner within it. Mr. Kerwin took the early part of the service. The rendering of the all-praise anthem was glorious. Mr. Varley's address was listened to with profound attention. Making the free-will offerings of the people his text and subject for discourse, the preacher said that in order to harvest there must be: (1) intelligent preparation; (2) appropriate sowing; (3) necessary watering; (4) discipline and nurture; (5) sunny blossoming; (6) certain expectation; (7) careful examination; and (8) gladsome fruition. The service was a memorable one. The preacher, reaching the climax of his discourse amid the joys and blessedness of the eternal harvest, emphasised the grander anthem of the redeemed, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God." Verily, the "harvest home" song, "The lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them to living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," was in season. The great audience hung upon the preacher's words in breathless silence, and another proof was given that the Gospel of the blessed God has lost none of its attractive power to reach and hold the interest of the toiling masses of our fellow-men.

My heart was made glad as I observed the deep and widening interest which Mr. Charrington's work has obtained throughout the East-end. Leaving for Christ and humanity's sake the traffic in strong drink, the great Lord is honouring his servant more and more. He is showing him, and Mr. Kerwin and their great company of co-workers, that, by his grace and blessing, forsaking the accumulation of money at the price of the destruction of his fellow-men, He is giving him reward in the salvation of thousands of souls. How thankful I should be if my words should be read by some of the stewards of substance, and that some substantial proofs of sympathy with Mr. Charrington in his blessed and practical work, might reach him.

SHOWERS OF BLESSING.

AT the noon-day prayer-meeting held at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, some very cheering reports were made of work in different places. Mr. M. H. HODDER told of stirring times at Bromley. Night after night, during a very fruitful mission held by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, in which Christians of all denominations combined, the public buildings were filled with congregations. About seventy friends gave themselves to help in the work, and a great many persons sent in their names for advice and guidance. The inquiry-room was much used, and with very encouraging results. With a rising population, the place has urgent needs, for even now, when the attendance at the places of worship shows much improvement, the streets are filled with people during the time of evening service on Sundays.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS was filled with joy in view of a recent movement at Ryde. During ten days, twenty-seven crowded meetings were held. As the work grew, and the interest deepened, a military man threw open his brilliant room for Bible-readings. Many people of the upper classes have been reached, and some have found peace; some, indeed, who had attended a High Church where "prayers for the dead" have been offered, came under conviction. A number of visitors to the place in search of health will thus go to their homes with a knowledge of sins forgiven.

Mr. H. PUTTERILL related an incident of open-air preaching at Holloway. On Sunday last, a fashionably-attired young man, a gambler, broke down under a sense of sin, and, at his request, the hymn on "Substitution" was sung. He said that he heard it seven or eight years ago at the Agricultural Hall, and was then greatly impressed by it. He now professed to realise a Saviour in Christ, and, in token of leaving the gambler's life, he produced his pocket-book, tore out the leaves, and threw them away. Mr. Putterill added that the Christian mother of the young man had long been praying for him, and on the previous evening her petition at the Throne of Grace was, "Lord, make haste to save; delay not, for thy name sake."

A correspondent, writing as to Mr. Inglis's meetings at Ryde, says:—The afternoon Bible-readings have been largely attended by all classes in the town. Many believers have been greatly blessed, and numbers of weary workers have been encouraged and refreshed. The meetings for the unsaved, held in the Town Hall and other places, were marked by great power; and night after night it has been the privilege of the workers to point not a few of the anxious to the Lord Jesus.

THE ARTILLERY-LANE MISSION, 5, Artillery-street, Bishopsgate, E., continues to carry on a good work in a very needy district. The sixteenth annual report shows that thirteen common lodging-houses are regularly visited; open-air preaching is conducted, and tracts are distributed. Special efforts are made to benefit the women and children, and there are encouragements as well as drawbacks. Larger premises are greatly needed, and it is hoped that this want will in due course be supplied. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. S. Finn, 14, Talbot-place, St. Anne's-road, Stamford-hill.

BURGOS HOUSE, CROYDON.—The third annual report of this Orphan Home for little Girls, in Sydenham-road North, Croydon, tells a story of steady growth. The family now numbers thirty-six, eleven of the little ones being quite destitute. If the work continues to grow, a small house will be taken, to form the beginning for a second Home, providing, of course, that funds come in as they are required. The friends of Burgos House have not been backward in recognising its needs; but nevertheless the year has closed with a considerable balance on the wrong side. The hon. sec. is Miss E. J. Smith, Dalkeith Cottages, Wellesley-road, Croydon.

PEACE IN JESUS.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you not as the world giveth, give I unto you. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."—JOHN xiv. 5, 27; xvi. 5, 33.

PEACE in Jesus, blessed promise,[1]
  Covenant word of changeless love; [2]
Sealed in blood, and daily witnessed [3]
  By thy grace, Eternal Dove.[4]
Peace in Jesus; oh, what blessing, [5]
  Calm and pure, our spirits know; [6]
When, the ties of earth forgotten, [7]
  All our joys from Jesus flow. [8]

Softly flows Siloa's fountain, [9]
  Through this wide and howling waste; [10]
Deepest, sweetest peace affording [11]
  All its hallowed stream who taste. [12]
From the conflict, faint and thirsty, [13]
  Deep we drain the cup of love; [14]
Oh, that deeper still our spirits [15]
  Might its endless blessings prove. [16]

Peace in Jesus, though around us [17]
  Rage the tempest's angry strife; [18]
Though the deep her fountains open, [19]
  O'er them floats the Ark of life. [20]
There, the weary dove, returning [21]
  From that dark and trackless sea, [22]
Folds in peace her drooping pinion, [23]
  Sheltered from the storm in Thee. [24]

Though on earth we've scorn and trouble,[25]
  In ourselves but shame and sin, [26]
All without—the reign of darkness, [27]
  All a fearful strife within; [28]
He who died, and lives for ever, [29]
  Saves and guards from every ill, [30]
He who walked upon the waters, [31]
  Still commandeth, "Peace, be still." [32]

Peace in Jesus, when in ruins [33]
  Earth's proud battlements are laid, [34]
Calmly still in Him abiding, [35]
  Rest we there the wearied head. [36]
When the sun in sackcloth mourneth, [37]
  When the winepress runs with blood, [39]
On the sea of glass reposing, [39]
  Tune we still the harps of gold. [40]

EDUCATION IN SYRIA.—There are over 200 children in attendance at the John Wilson Memorial Schools, Baakleen, Syria, which are undoubtedly a blessing in a benighted region. Opened in 1880 by a bind Druse, the schools came into present hands two years ago. Several Societies of Friends have on various occasions rendered assistance, but now a steady supply of funds is required to keep them going. An important work is being done, and it is much to be regretted that the future of so valuable an institution should be uncertain. Further information may be had from the treasurer, Mr. Alex. Melville, Llandaff Deaf and Dumb Schools, Cardiff.

WATER FAMINE IN JERUSALEM.—I sent off on August 9, a cheque for £3, which had been announced as a donation for water for poor Jews at Jerusalem. Here is a copy of the letter received in reply:—"Jerusalem, August 29, 1888. Your note and cheque for £3 have come to hand; I am so thankful for it; so will the poor things be when I go among them, which I hope to do to-morrow. But, after all, £3 is so little among the many. Every week the scarcity of water is more and more felt, and how long yet before rain can be expected. As usual, the Jews in their crowded dirty quarters are the greatest sufferers; so much sickness and many deaths. Our doctor has said that in the Jewish quarters alone 900 children have died this summer.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Bible Conference, held for the first time in Colorado, was very encouraging, considering the scattered population of that distant State. Pastors and evangelists mutually co-operated in teaching and study. Glen Park, the new Chatauqua camp of the Rockies, with its auditorium and cottages, was utilised for this Bible school. Rev. George C. Needham was chosen Moderator by the committee of Denver pastors. Dr. Macnutt, late of London, and now resident physician at Denver, gave two of the addresses. Some of the younger ministers declared themselves spiritually benefited, especially by the teaching on the Lord's Second Coming, a theme new to many.

Two beloved evangelists now labouring amongst the miners of Colorado are worthy of mention. John Currie, a Scotchman, was converted some years since in Montreal. Like the late Henry Moorhouse, he gave himself diligently to the study of the Scriptures, and although a man of limited education, he has become an accurate thinker, an exact theologian, and an able speaker. Better still, he is a man of sweet spirit and genuine humility, full of innocent humour, rich in quaint and pithy sayings, deeply compassionate in his nature, and a true evangelist as a hunter of souls.

John Currie's comrade, Peter Bilhorn, is an American German, whose young life had been devoted to negro minstrelsy and clog-dancing. Converted in Chicago, through the preaching of Dr. Pentecost, Peter immediately severed himself from every evil way, and joined the workers in Mr. Moody's church. Under the tutorship of Mr. Stebbins, he has developed into a remarkably powerful singer. He carries a little organ, with which he enters saloons, and other places of resort, in or out of doors, instantly captivating his audiences with music and song. Nor does he leave them without an earnest Gospel appeal. These two hardy, ready, zealous men, Peter and John, are now pioneering in Colorado; they are affectionately commended to the prayers of your readers.

Rev. Thomas Needham is another evangelist who has been doing a noble work this summer. After twelve months of successful labour through the coal regions of Pennsylvania, he pitched his tent in a needy district of Philadelphia, where nightly he preached Jesus and the resurrection. Nor have other evangelists allowed the summer to pass by without doing their share of mission work. The Evangelisation Society of Boston, just entering its second year, is proving a fruitful auxiliary to the churches. An Examining Committee, composed of Boston pastors, passes judgment on every evangelist employed by this society. This has proved a great safeguard for the exclusion of unworthy men.

The fire of indignation kindled in Boston some months ago against Jesuitical interference with the public schools is spreading throughout the land. Several things have combined to fan the flames. The attitude of the City Council towards Rev. W. F. Davis and others, and the action of the School Board in excluding Swinton's History from the public schools, because it defines the popish doctrine of indulgences, have aroused the American spirit to fiery outcry and fervid declamation.

Mr. Davis was released from jail last week, being allowed thirty-six days for good conduct. Like Joseph in prison, he commended himself to keepers and fellow-prisoners. On Sunday he addressed three thousand people who packed the music-hall, arraigning the Governor of the State, the Mayor of the city, and the members of the City Council, with vigorous language for their wilful blindness to existing evils, while zealously prosecuting the law against those who seek only the city's welfare by preaching the Gospel in the Common.

On Monday noon, Tremont Temple was filled at the monthly Evangelical Alliance meeting, when leading City pastors vehemently protested against the Vatican's interference with our free institutions. The speeches rang with no uncertain sound, and we are informed by "old-timers" that they were akin to the anti-slavery speeches in ante-bellum days. As we watched the excited audience, and heard their loud approval of the most radical utterances, we wondered if it were only a flash in the pan to end in smoke.

I may add that in recent conversation with a lady who had been for thirty years a faithful servant of Rome, having enjoyed a personal acquaintance with the Pope, cardinals, and archbishops, she remarked that we Protestants had little knowledge of Jesuitical intrigues in this country.

September 11.

A CONFERENCE IN GERMANY.

THE third Conference of Christian workers, clergymen, and laymen took place, as usual, in the Mission House, Blankenburg, Schwarzathal, Thüringia, from September 3 to 6, and was attended by old and new members from various parts of Germany.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker, now on his way to Russia, presided, and the impression made on all present was that of a special realisation of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. Many prayers had been offered in behalf of this Conference, and they were most abundantly answered.

The subjects under discussion were: The foundations of our faith; its growth, hindrances, and fruits. The last afternoon was devoted to the Evangelisation of the World, and the last evening to the Coming of the Lord.

The last day of the feast proved, in truth, "the great day"; not alone did our revered and eloquent chairman make our hearts burn with joy as he pointed us to our coming King. Other brethren, too, took up the same glowing strain; and it was hardly to be wondered at that at the close of testimonies such as these, several souls out of the outsiders who attended the meetings found Christ. Altogether, a characteristic of this Conference was that from the very first day conversions took place, whilst many of the members, who had belonged to the Lord for years past, received a second baptism of the Spirit. The letters which, since the close of the meetings, every post brings in, are already giving proof that a deep spiritual work has been done, the influence of which is being carried far and wide throughout Germany. Our hearts and lips are overflowing with joy and gratitude.

In every way, indeed, we have of late felt great reason for encouragement in every branch of our work; and the need of more accommodation, especially for the reception of a larger number of orphan children, has led us to decide on adding a new wing to the mission-house, in dependence on the help of the Lord to supply the needful silver and gold. We ask for the prayers of the Lord's children for this new undertaking, as well as for the continuance of those showers of spiritual blessing which we have so graciously been allowed to experience in the past.

Y.W.C.A. EDUCATIONAL CLASSES.

THE latest forward movement of the London Y.W.C.A. is in the direction of promoting evening educational classes for young women engaged during the day. The Association has over one hundred and forty branches scattered throughout London, and of these nearly forty are institutes, homes, or restaurants.

At several of these institutes evening classes have for some time been held for their members, but it is now felt by the London Council that the time has come for increasing the number of classes, and extending their usefulness, by opening them to the large numbers of young women not at present members of the Association. Accordingly, several institutes are uniting in a scheme for the further development of such classes. The subjects to be taught will embrace book-keeping, shorthand, French, music, dress-cutting and draping, ambulance, cookery, &c.

The classes will be open to all young women, the teaching will be thoroughly efficient, and the fees extremely moderate. A list of the institutes at which these classes are to be held will be sent on application to the Secretary, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, London, W., endorsed "Educational Classes."

WESLEYAN WEST LONDON MISSION.

ANOTHER feature has been added to the work of the West Central Methodist Mission. Though not likely at once to meet with universal approval among the friends of the Mission, it certainly promises to prove a very useful method of presenting the Gospel to many people who can with difficulty be reached at all. The innovation is a magic lantern service, and Wardour Hall was crowded on the occasion of the first Sunday evening exhibition of religious truth by means of light and canvas.

The subject illustrated was the story of Moses and the brazen serpent, and the audience was not only reverent throughout, but quite moved by some of the scenes. The hymns were thrown upon the sheet and heartily sung; the lesson was John iii.; the pictorial sermon was preached by Mr. J. Nix, organising secretary of the Mission, from the words, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life." The pictorial scenes were deeply impressive. There was also shown a public-house, which formed the theme of a little lecture on the curse of drink and the beauty of total abstinence.

During the after-meeting, a large number of men and women entered the inquiry-rooms, and some professed to find peace in Christ. The promoters have been much encouraged by the success of the experiment. Among other recent developments in connection with the Mission is an arrangement by which the Princes' Hall in Piccadilly is secured for weekly meetings. Major Meares proposes to hold therein, on Sunday afternoons, a service for the children of the better classes, who, for various reasons, are not sent to Sunday-schools. The anniversary of the Mission will take place on Friday October 19. Mr. Pearse will preach at noon in St. James's Hall; there will be a conference in the afternoon at Wardour Hall, and a public meeting at night in St. James's Hall.

REWARDS FOR BRAVERY.—The committee of the Royal Humane Society have had under consideration an unusually large number of cases of saving life, to a great extent due to the incidents of the summer bathing season, and have found the degree of danger incurred in seven instances sufficient to justify the award of silver medals—a number which is far beyond ordinary experience.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Kenneth Mackenzie, Medical Missionary at Tientsin, China.

Mr. Denham Smith, by latest accounts at the time of going to press, is lying very near his release. His doctors do not hold out the slightest hope of his valuable life being even temporarily prolonged. He is mostly without pain, but lies in a state of dangerous exhaustion. His peace of mind sustains him in great calm.

A correspondent of The Times, fresh from a recent visit to Ireland, opportunely urges the importance of reviving old and establishing new native Irish industries. He quotes instances of the very successful adoption of this policy in several places on the Continent, e.g., at Arco, where working in olive wood has become an industry furnishing employment for the entire community; at Furtwangen, in Baden, similar results have followed the development of wood-carving, and Wurtemburg has become a hive of busy home industries. Similarly, it is urged, the marbles, bog-oak, rushes, osiers, and other Irish productions furnish ample material for remunerative industries. We have frequently pleaded for the raising of the Irish question out of the mire of party politics. To teach the people to help themselves, and to assist them in utilising native resources, is the truest policy.

Dr. Robert Pringle, late of the Sanitary Department, Her Majesty's Bengal Army, in a letter to The Times, says that in many ways the Act for the suppression of female infanticide in India is either avoided or rendered useless. Speaking from actual knowledge, he declares that, while boys are readily presented for vaccination as a precautionary measure against small-pox, girls are purposely kept back and allowed to take the malady. Dr. Pringle is of opinion that no tolerable amount of police supervision will avail to stop the evil. He well says:—

> We must get to the root of the matter before we can hope to see any real diminution of this awful practice, and the only way to get to this root is through the mothers; elevate them, when their value will be acknowledged and their honour thus safeguarded, and their lives shielded from this custom.

Argument is not needed to show the wisdom of this advice. Let Christian light shine into the dark zenana, and it will cease to be the habitation of cruelty which it now too generally is.

A protest to the Prefect of Police against the licentiousness which invades the streets of Paris has been sent by—those who know the character of the paper will hardly guess by whom—Gil Blas. It describes itself as not pudibond, and all that it demands is that they should know how "to hide their sores." "It is," it says, "because we like a merry, easy life that we lift our voice against an unclean bestiality—an obscenity without esprit—which has nothing in common with discreet, refined gallantry. But between an amiable pleasant life and filth there is an abyss. It cannot be denied that Paris never presented such an aspect as it offers to-day. Its elegant physiognomy, its graceful appearance, is disappearing more and more every day. The grand arteries of the capital, where luxury overflows—where the windows display the incomparable riches of Parisian art—where the most sumptuous carriages and the most elegant crowds circulate, have become such that decent women cannot walk there. The air is rent by the cries of sellers of songs, obscene books, scandalous publications, and the solicitations of men with cards, making proposals that would make a carabineer blush, to say nothing of chaste ears."

That this paper, which is by no means Puritanic, feels called upon to sound a cry of alarm is, indeed, a significant sign of the times. The evil done is incalculable, and it is high time, says the Evangéliste, from which the above is copied, that gangrenous publications should be prohibited no less than diseased pork. The decadence of Latin literature preceded the fall of the Roman Empire. The Evangéliste calls upon the French electors to give their votes only to those candidates whose programme shall include some measures to maintain decency, even though some political ideas should have to be sacrificed.

It is high time that some serious and emphatic protest were made against the growing tendency to profanity in connection with the stage. It is a proof of the general demoralising effect of the whole theatrical connection, that even the management of so comparatively reputable an institution as the Lyceum Theatre should make use of a text from the New Testament as an advertisement of their latest farce upon the hoardings. In the music-halls, and other low-class houses of entertainment, a vein of profanity is painfully frequent. A common method of raising a laugh is to make flippant allusions to the personality of Satan, as if the existence of the enemy of mankind were only worth treating as a highly extravagant joke, and one of the most popular music-hall songs of the hour is that sung by a man dressed up in the conventional garb of Mephistopheles, with horns and tail, describing the evil one's adventures in pursuit of pleasure "about town."

The authorities, who are responsible for licensing these establishments, are neglecting a most serious and imperative duty by permitting such outrages on religion and public morality as are nightly perpetrated in these haunts of vice. It is a saddening and heart-searching reflection that any section of public opinion should be found to countenance such exhibitions, and those who now jest at these most solemn issues of immortal life may one day learn to their cost the awful reality of these truths. Scoffers should remember and take to heart the fate which befel the children who insulted the prophet Elisha with their foolish mockery.

In a recent issue, it was suggested that Christian colonies of carefully selected emigrants might be founded, to the relief of congested populations at home and the advantage of the emigrants themselves. Our attention has been called to a plan of emigration proposed by Mr. W. L. Rees, of 11, North-crescent, Bedford-square. For ten years Mr. Rees has been thinking out a complete system of colonisation, upon a co-operative basis, substituting sympathy and mutual help for selfishness and competition. Upon these principles, the wealth produced in settlements would be distributed equally between the producer, capitalist, and consumer, after the necessary charges of production—namely, rent, wages, and interest—had been paid. The Association, to reduce this theory to practice, would carry on all operations in an ordinary business manner; but, co-operation having taken the place of competition, the antagonism too often existing at present between philanthropy and business would be removed. Mr. Rees's views are developed in pamphlets, published by Messrs. Wyman & Sons, and they are worthy of careful study.

The Lord has said, "Yet once will I make to tremble not the earth only, but also heaven." Against this declaration present-day scepticism urges that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Such scepticism ought to have its misgivings, as it reads the accounts, now to hand, of the recent volcanic explosion in Japan. In the twinkling of an eye, a massive mountain peak was blown into the air, and wiped out of the map of Japan. The noise was like that of a hundred thunder peals. Destroying matter was hurled over the country at railroad speed. Hundreds of millions of tons were lifted up into the air, whole forests were levelled, and the entire face of the country changed for thirty square miles. The appalling suddenness was said to have been the most terrible feature of the catastrophe. It is very important that our age should bear in mind such facts as these.

A Flemish contemporary publishes a very striking account of the intemperate habits of the Flemish working man. It appears that even those who rarely give themselves up to regular drinking-bouts are in the habit of taking incessant "nips," or small quantities of stimulant at every spare moment. A comparatively "moderate drinker" will think nothing of consuming ten or a dozen petits verres of fiery spirit during the day, in addition to the beer which he takes with his meals, and others are in the habit of indulging to a considerably greater extent. The expense, also, must be very heavy, amounting in many cases, it is averred, to one-fifth or one-sixth of the workman's wage. One of the first consequences of this vice is that his wife and family are generally reduced to extreme squalor and discomfort, often not knowing where to look for the merest necessaries of life.

Advocates of temperance will recognise in the statistics of failures among publicans one among many hopeful signs of the decay of the liquor traffic. There has been an increase of nearly 20 per cent. of such failures in the last two years, and last year they amounted to no less a total than 342 for England and Wales. That this is in the main due to an increase of temperance throughout the country is proved by the fact that in the meantime there has been a distinct revival of trade, and the failures cannot consequently be ascribed to depression. Even the most determined opponents of the temperance movement must recognise that the supply of drinking facilities has been largely in excess of the demand, and it will be for those who are entrusted with the power of granting licences to consider whether the time has not now come to cut down the number of superfluous drink-shops, which appear to be as unprofitable to their owners as even to the customers whom they attract.

A correspondent of The Times has recently drawn timely attention to a serious oversight. It appears that in one of the French text-books appointed to be studied for the University Local Examinations, there are terms "impossible to render into English without causing modesty to blush," and success is made to attend upon a career of bare-faced lying by the heroine; whilst another book is stated to contain whole passages of intrigues and marriage scandals of a prurient nature. The spread of pernicious literature is one of the most subtle agencies for evil, and it is impossible to gauge the moral harm which may be spread among young people by this means. It is, therefore, hoped that the objectionable books will be expunged from the list forthwith. Those who are in any way responsible for the education of the young should, of all persons, be most careful in this respect. Though we are, unhappily, indebted to France for much of the putrid literary filth circulated in this country, there is no lack of pure high-class French literature, from which suitable selection may be made for examination and educational purposes.

Amongst the important social subjects which lately received the attention of the Poor-Law Relief Committee was that of relief-works, and the conclusion to which the Committee came coincides with that arrived at by the Mansion House Conference on the unemployed (to which we recently drew attention), namely, that if made part of a regular system of relief the inevitable effect of such works is to discourage habits of thrift and forethought. The difficulty in connection with relief works is the same which confronts the philanthropist and the social reformer at all points in attempting to better the condition of the poor, namely, that the ranks of the unemployed contain both the deserving workless, and the hopelessly thriftless—two classes which should be separated, and dealt with on different lines. On this point it may be remembered that Mr. Francis Peek—one of the highest authorities on this subject—suggests that deserving men applying for relief might be employed for wages by the local authorities on the roads, paths, or open spaces, and that a farm might be attached to each Union, where spade labour could be employed, whilst, for the idle and improvident, he urges the provision of test-work.

Canon Venables' interesting "Life of Bunyan," just published at so opportune a time, will be greatly valued even by those who can afford to obtain the best biography of the inspired Tinker, that which we owe to the pen of Rev. J. Brown, of Bedford. We question, however, if the exceptions which the Canon takes to the value of Bunyan's "Grace Abounding" will be generally received without question. That the Dantesque work "fosters too much introspection" may be true, but that is more than outweighed by the evidence which the book affords that "Bunyan was drawing no imaginary picture of what others might feel, but simply telling in plain unadorned language what he had felt." "Grace Abounding" was written by a man whose introspection never for a moment kept him from "looking unto Jesus." If it does here and there "nourish a morbid imagination," on the other hand it has been and will be helpful to myriads of "timid Christians."

We have been hearing a great deal lately in regard to the kindly feeling which would be exhibited towards the Protestants in Ireland under certain eventualities. The Irish Catholic, a weekly paper published in Dublin, has commenced a series of articles on the Irish Church Mission, the "City Mission," and other kindred movements in the Irish metropolis. The first article gives lists of names and addresses of the workers and of the members of committees, and is accompanied by some doggrel verses, the last two of which run as follow:—

Bad luck to Mrs. Smiley and to all her souper crew!
'Tis nothing but the Devil's work they set themselves to do;
And sure 'tis more than we can bear, or Christians should endure.
To let those grabbers thus destroy the children of the poor.

Rise up, rise up, good people, all over Dublin town—
This cruel work must now be stopped, this gang must be put down;
Those vultures and those human wolves must all be chased away
If God's bright face we wish to see upon the Judgment Day.

These words need no comment. Apparently, however, the author was ashamed of his work, for he has not ventured to append his name.

The well-known Vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, in a letter with reference to the recent horrible murders, has not hesitated to say:—

> The murders were, it may almost be said, bound to come; generation could not follow generation in lawless intercourse; children could not be familiarised with scenes of degradation; community in society could not be the bond of society—and the end of all, peace.
> Some of us who during many years have known the life of our neighbours, do not think these murders to be the worst facts in our experience, and published evidence now gives material for forming a picture of daily or nightly life such as no one has imagined.

We have from time to time called attention to the pestilent diseases festering beneath our nineteenth century civilisation, and warned our readers that we are all more or less responible in the sight of God for the present condition of things. That Christian England should permit these things to exist, and to continue, is one of the most dreadful facts of our national religious life. Drink and overcrowding, starvation wages, and consequent vice, are the factors which face us, and the longer we allow them to shelter themselves beneath the plea of vested interests, the more difficult will the solution of the dread problems be. Our brother's blood, however, is crying from the ground, and which of us shall dare to shut our ears to the terrible question, "Where is Abel, thy brother?"

Dr. Wilkinson, the new Roman Catholic "Bishop Auxiliary of Newcastle," preached on Sunday week at Newcastle, and in the course of a sermon, remarkable for its fulsomeness, said of the Pope:—

> There sat, at that moment, yonder at Rome, in Peter's throne, with all Peter's power and jurisdiction over emperors, kings, princes, and people—there sat on Peter's throne their own blessed lord, the Pope Leo XIII., holding Peter's keys in his hand, holding Peter's jurisdiction, holding Peter's power, that what he bound on earth was bound in heaven; what he loosed on earth was loosed in heaven—holding Peter's rule over the whole flock of Christ. Yonder he sat, then, the father of fathers, the prince of prelates, Peter's successor, and Christ's vicar—their Lord Pope.

It is too much the fashion in these days of effeminate toleration to qualify and gloss over Romish doctrines, and such authoritative utterances as the above are, therefore, helpful in so far as they are clear and lucid statements of Romish belief. Perhaps, however, in this "month of expiation," when the Pope has announced his intention, and completed his arrangements for the loosing from purgatory of myriads of "holy souls," the Bishop Auxiliary could not decently say much less in the way of adulation.

Much prominence is being given to a series of "Tracts for the People," by Rev. R. Linklater, D.D., vicar of Holy Trinity Stroud Green; and as it is not improbable that, for obvious reasons, they will be circulated broadcast, it may be useful to record that they are full of insidious, fallacious teaching, and not upon Gospel lines. As, for instance, the following passage from the one on "Confession":—

> Confession is the teaching of human nature, but absolution is the gift of Christ. The gift purchased by his death and blood shedding, and applied in the way He has chosen by his priests, to whom He has given the power of absolving penitent sinners.

We have in a previous number quoted other anti-scriptural pretensions from this tract. Another tract on the "Real Presence" contains perhaps even more plainly expressed views, but it is not Protestant teaching.

The movement in favour of a national memorial to Bishop Morgan, the first translator of the Bible into the Welsh language, has our hearty sympathy, and we are glad to observe that representatives of so many branches of the Church of Christ are united in promoting the object. As Viscount Evelyn has said, there are thousands of cottage homes in Wales in which the Bible is the one book studied, thoroughly known, always in the hand and on the table, and we trust it will ever be so. A statue of Bishop Morgan will, however, after all be but a secondary monument, for the Welsh Bible is the best monument he could have, and one which will outlast any other.

It is stated that in order to maintain the mission stations now in existence in connection with the Wesleyan body the sum raised in Great Britain and Ireland will have to be raised £3000 per annum until 1890, so as to make the amount £111,000. We do not doubt that the necessary sum will be forthcoming. It is pleasant to note in connection with Wesleyan Missions that last year the Irish auxiliary contributed no less a sum than £5162.

We agree with "S. G. O.," in a recent letter to The Times, that we are beginning to reap the harvest of some of the seed which has been of late years so industriously sown through the Press and platform by those who have long since renounced the restraints of Christianity, and are now scheming to reverse the social order. It was impossible that such incessant propaganda should be fruitless. In the parks on summer evenings, from the platforms of freethinkers' halls during long winter nights, opinions have been boldly announced which have been subversive of our most sacred institutions. And now what is the result? The secular press unblushingly admits letters questioning the obligation of the marriage tie, and suggestions as to alternative schemes. The week is incomplete which does not contain a record of murder and crime, which is eagerly read by millions; whilst the lower orders of society are becoming honeycombed with revolutionary notions, which, like trains of gunpowder, only need a spark to bring about one of the greatest outbreaks of disorder which the world has ever seen.

Men point to this state of things as an argument against the power of Christianity. How is it that such a condition of things is possible in a Christian land? Dr. Parker says that there are 20,000 preachers in the United Kingdom, and compares the number with that of other professionals. But great though it is—and it might be greatly multiplied by the addition of Christian workers of all grades—yet we repeat that we are suffering from the lack of Christianity. We have plenty of preaching, and church-going, and money spent on schemes of one sort or another. But there is often little enough of the genuine spirit of Christ in these. We need again the baptism of the Holy Spirit, the old self-sacrifice, the simplicity of other days; the personal ministry of individual Christians towards their dependants and employés; the repetition of those lives which once transformed the world, though they had neither silver or gold, and yet gave the priceless jewels of love, and sympathy, and mercy, and the words of power and life.

We are sure that our scheme will be considered utterly Utopian, and yet we feel convinced that "the district system," properly worked, would be a remedy for many of the evils which meet us in large centres of population. In other words, let every Christian congregation have its own poor district assigned to it, on which to concentrate its energies. It would be impossible and undesirable to attempt to fetter the freedom of the people in selecting what church they prefer to attend; but let each degraded district be attached to the supervision and care of the workers of one Christian congregation. There might be a general council formed of delegates from such congregations, which should meet from time to time to consider whether the work is being in all cases efficiently performed, though without interfering with the special religious teaching given.

It may be answered that this scheme is already being worked by the National Church. We grant that it is being attempted, but the work is too gigantic to be undertaken successfully by one body of Christians among us. Besides there is no reason why the work should not equally be performed by the bodies of Nonconformists who have always shown themselves eager in works of Christian philanthropy. If the necessitous districts of our great towns and cities were equally apportioned, there would be as much work allotted to each as could be efficiently performed, and the whole area would be covered, instead of the present immense waste of strength, through several congregations concentrating their energies on the same district.

We thank several friends for sending us the words of "Peace in Jesus," for which we asked. They have been variously altered, but from our own recollection and from comparing the copies received, we believe the version given on p. 14 to be the true one. The author was Mr. Morsehead; the texts have probably been supplied by a later hand, but were evidently in the mind of the writer. One of our correspondents says he "has enjoyed this peace for over thirty-two years: praise the Lord." Our own interest in the poem arises from its having been an exceeding comfort during a dangerous illness in 1856.

The Star boasts the largest circulation of any evening paper. It should, therefore, be particular to publish only the truth. Instead of this it prints the following libel in its issue of Sept. 15:—

> BAD PAY FOR THE PRINTERS.
> Religious, Temperance, and School Board Printing at Cheap Rates.
>
> It is generally understood in the printing trade that religious and temperance papers are produced by men who are not fairly paid for their labour. A circular sent out by the Trade Union Congress Parliamentary Committee, signed by Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., as secretary, separates the sheep from the goats—the papers printed at fair rates from those on which the workmen are paid at lower rates.

Here follows a list of twenty-nine newspapers, including our own. With regard to The Christian, we simply reply that the statement is a falsehood, and we call upon The Star, as well as the "Trade Union Congress Parliamentary Committee," to prove it true or to withdraw it. The fact is that the men in some offices prefer to be free from the dictation of Trades Unions, and, therefore, these organisations stigmatise all such houses as "unfair." The office of our printers is a case in point.

We have about five hundred foreign missionaries on our free list, while about six hundred of our readers send their copies to others at home or abroad. There are about four thousand English-speaking missionaries in the world. To these the intelligence contained in The Christian cannot but be of the greatest value and interest, as our correspondence testifies. Will our readers help us to extend our free list so as to embrace them all.

A pungent protest, addressed to the Executive of the Glasgow International Exhibition and the clergy of the land, has been anonymously printed. The subject of its animadversion is the outrage upon womanhood and decency perpetrated by the exhibition of three pictures, which the writer specifies. In enforcing his protest, he tells this painful story:—

> The artists of the "nude" schools have undoubtedly caught fame in this world; but what shall be their place and reward hereafter, if then it shall be discovered that their works on earth had nurtured seeds of damnation in minds and bodies, and led to the ruin of souls for eternity? Not long ago an artist who commands respect, fame, and large sums for his portraits, engaged a young, handsome, and well-connected girl of sixteen to sit as model...The serpentine cunning of an "old hand," with polish and flattery allured the simple girl, and she gave way before his influence and power. Never shall be forgot the agony of that girl, and the terrible scene that ensued when the artist endeavoured to abandon her. She pleaded to be kept away from home, and, screaming, affirmed that she would never go back. Eventually she was disowned, and the Fine Art artist got free; but where that girl fled to—God only knows.

We are constantly receiving reports from credible sources of pulpit defections from evangelical doctrine. We sincerely sympathise with our correspondents. But we would advise them, instead of writing to ourselves, or quietly withdrawing, that it would be a wiser course and more in accord with the spirit of the New Testament, to see the minister privately, or write to him, remonstrating with him, and showing the Scriptural unsoundness of his views. A letter written in a spirit of love might compel a man to reflect seriously, with the result of leading him to modify his statements. It is a great mistake to yield the position without striking a blow in defence.

Evil tidings are coming apace from East Central Africa. The murder of Major Barttelot has been quickly followed by the death, from fever, of Mr. Jameson, second in command. For the present Tippoo Tib, the slave-raiding brigand, appears to be triumphant, and the English operations for the relief of Stanley and Emin Pasha are hopelessly disorganised. This state of things, taken in connection with the revival of slave trading in the Madagascar region to which we referred last week, and the atrocities described or hinted at in Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke's letter in another column, is discouraging to the Christian and the philanthropist.

All this havoc in these uncivilised lands points a moral. It is often said, "Send first the trader, and then the missionary." The result of that doctrine is, as it now appears, that where the trader goes first he makes it almost impossible for the missionary to follow. The sight of the white man scares the people. The name of Christian is abhorrent. In many cases the very people have been swept away; and the country left desert. What a contrast to all the horrors of the East Coast of Africa, is the work of Moffat in the south of the same continent; and of the missionaries in the Isles of the Pacific, whose persevering blessed work has wrought results highly favourable to commerce; the very first demand of Christianised natives being for European goods of a much more valuable character than the few beads or spirits in which the mere trader deals.

The grave question of entertainments in places of worship in the place of services to the glory of God must be dealt with by laymen; and it is so far gratifying to find a layman protesting in the columns of The Nonconformist against the singing by a choir of a recently published Cantata in a Scarborough chapel in lieu of the usual form of Sunday evening service. If any person conceives that such a performance tends to promote spiritual worship, let him inquire more deeply, and follow the after results more carefully, and he will be undeceived. Surely there is piety enough in the churches to put a stop to such unwholesome innovations.

THE MINISTRY OF SONG.

"For Jesus' sake." What power can better lend
A life to words, or quicken souls to speak?
What music better can the voice breathe forth
Than that enriched by such ennobling aim?
Filled with such holy zeal, who can declare
Where speech and music's ministry shall end?
There is no limit to the power of God,
And every note sung in his praise shall live,
Although it seems in sound to pass away,
And leaves no trace of lasting good behind;
For, like the Spirit, secretly it spreads,
And through the world it shall reverberate,
Till, falling on some weary way-worn one,
It soothes and saves his sinking soul by hope.
Sweet singer, thou may'st never know on earth
Thy song has sped along the work of God;
But after earth, in the eternal choir
Thou yet shalt hear its echo sweet and long.

ARABIA.

Dear Sir,—Can you find a corner in The Christian for the enclosed appeal for prayer for Southern Arabia? And let me beg them that respond to it to remember Northern Arabia also, especially the Baghdad Mission, from which I have lately received most deeply interesting accounts; and Mr. Lethaby, at Kerak, on the southern border of Moab, where he is in contact with the Bedouins of the N.W. desert, a most interesting class.

F. T. Haig.

PRAYER FOR SOUTH ARABIA.

We earnestly invite united intercession to Almighty God for the people of this land, that He will open doors for the preaching of the Gospel, and prepare the hearts of all to receive it. We trust that many will respond to this request, and unite with us in setting apart a special time every Tuesday for prayer for the above object.

OPIUM IN CHINA.

Dear Sir,—I write to thank most heartily the kind lady who sends me The Christian. Both myself and wife read it regularly, and much enjoy it. We praise God for the result of your bold, timely, and thoroughly Christian presentation of hell's work in India. Let every Christian agitate, and agitate, and agitate, until that and every legal vice be stamped out.

Now fight vigorously that monster opium. We are here eye-witnesses of its ravages. Those who are interested (pecuniarily) in its sale will tell you of its wonderful uses; but the woe and degradation resulting from its use are horrible. Yesterday I was visiting a small country village, and, after preaching, they spoke to me about opium. In this little country village, consisting of about fifty families, there were two or three selling opium with rooms fitted up as opium dens. Women laid hold of me, and in a most piteous manner besought me to help their sons or relatives addicted to the habit to break away from it. Pointing to their miserable rags, they said, "They sell all they have to buy opium, so that we have no clothes to wear, nor food to eat." There were men there who had sold their land, house, wife, children, clothes, anything and everything they had. Several who had smoked opium for ten and twenty years said they wished to reform, and entreated me to help them. Then, with reproachful looks, they asked me, "Why do you foreigners bring this opium to our country?"

I was ashamed, but assured them that good Christians at home were labouring to pass an Act making the growth or sale of opium criminal. If you could see the wretchedness caused by this miserable drug, you would be urged to still greater efforts. Let English Christians strain every nerve to stamp out this accursed traffic.—Yours fraternally,

Edward S. Little.
Methodist Episcopal Mission, Kiu-kiang, China.

A Prussian Sabbath School.—Miss Betka Edward, Claarsen Strasse, Breslau, writes:—We have a Sabbath School here attended by about 400 children. The teachers are all poor, and yet we try to give the children a little treat at New Year. They receive a cake, two bits of gingerbread, and a book prize for regular attendance. It is sometimes very difficult to get up the needful sum. We would be very grateful if any friends would help us with a small contribution.

SOCIALISTS AT CHURCH.

On Thursday evening, last week, the Bishop of Rochester preached a sermon on Socialism in St. John's Church, Waterloo-road. The occasion was the anniversary of the Guild of St. Matthew. There was a considerable sprinkling of Secularists and Socialists in the congregation. It had been announced that the sermon would deal with the relation to the Church of both the classes named, but to the Secularists the Bishop said nothing. He confined his attention to Socialism, which he expounded and criticised in a kindly though outspoken manner. Some of his statements were evidently "against the grain," but the interest of the audience was well-sustained throughout.

Taking for his text Luke xii. 13—15, the Bishop made some excellent remarks on Christ's refusal to be a judge or a divider in a family dispute. Clearly Christ welcomed this opportunity of declaring the principle which underlies the Divine government for everybody and always—that whatever men can do for themselves, with the capacities and instruments given to them by God, they are left to do for themselves in their own time and way. It is better that human progress should be coincident with human effort. God steps in to do what man cannot do. Moreover, there are spheres in which God works with man, and here man must not neglect his responsibility, but must do his part.

Many voices, continued the Bishop, are today raised saying: "Speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance with me. He has it all, and that cannot be just; he has more than he needs, and that cannot have been intended, for I want some of it." In his answer, Christ went to the root of all that can be said on the subject. Refusing to interfere, He showed that his work was internal, and that external affairs were in the hands of men, to be altered and improved as the will and conscience becomes regenerated by Divine teaching and grace. Proceeding to show that worth attaches to character rather than to the possession of riches, the Bishop took up Christ's words, "Beware of covetousness." There may be selfishness in wishing to acquire, as well as in wishing to retain. There may be greed in trying to get, as well as in keeping.

The Bishop fully acknowledged the hardness of the lot of many of the wage-earning classes. The gulf that yawns between the two zones of enormous wealth and degraded poverty constitutes a glaring contrast which is truly scandalous, and if that gulf is not bridged over, a tornado may be generated which, when the storm closes, may leave a mass of wreckage behind. Out of the fierce struggle for existence Socialism has come, and although it is variously understood by different people, it demands attention. Briefly sketching the history of the movement, the Bishop criticised Karl Marx's proposal to destroy the capitalist in order that labour may have its opportunity. He seemed somewhat surprised, however, to find that the sentiments of the German theorist called forth a chorus of "hear, hears," from the audience. In a kindly, but firm manner, he said, "This is a church," and there was no further disturbance.

Several legislative proposals were then mentioned, and a confident belief was expressed that what is good and practicable in the Socialist programme will in due course find legal recognition, and be incorporated in our civilisation. It was maintained that only with a Christianised public conscience will the ideal state of society be more nearly reached. The philanthropist has his theories, kindly and well-meant, the spirit of which he has borrowed from religion, and he applies them with more or less success. We would not be without him, but usually he does not go far enough. The philosopher has nothing to preach but the survival of the fittest. The thorough, and initial, and unfailing remedy, however, is the religious one, inculcating the doctrine of Christ, and fortified by his promises, inspired by his example, and facilitated by his grace. With some warm sentiments in this spirit, the Bishop closed his sermon.

MISSIONARY CONVERSAZIONE.

The many hundreds who, in response to an invitation from the "Mpwapwas," visited the St. James's Lecture-hall, Holloway, on 13th and 14th inst., must have been greatly surprised at the scene there presented. The occasion was the second annual missionary conversazione organised by the "Mpwapwas" (a society of young men in connection with St. James's Church, formed for the purpose of extending missionary interest).

On entering the large hall, a missionary box of a novel description met the view. In point of colour, shape, and label, it was identical with the well-known C.M.S. box, and differed only in size, the dimensions being 52 inches long, 24 inches wide, and of the same depth, the slot, so as to be in the same proportion, measuring twelve inches in length and one wide. Upon the platform was erected a representation of a Hindu mosque in Benares, from the doorway of which the various speakers emerged to address the audience. At the front of the mosque and in other parts of the hall were choice palms and other suitable plants. A very attractive feature was a department decorated to represent Japan, in which, as well as elsewhere, was displayed a large number of valuable and interesting curios kindly lent by various societies and by individual owners of collections. Another large corner was tastefully stocked, by the South American Missionary Society, with a great variety of most interesting articles, pictures, &c.

Entering the smaller hall, a formidable collection of exhibits was arranged, one half of the body of the hall being occupied by idols and other things collected by Rev. C. H. Vidal Gollmer, of Lagos, during his labours in West Africa, and which Mr. Gollmer interestingly explained on both evenings. The other half of the hall was well filled by the Moravian Missionary Society's display which, with descriptive particulars by Mr. G. E. Roberts, the Lay Secretary of that Society, was much appreciated by a continuous stream of visitors.

Re-entering the large hall, two well-arranged stands on the right were occupied by a good collection from China. Such walls as were not otherwise occupied, were well hidden by very numerous diagrams, &c., which vividly depicted missionary experience in all parts of the world.

At intervals during both evenings, short addresses were given by missionaries of several societies. On Thursday the speakers were Rev. E. A. Stuart, Vicar of St. James's; Rev. George Cousins, of the London Missionary Society (late of Madagascar); Rev. W. Cooper, of the China Inland Mission; Mr. G. E. Roberts, of the Moravian Missionary Society; Mr. Eugene Stock, Editorial Secretary of the C.M.S., and Rev. W. H. Shimield, of the South American Missionary Society; the evening being closed at 10 o'clock by a few words and prayer by Rev. H. Stapleton, formerly Curate of St. James's. On the second evening, crowded though continually changing audiences were addressed by Rev. F.E. Wigram, Hon. Sec. of the C.M.S.; Rev. T. R. Wade, of the Punjab; Rev. C. H. Vidal Gollmer, of Lagos, West Africa; and the Bishop of Moosonee, N.W. America. Additional interest was given to the proceedings on both days by the singing of sacred pieces of a very suitable character, arranged by Mr. Livesey Carrott.

There was much to appeal to the eye, but it is hoped and believed that, as a result of the prayerful spirit in which the whole arrangements were made and carried out, the hearts of many may be stirred to greater effort and self-denial on behalf of the heathen.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd, the directors of the now well-known Christian Institute for Theatrical Employés, have again returned to their usual scenes of labour, after a successful series of meetings on the Continent. In the principal cities of Holland and Belgium, Gospel portions, text-books, and cards have been given to the actors and actresses in their own languages, and received by them with marked appreciation. While in Brussels some of the English members called upon their friends who had shown them kindness when in London. It was found that they were still recipients of the friendly letters sent them by the associated workers of the "Letter Mission," and that God's blessing and guidance enabled them amidst many temptations to maintain a pure and moral life.

At "La Grande Foire" in the Belgian capital, where shows come from all parts of the kingdom, much interesting work was accomplished, a drenching rain being favourable for many a friendly talk, the poor employés, giants, dwarfs, and monstrosities, consequently not being so pressed with many exhibitions. The demand for Flemish and French Gospels, kindly supplied at a reduced rate by the Committee of the Exhibition Kiosk, was very great, and the hymn, "Just as I am"—in their own languages—seemed strangely to attract these poor wanderers, for whom so little sympathy is manifested.

Arrangements have been made for similar work in Italy, and here, as in other countries, God's Word was freely distributed amongst the actors and actresses. To point all these, of various nationalities, to the one loving Saviour is the prayerful aim of the committe and directors.

Now that the London season at the theatres is commencing, Macready House, with its temperance buffets, classes, lectures, and evangelistic meetings, will no doubt be largely appreciated, not only by residents in the Metropolis, but by the many friendless girls who, unwarily, and through specious advertisements, come up to our great city, and find, alas, the stage market overstocked and no work. In a letter recently received the writer says: "I have long had a desire to write you concerning my daughter Mary, who left her home in Glasgow. She is 22; tall; fair hair, large blue eyes, and has been earning a living in London at theatres and music-halls. Try and find her out and help her, for I have been praying, seeking, and wrestling with God, the Father of the fatherless and husband of the widow, on her behalf. She is my only daughter; my husband was lost at sea; and in the struggle my health has given way. Help her for Christ's sake." Such are the cases constantly influenced for God, rescued and saved by the agencies of Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

FACTORY GIRLS.—Rev. J. Fletcher Porter is desirous of providing a place where some of the factory girls employed in North Bow can comfortably take their mid-day meal. At present many refresh themselves in the work-rooms, while others walk about the streets, or betake themselves to Victoria-park. He would like to fit up as dinner-hour refuges and resting-places two rooms he has, which are not used at all during the middle of the day. On payment of a small sum weekly, girls would be entitled to use the rooms and their furniture and conveniences. Mr. Porter says: "Sympathy with the object may induce others to follow the example; and, in my opinion, it will be an excellent beginning for the day use of unused schools and lecture-rooms." Mr. Porter's address is 362, Old Ford-road, Victoria-park, E.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers have sympathised with and prayed for us on the Hills since the death of my beloved father, in March last. Their sympathies and prayers have been deeply needed, and most truly valued. It is with heartfelt gratitude to God, and with the desire to encourage those who have helped us that I would record the faithfulness of the Lord in answering these prayers on our behalf. We have been most graciously "helped" in caring for the work of the Lord on these Hills, and, through the good hand of our God upon us, we have been enabled to continue it in all its branches. Not a meeting in any of the mission-rooms has been closed for lack of helpers. The attendance and interest in each place have been well sustained, and we believe souls have been blessed. Our Gospel tent has not lain idle. We had it repaired, and put to good service during the summer months in the villages, and trophies have been won for the Saviour through the simple, old-fashioned Gospel, which proves still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Our winter work will soon be commencing, and we long for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit's power upon us, that we may be filled, fired, and fitted for his blessed service. Our desire is to continue every branch of the work as heretofore (as each is so very deeply needed) as far as the Lord sends us help. The potato crop is a failure on the Hills, and this will mean privation for many families. I should be delighted to be the channel of help to such. Our clothing and provident clubs are a great boon to the poor; but these do not meet the needs of the many.

I am desirous of engaging a permanent district visitor for the neighbourhood, and I should be so thankful were I enabled to do so shortly. Since my father's departure the house-to-house visitation has suffered considerably. I am giving the whole of the time at my disposal to this and other branches of the work; but my daily calling prevents my exceeding my present efforts, as already the work of two men falls to my privileged portion. If any of your readers who knew my father and are interested in the work on these Hills were led to help me in carrying out my desire, I should be glad indeed. May I seek the prayers of your readers that bodily and spiritual strength may be given and maintained, and that the work of God around us may be continued in power and blessing as hitherto.

Yours very faithfully in the Lord,
W. J. H. Brealey.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

CHINESE ABORIGINES.—Very promising work has been opened up among the aboriginal tribes of the island of Hainau, in South China. Two American Presbyterian missionaries have come upon a tribe who worship one God, the Creator.

JEWS IN NEW YORK.—A synagogue in New York is now using in its service of song a selection of hymns gathered for the most part from Christian authors. The name of Jesus is of course omitted, and that of the "Heavenly Father" inserted. As the spirit of Christ pervades the book, it may be hoped the use of such hymns will lead to his acceptance.

THE BERNESE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY celebrated its anniversary, August 15, in the presence of about four thousand persons. The Society employs 35 evangelists, who conduct 260 meetings. Dr. Ziemann, of London, took part in the annual meeting. The Journal Religieux de la Suisse Romande says "he is a powerful speaker, and his addresses appear to have produced a deep impression in Berne.

GERMANY.—At the baptism of his fifth son the Emperor William II. stated that his grandfather, William I., was in the habit of spending some quiet hours every New Year's eve in reviewing, before God, with praise and humiliation, the events of the past year. The Emperor intends giving 40,000 marks (£2000), a fourth part of the whole sum required for the building of a second church in Luckenwald. The new Y.M.C.A. building—34, Wilhelmstrasse, Berlin—is to contain several smaller rooms in addition to the large hall. The Emperor gives to this object 5000 marks (£250).—Evan.-Kirch Anzeiger.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

ACTS xiii. 48.

Will you kindly explain the last clause of Acts xiii. 48, which I have just arrived at in my daily reading of the Word? A. W. Elliot.

PRAYER AND FASTING.

Jesus said, "This kind cometh not forth but by prayer and fasting" (Mark ix. 29). Why do we never fast? And why does fasting add power to prayer? G. E. Strickand.

IMMERSION.

Dear Sir,—I write for information, not for controversy, after several years' study of this subject. Suppose I put the question in this form, what would be the reply of any of your learned and able correspondents? "Regarding the exact language of the New Testament only, either original or translated, you cannot prove as a fact therefrom that any convert was altogether put under the water in baptism!" Note the old use, as well as the new, of baptizo. The fact is not proved by replying, the "thing" is as clear as daylight, or evidently implied in Scripture; nor by saying, "I must see it!" Kindly confine the question to matter of fact. Baptizo has at least four principal meanings; which shall I adopt?

THE TEN KINGDOMS.

Sir,—In The Christian of September 14, in the paper on "The First Resurrection," by Rev. John Urquhart, he says: "The Roman Empire has been divided, and these ten kingdoms are with us now, almost in their completeness." It would be very interesting if he would kindly give the names of those ten kingdoms.

J. E. Tann.

REPLY BY MR. URQUHART.

This question touches upon one of the most marked developments of modern times. The Roman Empire did not go further north than the Rhine and the Danube. The division between the Eastern and the Western Empires ran down the Adriatic, and across the Mediterranean to the west of Egypt. Within our own time Germany, which was divided into several kingdoms and dukedoms, has become one dominion. Italy was similarly partitioned, and it is now also one. There is but one thing needed to place five kingdoms only on the western side. If Belgium, Portugal, and Switzerland were apportioned to, or united with, any of the neighbouring powers, we should have the five kingdoms of England, France, Spain, Germany, and Italy.

The opposite process of disintegration has been similarly arranging the Eastern Empire. Were Roumania (north and south) to be united with Servia, it would make—with Austria, Greece, Turkey, and Egypt—five kingdoms on the eastern side.

[The questioner may be referred to Mr. Urquhart's book, "What are we to Believe? or, The Testimony of Fulfilled Prophecy" (Mack. 2s. 6d.), where the subject is discussed in the chapter on "A Prophetic Forecast of the World's Entire History."]

MADAGASCAR MARTYRS.—A committee, consisting of three missionaries and three educated native Christians, has been formed in Madagascar for the purpose of collecting reliable information respecting those who suffered for Christ's sake during the terrible persecutions in the reign of Ranavalona I. The design of those moving in this matter is to preserve the materials collected in book form. This is well. There are still some living who were intimately acquainted with many of the martyrs, and with others who, though not martyrs, endured hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, between 1828 and 1862. It would be a calamity were these to pass away before their testimony to the lives and sufferings of the persecuted Christians of Madagascar had been secured.—Christian Leader.

THE CONFESSIONAL.
A Personal Narrative.
By ELIZA RICHARDSON,
Author of "PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM," "THE VEIL LIFTED," &c.

Neatly printed in Red and Black. Suitable for enclosing in the ordinary square envelope, 1s. per dozen, or 7s. per hundred, post free.

"It was a dark page in my experience, when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. I cannot dwell upon this; but a brief time before it would have for ever put to rest my longings after Romanism. Though I believe my confessor was, on the whole, as guarded as his manner was kind, at some things I was strangely startled, utterly confounded."—Extract.

On April 30, she writes:—"Dear Mr. Congreve,—With the greatest of pleasure I write to tell you I am quite cured. I have left off the medicine for a month. I feel that you have been the means of saving my life. The doctor had given me up. My friends say I am a miracle. I can go in and out and stand all weathers. I can eat well and sleep well, and, thank God, I am a new person altogether. I cannot find words to express my gratitude for your kindness."

MISSIONARY MOVEMENTS.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

While Mr. Hudson Taylor is fanning the flame of missionary zeal in America, the fruits of past effort in that direction are being seen in fresh workers going from England to reinforce those in the field. As briefly noted in our last issue, a party of nine ladies sailed from London last week; their names are Misses Bangert, Bradfield, Edith Broomhall, Harding, Spark, Stewart, Voak, and Williams.

It is a most excellent plan with our friends of the Inland Mission that they seek to secure for their missionaries an apprenticeship in some branch of home work. Several of the outgoing party have worked for longer or shorter periods in connection with Rev. Peter Thompson's East-end Mission. It was very fitting, therefore. that one of the goodbye meetings should be held in the chapel, St. George's-in-the-East, which is Mr. Thompson's head-quarters. In his brief opening address, Mr. Thompson, as the mouthpiece of his congregation and his workers, spoke feelingly of the deep regard they cherished for the young friends who had so faithfully laboured among them, and who were now going to carry the same Gospel message to the women of China. His remarks had a special application to Miss Edith Broomhall, who, with her two sisters, has worked in the East-end Mission from its commencement, and has endeared herself to those among whom she has so earnestly worked for several years past.

Mr. Broomhall, secretary of the Mission, has now the happy privilege of having three of his children devoted to mission work in China —two daughters and a son. For the comfort and encouragement of the sisters about to leave (as well as three brethren, who were present, and will sail soon), he read extracts from letters received from his daughter and son in China, telling of the joy they experienced in the work and in the assurance of Christ's presence with them. The brief words of the departing sisters were, as usual, of deep interest. Miss Edith Broomhall told how, while working in the East-end, her heart had been set on China, whither she rejoiced now to be going. Miss Bangert was thankful for the experience she had gained under Mr. Thompson. At first, when the claims of China were laid before her, she was not prepared to follow the Lord's call; now she felt she could not possibly stay at home. Miss Underwood has been working in connection with the Mildmay Nursing Institution, and her experience there must prove of great service in China. Miss Voak, who has also been an East-end worker, pleaded most pathetically for others to step in and fill the vacant places made by their departure. Miss Bradfield also spoke briefly, and all were earnest in asking to be borne up in prayer by those who remain at home.

The same friends attended the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on the following day, and again asked the prayers of fellow believers. Mr. Broomhall, made a brief statement with respect to the Inland Mission. The outgoing party of nine ladies form part of about forty fresh workers who have been accepted, and all of whom it is hoped will proceed to China before the year is out. Referring to reports in the public prints about Mr. Hudson Taylor's visit to America, he said these, in some particulars, had been much exaggerated. So far as he knew, there were eight approved workers there who were ready, and who might proceed to China shortly, whose expenses would be provided for by the American friends. The London party left by P. & O. steamer on Wednesday, last week.

NORTH AFRICAN MISSION.

At the monthly meeting, last week, of Christian workers, at the Home of Industry, Miss Herdman, who has laboured in Morocco and is now on her way back to that land, gave an address. She gave a very interesting account of the manners and customs of the Moorish inhabitants of North Africa, and showed the points of resemblance and the differences between the religion of Mahomet and our Christian faith. Many of the Mohammedans believe in our Lord Jesus Christ as a man, in his miracles, his ascension, and in his coming again to remove oppression and to set the captive free, but they do not believe in his atoning death. Mention was made of Miss Caley who was Miss Herdman's companion in labour, and who has so recently been called to her heavenly home. Miss Herdman spoke of several interesting conversions; dilating on the healthiness of the climate, the easy access to the country from our own shores, and its great spiritual needs, she made an earnest appeal for more workers.

Miss Grissell, who has been connected with the Home of Industry, and Miss Harding, who, with Miss Harris, are expecting to leave shortly for North Africa, asked to be remembered in prayer by the friends present.

Mrs. Boulton spoke of her visit to North Africa, with her brother, Mr. Glenny, and that having seen the great need of more workers, she had been led to give herself to the work. She hoped to go soon, and desired to be remembered in prayer. Miss Edith Gage Brown and Miss Agnes Smith, who will be going soon to the hills of Galilee, likewise asked for prayer. Mr. Anderson and his son, Dr. Anderson, spoke of the McAll Mission in Paris, with which they are connected, and requested prayer.

At an early part of the meeting, Mr. Merry read a letter from Mr. Sutherland, of Renton, Dumbartonshire, connected with whose church some meetings are being held by Mr. George Clark, of the China Inland Mission, for which prayer was also requested.

THE KOLAR MISSION.

Mr. T. H. Maynard, writing from this Mission in Mysore, which is under the charge of Miss Anstey, says, there has been a remarkable work of revival there. He adds:—A most marked change has come over the Orphanage. Those who were formerly the most troublesome to deal with have become melted down and completely changed. The young men who are being trained as preachers are able to speak with power and boldness, and willing to go anywhere and do anything, their hearts are so filled with the love of God. All the European workers have obtained a deeper experience of the love of God. The work is still going forward; not only ourselves, but the heathen around are feeling the power, and we hear of several conversions resulting from village work.

By the time this reaches you, we hope to have established permanent branches of the work at Moolbargal, Bowringpet, Batemangalam, and Trinavasapoor. Just now we are looking for the money needed to enable us to open these, and many other towns and villages in this large and entirely unoccupied Kolar district; many of these villages have never even heard the name of Jesus.

TEMPERANCE DRINKS.—We have received from Messrs. Idris & Co., mineral water manufacturers, Ascham-street, Kentish Town, N.W., some samples of most excellent fruit cordials and other temperance drinks. We warmly commend them to all who are looking for palatable and refreshing beverages. They can be used either with hot or cold water, and the makers assure us they are absolutely free from the alcoholic taint. They can be had in large variety, and are procurable from all chemists.

Letters to the Editor.

THE NOVEL IN THE HOME.

Dear Sir,—May I express my conviction that Christian parents generally do not sufficiently interest themselves in the contents of the books their children read. They find a lad reading a book, perhaps, of which they disapprove, and instantly forbid its perusal; and that is all. Thus, in the matter of reading, parent and child are, as it were, natural enemies, and the probability is that the boy will read the book and others like it, on the sly, and thus add deceit to disobedience. Of course there are many books which the parent can see at a glance are undesirable; but, if the boy is interested in it, a mere veto does not meet the necessity of the case. My idea is that if parents would read or scan through the books their children bring home, and then join partnership with them, take them into their confidence, and show them kindly wherein the book is morally objectionable or Scripturally erroneous, the children would at once become interested in the study, and be at one with the parents in their desire only to read suitable books.

If this plan were adopted there would be no room for deceit or clandestine reading. The boy would bring home his book, and in an interested way would turn to the parent as a natural friend of his reading instead of a natural enemy. When a boy is simply told "You are not to read that book," he naturally asks, audibly or otherwise, "Why?" and is not satisfied with "Because I say you are not to."

Let a boy feel that he need never hide a book; that whatever book he has got he can be sure of their attention and sympathy and not their frown, if he consults his parents about it; and, if they treat him judiciously and as a rational being, he will learn as much valuable knowledge from them out of the book he must not read as he will by reading the book which is unobjectionable.

Yours truly, M. A. St. John.

MR. HORTON AND THE BAPTIST UNION.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to express my difference from your note on this subject last week, and my sincere regret at the action of those members of the Union who, by their protest, have deprived their brethren generally of the privilege of listening to the earnest, vivifying words, which Mr. Horton would have been certain to address to them? Whether in regard to the revival of spiritual life in our churches, the quickening of purpose in our young ministers, or the brotherly intercourse between the two Congregational bodies, the mistake is deplorable. Instead of being "a distinct gain for the evangelical party in the Union" it is a heavy loss both to that party and to all who care more for earnest, spiritual, soul-saving preaching than for any party or any name.

Whatever may be our opinion of Mr. Horton's book, to which you have referred, no one, so far as I am aware, has ever suggested that his preaching is otherwise than evangelical in the highest sense of the word, while its results are the best testimony to its deeply spiritual character, and to the Divine approval which rests upon it. The enclosed little tractate from his pen ("Why I am a Christian"), recently published by the R.T.S., may satisfy the most exacting lover of orthodoxy; while those who heard his stirring little speech at the London Missionary Society's meeting in May will not need to be reassured as to the influence he exerts over his hearers. If those good brethren who, in their excess of zeal for the letter of Inspiration, have missed so valuable an illustration of its spirit, will but rectify their mistake by hearing the object of their suspicion for themselves, they will, I feel confident, be among the first to exclaim and to pray, with myself, "O si sic omnes!"

Yours faithfully, Vindex.

[Our correspondent entirely misses the ground of the objection of which he speaks. Personally, Mr. Horton is, we willingly concede, as estimable as he is asserted to be. But he has just propounded a theory of Inspiration which is, to say the least, quite opposed to ordinary evangelical belief. The choice of him by the Baptist Union could not fail to be regarded as an endorsement of his views on Inspiration and was to the last degree careless and impolitic, if it were not intended as a manifesto of their intention to assume that position. It is said that the invitation was given before the publication of the book; but, even if this were so, its issue necessitated the withdrawal of the invitation, unless the Union meant to nail its colours to his mast.—Ed.]

Personalia.

Mrs. Booth is preparing a volume of "Reminiscences" in connection with the Salvation Army.

The Maharajah of Mysore recently paid a visit to Miss Anstey's Orphanage at Kolar, Mysore, and after congratulating the lady missionaries on the success of the institution, presented a donation of two hundred rupees to its funds.

The Prime Minister of the Sandwich Islands is a decided Christian. When he visited Berlin in connection with a commercial treaty, it was his practice to attend Bible-readings on Sunday nights, and he found it easy to decline diplomatic invitations on the Lord's Day.

Rev. A. Styleman Herring, after nearly thirty years' work exclusively among the London poor, is advised to go a short sea-voyage. He will not return to London till the middle of October. At Christmas he will celebrate his "Silver wedding" and thirty years' work in London.

Rev. M. Mackenzie, of the Free North Church, Inverness, is described by a correspondent of The Christian Leader as "earnest and enthusiastic without being fanatical; he can preach the most dogmatic Calvinism without offending the honest doubter, or appearing vulgar to the most intellectual in his audience."

Mr. James Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness, sails on Wednesday next, for another winter's work among the freedmen of the South. Last winter Mr. Wharton had many open doors in some of the most prominent institutions and colleges throughout the States, when some five hundred of the promising young coloured people from all parts of the States professed to find Christ.

Mrs. Joseph Cook, wife of the distinguished lecturer, and herself a lady of remarkable accomplishments, owing to a protracted illness, has been removed from her accustomed place as the centre of a group of philanthropists and Christian workers. The latest news, however, is most favourable, and there is every reason to expect that by next winter Mrs. Cook will be once more in the effective list.

Mr. William J. Slowan, the Western Secretary of the National Bible Society of Scotland, has been commissioned to visit the Society's stations in China and Japan. Mr. Slowan sailed last week for New York, and expects to be occupied with his mission for some months. Rev. Dr. William Boyd, a member of the Board, has agreed to act as honorary secretary in Glasgow during Mr. Slowan's absence.

Ramchundra Baraji Keshar, a faithful servant of Christ, recently finished his course with joy at Poona. He became a Christian over twenty years ago, along with a younger brother, and as he belonged to the Brahmin caste his confession was made under an opposition which amounted to a riot. He joined the Free Church Mission at Poona in 1883 as an evangelist, and, full of loyalty to Christ, he exercised a very useful ministry.

Rev. George Gurney M. Nicol, B.A., a graduate of Cambridge, native pastor of the Church Missionary Society at Sherbro, Sierra Leone, West Africa, has lately passed away. He was a son of Rev. George C. Nicol, late Government chaplain at Bathurst, Gambia, and a grandson of Bishop Crowther, of the Niger. He was much beloved by the people amongst whom he laboured, and his loss is deeply felt by them; there has been universal lamentation and mourning in the district, in consequence of his death.

The Hon. Emma Sugden, a daughter of Lord St. Leonards, has gone to Scotland for the purpose of starting a "Rescue Home" in connection with the Salvation Army. In an address at Aberdeen she said they wished to put their hands out in these northern cities, and save souls. They also wished to begin "slum work," hiring for this purpose a house in the lowest localities of the large cities, for the purpose of living amongst the people, nursing the sick, or doing anything whereby they might save the people.

The late Charles Reade (whose fragmentary work on "Bible Characters" is published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus) says, in the introductory chapter, that "the characters of Scripture are a marvel of the mind. Written in the East, these characters live for ever in the West; written in one province, they pervade the world; formed in rude times, they are prized more and more as civilisation advances; product of antiquity, they come home to the business and bosoms of men, women, and children in modern days."

Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity Church, New York, is in danger of losing his eyesight. He is obliged to remain in a dark room constantly.

Mr. J. Shrimpton, of the Homes for Working Girls in London, is busily engaged in the preparation of two additional Homes, both of which, it is expected, will be opened this year.

General Harrison, the Republican candidate for the American Presidency, is described by a correspondent of The New York Evangelist as an active and consistent Christian. A whole Bible-class of young men have been converted through his instrumentality.

Professors Macalister and Adams are much interested in the Presbyterian services held at Cambridge. A site for a Presbyterian Church has been obtained near to the grounds of Downing College. A sum of £4000 has already been provided toward the estimated outlay of £7000.

Mrs. A. E. Robertson's excellent Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures finds a place among the "Short Arrows" of the October Quiver: "It aims at supplying every race and every soul with a copy of God's Word. From all sides testimonies flow in as to the joy of those who are partakers of the gift."

Bishop Billing, late rector of Spitalfields, is the subject of the special sketch in the October number of The Quiver. He is truly described as "a hard-working and practical man." He thinks that "the great difficulty in the East-end is not to get preachers and speakers, but workers who will go, not as spies or patrons, but to seek to do good."

Mrs. Bayly, author of the well-known book, "Ragged Homes, and How to Mend Them," has just made another contribution to the highest solution of domestic distress. In a telling manner, in "John out of Work," she presses home to those who are without human helpers the privilege of confiding in God, and waiting upon Him for relief in his own time.

Dr. Thain Davidson has issued, through Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, another volume of his admirable sermons to young men, under the title of "Sure to Succeed." In the preface he says, "Nothing in my ministry has yielded me more encouragement than the testimony which has come to me from hundreds of young men, that they have been stimulated by these plain-spoken addresses, to resist the temptations of city life."

Dr. Parker's latest volume (No. ix.) of "The People's Bible" embraces 1 Chron. x. to 2 Chron. xx., and deals with the lives of David and Solomon. Expounding the incident of David dancing before the Lord, while his wife mocked, the preacher says: "There are men who are carried away with the spirit of religious enthusiasm until they can scarcely speak the common language of the world; they seem to live in heaven, to walk on the mountain-tops of a loftier world; they are mocked in all this by the cold-hearted, the narrow-minded, the worldly-spirited; they are not understood, but misunderstood; their enthusiasm is regarded as violence, and their worship is sneered at as a superstition."

Mr. F. S. Arnot, of Glasgow, who has spent some seven years in pioneer evangelistic work in Central Africa, is now on a short visit to this country. His journey from the centre of operations to the coast occupied about seven months. The principal object of his visit is to make arrangements for the development of the mission he has, by God's help, been enabled to found in the interior of the country. He hopes to establish more regular communication with the coast for the portage of the needed supplies. Our young friend seems to be in good health, notwithstanding the many vicissitudes through which he has passed, and intends returning as soon as possible to the scene of his chosen life work.

Pastor Theodore Monod's recent address to the members of the Open-air Mission is published by the Mission in pamphlet form. The good pastor's vein of serious humour is well illustrated by this brief paragraph: "I happened to fall in with an old report of yours, and there I found a picture of Jonah, as a specimen of the open-air preacher, and he certainly is an especially good specimen. Jonah had at first strong objections to open-air preaching in Nineveh. God, therefore, put him aside, and kept him far enough from the open-air for a season. When Jonah had gone through his experience in what Mr. Moody calls a strange school of theology, he was only too glad to see the open-air again, and to set about delivering his message."

Rev. John T. Vine, evangelist, has been spending his vacation in the Catskill Mountains, and has commenced his fall and winter special services in the First Baptist Church at Gouverneur, N.Y. There are indications of a good work.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, during his summer vacation, has spoken in many parts of the States, and shaken hands, he says, with about a hundred thousand people. He closed his tour by visiting the wilderness in upper New York State, and spending some time among the hunters.

Mr. J. C. Lanphier, founder of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting, New York, is in his eightieth year. He spoke at a recent noon service of God's mercy in preserving his life and in using him as an instrument for the good of others. All present united in prayer to God for the Divine blessing on his faithful servant.

Rev. H. Price Hughes preaches at St. James's Hall Sunday morning and evening. The afternoon Conference is suspended, but Mr. Hughes takes the Bible-class in the Large Hall of the Polytechnic, in Regent-street. The gathering is for men only, but is not limited to members of the Polytechnic. Anyone is welcome.

Mr. James Showell, of Kendal, erected his Gospel tent in a field at Bouth, near Ulverston, and conducted services each evening, and on Sunday afternoons, from Sept. 2 to 17. Mr. and Mrs. Showell devoted considerable time to visiting, and much good has resulted from their labour of love. A Bible-class has been commenced, to build up the young converts.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith concluded last Lord's day a most successful eight days' mission in Bromley, Kent. A spirit of cordial co-operation was manifested by representatives of the various churches and missions of the neighbourhood, and a large number of inquirers were dwelt with by a zealous band of workers. The memory of the labours of these devoted evangelists will be warmly cherished for many days to come.

Major Whittle will, in all probability, have reached this country by the time these lines are read. He was to sail from New York for Liverpool on the 19th inst. He hopes to commence Gospel work in Belfast at the beginning of October, and will evangelise in Ireland and Scotland during the winter. Mr. McGranahan, unfortunately, is unable to accompany him. His address for the present will be, care of Y.M.C.A., Belfast.

The Vicar of Leamington has urged his congregation to support men of spotless character at the municipal elections in November. "At the bottom of the crime and anguish of our great populations you invariably find the liquor-shop and the house of infamy. Those who are personally interested in either of those sources of moral corruption are utterly unfit to make and administer public law." Thus comments The Methodist Times.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., says The Methodist Record, will find Bombay ripe for a forward movement on the temperance question when he arrives here in the cold season to put the "Anglo-Indian Temperance Association" on a sound footing. The intention of the Home Association to appoint a gentleman as a permanent secretary is the only way to give adequate attention to the enormous work to be done, and make any impression. Temperance workers in India may rejoice, and take courage.

Dr. Maclaren sailed from London on Friday, and goes straight to Melbourne. He has some five or six weeks of work to do there, in visiting the churches mainly. He returns home by way of India, calling also at Ceylon. We believe, says The Baptist, that Dr. Maclaren has undertaken to deliver some lectures upon one of the college "foundations" in the United States. It should be understood, however, that this appointment applies to next year, and will not affect Dr. Maclaren's visit to the Antipodes.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald has been writing to The Birmingham Daily Post to express a "widespread feeling of regret at the exclusion of the Lord's Prayer from Board Schools." The Methodist Times says its sympathies are entirely with Mr. Macdonald. If the opponents of clerical education take up the extreme position of the old Birmingham League, and advocate purely secular education in the Board Schools, Canon Gregory, Cardinal Manning and Dr. Rigg will defeat them hip and thigh. The masses of the English people will not tolerate the exclusion of religion for a single day. Secular education is a practical impossibility in England.

Dr. A. T. Pierson will give his last missionary address in this country for the present at Hope Hall, Liverpool, this (Friday) evening. We hope to give some notes of it in our next issue.

The Late Mr. Samuel Morley.—The statue of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, executed for the town of Nottingham by Mr. Havard Thomas, of King's-road, London, is now completed. It represents Mr. Morley as addressing an audience, and is considered to be an excellent likeness. An admirable site in the centre of the town has been selected for the statue. The ceremony of unveiling will probably take place in the second week of October, when the Congregational Union will be holding its annual sittings in the town.

Rev. G. D. Sparks, on Sunday week, was assisted in the services of the parish church of Undy, near Newport, Mon., by his four sons, Rev. J. W. Sparks, rector of Holy Trinity, Wrentham, Mass., U.S.; Rev. F. Sparks, curate at Catford, and mathematical tutor at Manor House, Lee; Rev. F. M. Sparks, vicar of Ulting; and Rev. E. J. Sparks, curate of St. John's, Chester. One of the windows in the church is erected to the memory of the vicar's fifth son, Rev. C. P. Sparks, who died at Sierra Leone of yellow fever, after being colonial chaplain there the short time of nine months.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.*

A Missionary Biography.

Mr. Lewis Munro, the editor of The Rosshire Journal, in his book, Only for Jesus, has compiled a deeply interesting memoir of Mr. William Macgregor, one of the most promising of the many young men who have been enrolled in the ranks of the China Inland Mission. The volume has a special interest for young men of our time, as showing how sceptical doubts may be removed, and the powers of body and mind consecrated to the noblest of ends. Such a record of personal zeal and missionary devotion ought to be widely read and studied. (Partridge & Co.)

Bunyan Literature.

The Bicentenary of the "glorious dreamer" has given a fillip to the republication of the literature connected with him. A fine edition of The Pilgrim's Progress is issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co. (5s.), with vigorously conceived illustrations by F. Barnard and others, and an excellent introduction by Rev. Dr. Landels: altogether a sumptuous gift-book for Sabbath Schools. The Baptist Tract and Book Society publish an excellent little Life of John Bunyan, by Rev. Charles Williams, which will help to familiarise our young people with the career and writings of the Bedford tinker.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A 1 (62, Ludgate-hill, E.C.) is giving weekly chapters on "The Story of Jonah," by Rev. F. B. Meyer; and a useful series of papers on "The Laws of Health."

The Angel of the School. By Benjamin Clarke. Sunday School Union. A charming little story, not too long or too impossible. Written to interest Christians and philanthropists in the homeless lads of the Metropolis, and the excellent "Home for Little Boys" at Farningham. Who is the angel, we leave the author to tell for himself.

A Bright Life. 1s. Nisbet. Dedicated to the young, and supplied with an introduction by Rev. Dr. Robertson, of Irvine, this book has reached a third edition. It is a mourning mother's sketch of the life of her young daughter, now deceased. We trust it will find many more readers who will be spiritually helped and encouraged by contemplating so sweet a picture of Christian consecration.

Cheque Book of the Bank of Faith. By C. H. Spurgeon. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. On the title-page the contents of this volume are defined as "precious promises arranged for daily use, with brief experimental comments." We cordially welcome the book, and are glad to find high anticipations fully realised, both in the selections from Scripture and their exposition. It is to be hoped that the book will prove a blessing to many. Certainly it is calculated to greatly assist and comfort all who desire to live in an increasing consciousness of God's faithfulness to all his gracious undertakings.

The Betrayal and the Dream: A Poem, in Five Cantos. By W. Marshall. 3s. J. Kensit. A metrical account of the crafts and assaults of Ritualism on the Protestantism of the English Church. The two prefaces are admirable, and the notes interesting. For the verses themselves we cannot say much. They are intentionally rugged, but we wonder why one who can write such vigorous prose resorts to verse at all.

Memorials of a Beloved Child. By the Mother. 1s. 6d. Holness. This beautiful memoir of Edith B. Cheales, daughter of the vicar of Brockham, Surrey, now appears in a revised form, accompanied by a portrait and illustrations. The book is very tastefully got up, and contains a number of thoughts in verse, and other compositions, from the pen of the much-loved and deeply lamented subject of the memoir.

What Saith the Master? Messrs. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, of Edinburgh, have just brought out a daily text-book with this title. The plan is unique, for the passages are all in the words of our Lord, selected with excellent judgment by Mrs. Cochrane, of Langton, near Spilsby, Lincolnshire, who, in a brief preface, well says that those utterances are in no case "hard to be understood," but so simple that a child may take them in.

A Popular Commentary on the New Testament. By D. D. Whedon, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. This American work is now coming out in fortnightly parts at 6d. Judging from the first part, it is fairly sound in doctrine, although unnecessarily diffuse in style. On the important passage (Matt. iii. 11, 12), Dr. Whedon's remarks are sadly wanting in cogency and force. He seems hardly to understand the views of those with whom he disagrees.

True Philosophy. By S. F. A. Caulfeild. Hatchards. Although professedly a reply to certain statements in a recent work by Mr. Laurence Oliphant, this book is actually a presentation of arguments against some of the common contentions of rationalists and infidels. In this department of religious literature, weak works are far too numerous. We regret to say that, though intending well, this author has failed of successful performance. In selecting "authorities" a poor judgment has been shown, whilst the pages are sadly marred by errors of many kinds.

The Two Evolutions. By F. H. Laing, D.D. Stock. Starting with a definition of evolution, as implying "growing," or "growth," the author of this little book properly points out that this is a real thing, belonging to all animated nature. He then shows that, on the other hand, the so-called evolution, which has for a long time maintained an attractive popularity, is not a real thing, as it "does not present to the mind anything it has ever conceived as being 'growth,' but a nondescript something in which the idea of growth, or evolution, is a stranger." The author examines and criticises, in some detail, Darwin's theories as to the origin of species and the descent of man.

Prof. F. H. Williams' striking volume of purity poems, "Women must Weep" (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.), has reached a second edition.

Miss Skinner's thirty-second Friendly Letter is addressed to Law Writers. It is published by Lindsey & Co., 19, Cursitor-street, E.C.

Fearlessness in Danger, and Success in Effort is the title of a pamphlet in which Rev. R. W. Odell gives some very acceptable thoughts on the miracle of Christ walking on the sea. (3d. Nisbet.)

Unconditional Surrender is the title of a booklet in which Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost relates the remarkable struggles of a strong-minded man who had long delayed his decision for Christ. (2d. Morgan & Scott.)

John, Out of Work. Shaw & Co. In this excellent tract, Mrs. Bayly points some important lessons in a very practical way. Chief among them is the duty of primarily seeking the kingdom of God, in firm assurance that blessings will be superadded.

Manna Every Morning is the title of a threepenny manual, in which portions of Scripture and stanzas of choice hymns are arranged for reading morning by morning throughout the month. Copies may be had from A. P., 2, Walcot-parade, Bath.

On the North Sea is the title of a Service of Song founded upon the facts related in the story, "Nor'ard of the Dogger," by Mr. E. J. Mather, founder of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. It may be had in Tonic Sol-fa as well as the old notation. (4d. Curwen.)

The A. B. C. Omnibus Guide (1d. Vickers) is a handy little manual giving a description of the various omnibus routes throughout London, the vehicles, and the points of interest on each route. Its value would have been greatly enhanced if the fares had been appended.

Proofs of Holy Writ. By J. N. Fennings. 6d. A. H. Barker, 22, Queen's-road, Hastings. This is a commendable endeavour to render easily accessible to ordinary readers some of the results of modern archæological research, as it corroborates the truth of historical records contained in the Bible.

Angels' Whispers (Raphael Tuck & Sons) gives a text for every day in the month, with pretty verses to correspond, and tastefully coloured illustrations.

The Anti-Infidel. Edited by W. R. Bradlaugh, Snow & Co. The third yearly volume of this penny monthly magazine contains a very large and varied collection of articles exposing error and defending truth. It also gives welcome information as to efforts to evangelise those who are generally denominated atheists and secularists.

The Royal Commission on Elementary Education. 1s. Bagster. Mr. B. Whishaw has brought together the opinions of the witnesses on some of the most important questions coming within the scope of the inquiry. Some notes and tables add to the value of this pamphlet, which will be highly appreciated by elementary teachers in general.

The Reredos Unveiled. By Lieut.-General Sir Robert Phayre. This is a vigorous protest against Romanising activity in the Church of England, with special reference to the recently unveiled reredos in St. Paul's Cathedral. Copies may be obtained gratis for circulation, on the cost of postage being sent to Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray & Co., 79, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

Under the title "Samaritans at Sandgate," The Philanthropist of this month has an excellent illustrated sketch of the convalescent homes in Sandgate of the London Samaritan Society. It also contains a stirring article on the Central African slave trade, and follows the recent statement of Cardinal Lavigerie in declaring that it is largely on the increase, and entailing an enormous waste of human life annually.

The Word "Mercy." By An Evangelist. Nisbet. The time and labour expended upon this endeavour—doubtless well-meant, but certainly unsuccessful—to show that the word "mercy" is generally wrongly used in the Scriptures and Christian literature, might have been devoted to a better purpose. The pamphlet owes its origin to misapprehension, and the bulk of the information it contains is very ill-digested.

Musings in Green Pastures. By Edward Carr. 1s. 3d. Gadsby, 17, Bouverie-street. The minister of Ebenezer Chapel, Leicester, has collected in this volume a number of meditations on subjects connected with Christian experience. Some of the "musings" are short sermons. They are now re-published, having previously appeared in various magazines, in compliance with the wishes of some friends of the author.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton issue some very attractive little books of the chromo species. "In the Olden Time" (s. 6d.) contains graphic sketches of the way Christmas was spent in Scotland in the by-gone days. "The Voice of Nature" (1s.) speaks for itself. "He Leadeth Me" (1s.) is a prettily illustrated presentation of Psalm xxiii. "Twilight Memories" contains verses by various writers on the thoughts born of the twilight hour, with suitable illustrations.

THE COMMISSION OF JOSHUA.

JOSHUA i. 1—9; GOLDEN TEXT, EPH. vi. 14.

EXPLANATORY.—JOSHUA.—His name at first was Oshea, or Hosea, "help," "salvation"; but Moses afterwards changed it to Jehoshua (Joshua) "the help, or salvation, of Jehovah." The name Joshua was in later years changed by Greek-speaking people into Jesus. Thus it came to pass that he who led God's ancient people into the Land of Promise, and He who alone can lead men into the spiritual Canaan, had the same name. Both were called "Jehovah's help, or salvation." Teachers of advanced classes may profitably study Joshua as a type of Christ. An excellent chapter on this will be found in the Cambridge Bible for Schools: Joshua; Introduction. Josephus says that Joshua was now in his eighty-fifth year. He was certainly about eighty years old, and probably older. THIS JORDAN.—The Descender, so called from the rush of its flow. It falls 3000 feet in its short course. See Geikie, Cambridge Bible, Pulpit Com., and Land and the Book. THIS LEBANON.—The white mountain. Though very distant, it could be seen from the plains of Jordan, as from most other parts of Palestine. Hence the term "this Jordan." THE WILDERNESS, i.e., the Arabian Desert.—The southern boundary. LEBANON.—The northern. THE EUPHRATES.—The eastern. THE GREAT SEA.—The Mediterranean, the western. COASTS.—Not necessarily sea-coasts, but the old English for any boundary.

THE CALL OF JOSHUA.—"The Lord spake unto Joshua," &c. It was a personal call to a particular work. Even young children can be made to understand the point of this, that God has a particular place for each of his servants; that we are no more free to choose our work without prayer and reference to his will than a man who joins the army is free to choose his work or station. The Lord reigns, has a place for each, and will show each his place, if we are humble and teachable. There is no place in which we can be so useful and happy as the place God chooses for us, and we can never be so strong and happy there as when we know that God placed us there. What a strength to Joshua, through all the future, to know that God had appointed him as leader!

THE WORK TO WHICH HE IS CALLED.—"Arise, go over this Jordon," &c. (ver. 2). In itself the work was impossible.—To cross the Jordan, without bridge or boat, in the face of the foe, and with 2,000,000 of people, was almost, or quite, impossible. Yet this was but the first step. The land to be possessed was filled with men of might and stature, defended by numberless strongholds and engines of war. The people to be dispossessed had horses and chariots, and were skilled as workers in brass and iron and steel. Joshua had seen their power and skill. He also knew, better perhaps than any other, the weakness of the Israelites. Apart from God's miraculous help, the enterprise was hopeless and impossible.

God calls everyone of us to work just as hopeless and impossible—the work of a Christlike life.—The possessing of Canaan by Israel symbolised, not entrance into heaven, for there is no warring there, but entrance into the beautiful life of victory over self and sin in every form. This is "the good land" given to us in Christ Jesus, the life full of the spirit of Jesus, of love, and trust, humility, self-denial, joyful obedience, and continual victory over evil temper, meanness, envy, pride, selfishness, and disobedience. Show children that a life of moral and spiritual victory—the conquest of self by the help of God, and from love to Him—is the noblest and loveliest object of ambition; and that God calls us to this, just as he called Israel to possess Canaan. Also, that the one task is as impossible without God as the other was.

GOD GIVES; BUT WE MUST TAKE.—The whole land was given; yet only so much as they marched in upon and possessed became theirs actually. "Every place that the sole of your feet shall tread upon," &c.—They never possessed the land as fully as God intended they should; that has yet to be done, in the wonderful providence of God. His gifts were always larger than their taking—their faith.

How much has God now given to us that we have never taken?—Pardon of sin, a new heart, his friendship, his comforting help in all trouble, his guidance, and power to overcome all that we see to be wrong. God wants us to enjoy all these. How much have we taken? How much shall we take?

JOSHUA'S GREAT ENCOURAGEMENT.—This was threefold: (1) God called him and his people to enter the land: this was much; (2) God pledged Himself to give them the land: this was more; (3) God said: "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" (ver. 5). This was most of all. Notice how this is repeated in ver. 9, as though the assurance of God's presence were everything. And it is everything—everything to children to begin life with God by repentance, submission, and trust, and so to have God with them everywhere, and always.

THE CONDITIONS OF VICTORY.—How shall a boy live this pure and overcoming life? He must first believe it possible that God calls him to it, and has promised to help him (has given him the good land). He must receive Jesus into his heart by simple trust, and thus have God with him, God in him. This is the beginning: how does he go on? Our lesson tells us of two things necessary. (1) He must be brave to do, dare, and endure for God, and for conscience. "Only be thou strong and very courageous." He must believe heartily that God can overcome in him and through him, and he must act upon this faith by resisting boldly all evil within him. When it is a question of doing right, he must never say "I can't." "God helping me, I can, and I will," must be his motto.

(2) But this is only half; we must also honour and use the Word of God. "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night," &c. (ver. 8). Thus we have (ver. 7) holiness by faith; and (ver. 8) holiness by the Word of God. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith," is linked with "Sanctify them through thy truth." The two make one whole; each is essential; they must go hand in hand.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) How a boy was "strong and very courageous," even in sickness and death.—The late Dr. Norman Macleod once visited a boy, eleven years old, who had suffered for three long years what was excruciating pain, and who, during most of that time, had never enjoyed so much as a single day's freedom from pain. Yet there was no complaint; he was full of simple, loving trust in God, and patient submission to his will. "I gazed," said Dr. Macleod, "with wonder at the boy. After drawing near to him, and speaking words of sympathy, he looked at me with his blue eyes—he could not move, it was the night before he died—and breathed into my ear these words: 'I am strong in Him.'" The angels would say that such a sight was sublimely marvellous. The dying child, so young and feeble, and yet so mighty to endure!

(2) Rare Courage.—When John Knox was buried, the Earl of Morton, the Regent, exclaimed: "There lies he who never feared the face of man!"

(3) True Courage.—"The following prayer was found in a schoolboy's desk after his death: 'O God, give me courage to fear none but Thee.'"

SHELTER FOR DOCK LABOURERS.—A correspondent writes the daily papers calling attention to the cause of the labourers in the East-end docks, who are known as a hard-working class of men, with small earnings, compelling them to live in low and dirty lodgings, amidst disgusting surroundings. Their sufferings during the winter are deplorable. From early morning until past midday these poor creatures are to be seen standing in the roads and corners, amidst wind, rain, and snow, with clothes in tatters that are past repair, without food—patiently awaiting employment outside the dock gates, and when some of their number are needed, to see them rush, thrushing aside the older and weaker ones, is a sickening sight to behold. My object (says the writer) in drawing public attention is that these wretched beings shall, before the winter sets in again, have some shelter provided for them, either inside the dock gates or near by, in order that they may have protection from the inclement weather, and where a cup of tea or coffee with bread, or soup can be provided at the cost of one penny; and that they might have their names or numbers called, when the managers of the dock company have work for them, and prevent that unseemly rush for work, in which, doubtless, those who deserve it most have not the necessary strength for the struggle.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, October 7.

THE ASCENSION.

Ps. lxviii. 9—19; Eph. iv. 7—12.

THOSE verses in our lesson which speaks definitely of the ascension of our Lord, are evidently intended to describe the progress of a conqueror. We have in our lesson—

(1) TOKENS OF VICTORY (Eph. iv. 8; Ps. lxviii. 18).—The captives here, says Rev. H. C. G. Moule, are "Whatever persons or powers are in any way his conquests, whether as enemies under his feet or self-surrendered rebels, reconciled to his will." When He ascended Jesus appeared as the conqueror of sin (Heb. i. 3), Satan (Heb. ii. 14) and death (Acts ii. 24). We may see in these conquered foes the "kings of armies" of Ps. lxviii. (vv. 12, 14). Sin is the king of a great army ("sin reigned," Rom. v. 21)—so also is Satan ("the prince," Eph. ii. 2), and so also is death ("death reigned," Rom. v. 14). Omit the words in italics in Ps. lxviii. 14, and read "As snow in Salmon." When the sun shines then the snow melts quickly, and so vanished the powers of evil before the march of our great Conqueror.

(2) MARKS OF FAVOUR.—Observe gifts received (Ps. lxviii. 18) and bestowed (Eph. iv. 8). Note here: (a) Grace (ver. 7).—Grace here is unmerited favour. A poor man in Fife asked a blessing in these words: "Lord, give me grace to feel my need of grace, and give me grace to ask for grace, and give me grace to receive grace; and oh, Lord! when grace is given, give me grace to use it." (b) Diversity.—"Measure" (Eph. iv. 7, 11; comp. xii. 6). There is nothing indiscriminate in the dispensation of grace. (c) Bounty.—"Plentiful rain" (Ps. lxviii. 9). Comp. "filled" (Acts ii. 4). Comp. Eph. ii. 7, and Cor. ix. 8. (d) Refreshing "rain" (Ps. lxviii. 9). See contrast in disciples before and after the resurrection. (e) Regard for the lowly (Ps. lxviii. 10). Comp. case of Mary (Luke i. 48). (f) The preaching gift (Ps. lxviii. 11). See what is said of the preachers and the power they had in Acts ii. Note that there were gifts for the rebellious (Ps. lxviii. 18). For these there is the gift of repentance (Acts v. 31; xi. 18) and "eternal life" (Rom. vi. 23).

(3) NOTES OF PRAISE (Ps. lxviii. 19).—Jesus gives blessing—the recipient gives thanks. Thanksgiving glorifies God (Ps. lxix. 30)—seasons prayer (Phil. iv. 67)—and brings blessing to the unsaved (Acts ii. 47).

DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION (26 and 32, Chamber-street, London Docks, E.)—During the past summer we have been enabled to distribute 7300 books and tracts amongst the unemployed dock labourers at all the docks and wharves in London. Many conversations have been held with them; not a few have given up the drink, and turned to God. These men are spread over a large area, and give our two missionaries five miles' walk each day to reach them. At the Surrey Commercial and Millwall Docks the men earn the greatest wages, and, sad to say, there is more drunkenness among the men at these two docks than there is at all the other docks put together. Our night-shelter will be reopened in November. Will readers remember these poor men in prayer?

C. H. COLEMAN.

A HOME IN WILNA.—Madame Kupffer writes:—About two years since the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews sent a missionary to the Jews in Wilna, and a Bible depôt has been opened for the distribution of the Holy Scriptures. Many apply to Pastor Friedman, who tries to meet their difficulties, and to bring them to the feet of Jesus. But as soon as they commence visiting the missionary, they are deprived of their livelihood! The missionary is unable to assist and support all the young inquirers who apply to him. We can scarcely expect to see any fruit of our labours without having here a Home for Inquirers. For this we are dependent upon the love and interest of our fellow-Christians in England." Rev. John Dunlop, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, London, W.C., Secretary of the Society, endorses the appeal.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

An important meeting to bid farewell to a large number of missionaries leaving for different parts of the foreign field, under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society, is to be held in St. James's Hall, on Wednesday next, at 2 p.m.

Rev. S. T. Bachert, missionary of the London Jews' Society in Hamburg, reports the baptism of two Jewish converts. One of these is the third of seven brothers who have publicly confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Messiah. They have been subjected to much persecution at the hands of their relatives and friends, but stand firm.

A special number of the Church Army Gazette has been issued, containing details of the work carried on through this agency, which, as the Bishop of Durham says, "has dragged numbers of men and women out of the gutter, has expelled the demon of drink or some other gross vice, and has seated them clothed and in their right mind at the feet of Christ."

Through the generosity of a member of Parliament the Church Purity Society are sending to every clergyman in the United Kingdom, and to about 6000 laymen of influence, a report of the committee on Purity adopted by the Lambeth Conference. In this report, the committee call upon all, whether of their own communion or not, to rally round the standard of high morality.

BAPTIST.

A bequest of £1000 has been left to the Pastors' College in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, by the widow of the late James Sheridan Knowles. The same lady has also bequeathed £1000 to the Stockwell Orphanage, and £1000 to the Midnight Meeting movement.

Rev. Walter J. Mayers bade farewell to the congregation of City-road Chapel, Bristol, on Sunday week, when he conducted four services. There is at present a membership of 410. Mr. Mayers commences his work as one of the deputation-secretaries of Dr. Barnardo's Homes on Monday.

A plan has been arranged for the visitation of a number of country churches by well-known ministers of the denomination on Tuesday and Wednesday next. Upwards of thirty ministers will be thus engaged on these two days. It is hoped that this visitation will give a great impetus to the work in the villages.

A successful fourteen days' mission has been brought to a close, in connection with the work being carried on in the village of Dunsfold, Surrey, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Barrow. A tent was pitched on the common, and large numbers gathered every evening to listen to the earnest addresses delivered.

A new chapel and school-room are in course of erection in the village of Thurleigh, Beds., where Rev. G. Chandler has carried on mission work for the last twenty-two years with much encouragement. The total cost is estimated at £800, towards which the attendants, who are chiefly of the labouring class, have liberally contributed according to their means.

METHODIST.

A new steamboat for the Primitive Methodist Mission at Fernando Po, West Africa, has been launched.

Young People's Methodist Alliances are being formed in America. By means of the Alliance young people are trained in Christian work.

Mr. J. Hooper has finished a series of very successful mission services at Newhall, near Burton-on-Trent. A number of persons professed conversion.

The subject of Methodist Union still commands interest. Several leading ministers of the Methodist New Connexion and the United Methodist Free Churches have recently exchanged pulpits.

A Bible-class at Weston-hill Wesleyan Chapel, Upper Norwood, is the means of much blessing. The class has now been carried on for over six years, and from it have gone forth a missionary, three local preachers, and seven Sunday-school teachers.

Methodists in Scotland, writes the northern correspondent of The Methodist Times, seem to have made up their minds that this year shall be marked by a distinct advance. A Mission in the west-end of Edinburgh promises to become a marked success.

In a special circular issued, the Missionary Committee of the Methodist New Connexion has earnestly requested the attention of circuit meetings and Juvenile Missionary societies to a pressing necessity to increase the income of the General Missionary Society, in order that its future work may be vigorously prosecuted, and that the fatal necessity of curtailing its operations may be averted.

The foundation-stones of the Wesley Memorial Chapel, at Epworth, the birthplace of John and Charles Wesley, were laid on Thursday, last week, with considerable ceremony. The President of the Conference, Rev. Joseph Bush, and many leading Wesleyan ministers, took part in the proceedings, and members of the body attended from all parts of the country. The cost for the entire scheme will amount to several thousand pounds.

There have lately been times of refreshing and revival at several of the Wesleyan mission stations in India, especially amongst the soldiers, as a result of special services which have been held by Rev. J. H. Bateson, of Burmah. At Benares, the sacred city on the Ganges, meetings were commenced among the men of the Norfolk Regiment by three Christian soldiers, and continued by Mr. Bateson. A number found the Saviour, and are bearing living testimony for Him amongst their comrades. Mr. Bateson opened a month's mission in Bombay on Sunday, Sept. 2.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. John Bain resumes his ministry at Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, E., on Sunday next.

Miss Savile, of Bristol, has held a series of special evangelistic services in Bridge-end Chapel, Brighouse. There have been several conversions.

Rev. W. Day has concluded his ministry at Farnham, Surrey, and sailed last week for Sydney, New South Wales, where he goes to undertake evangelistic work under the auspices of the Colonial Missionary Society.

Rev. L. Crookall, pastor of Egerton Church, near Bolton, has accepted the pastorate of the Mission Chapel at New Amsterdam, Berbice, British Guiana. This church, the most influential in the colony, has a regular congregation of over 1000 with a membership roll of 500.

SALVATION ARMY.

Three new Anglo-Dutch and two Kaffir stations have been recently opened.

Official permission has now been given for the Army to hold public evening meetings in Stuttgart and other parts of Germany.

During a holiday in Scotland a Salvation officer and soldier were instrumental in the leading of thirteen souls to decision for Christ.

Norway and Sweden continue to furnish a large number of hopeful candidates to be trained as officers for service in any part of the world. The first Zulu candidate is also in training.

The fifth anniversary of the Australian Rescue and Prison Brigade was recently held in Collins-street Church, Melbourne (Dr. Llewellyn Bevan's), which is the largest in the city. £600 was raised at the meeting, in addition to £1400 a few weeks previously.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. T. Bankhead, of North Shields, has declined the call to Highgate.

Rev. A. N. Mackray, whose eyesight has improved during his rest at Wiesbaden, resumes his ministry at Croydon next month.

A ten days' mission on a large scale is to be held in Newcastle-on-Tyne and district, commencing on Monday next. About a dozen invited ministers will take part. Meetings are to be held in eleven Presbyterian churches, in the Town Halls of Newcastle and Gateshead, and in the open air and large works round about.

The meeting to bid farewell to a band of six missionaries leaving for China is to be held in St. John's Wood Church on Wednesday next, at 7.30 p.m., not on Tuesday, as stated last week. The names of missionaries are: Rev. P. J. Maclagan, for Swatow; Dr. Gavin Russell and Miss Barnett, for Formosa; Dr. James Howie, for Chang-pu; and Rev. M. Mackenzie and Mrs. Maciver for the Hak-ka country.

Rev. W. S. Swanson, late of China, continues to do excellent service in spreading an interest in foreign missions amongst the congregations of the English Presbyterian Church. He has declined an invitation to visit the United States, and plead the cause of missions amongst the congregations of the Presbyterian Church (North). Mr. Swanson's services are in such request at home that all his Sundays are filled up for the next six or seven months.

In the course of a discussion in Dundee Free Church Presbytery on a proposal to form an association of elders and deacons, Rev. D. M. Ross suggested that there should be stated conferences for ministers, elders, and people. Rev. C. Shaw remarked that the line of demarcation between the ministers and elders had already been drawn, for in the arrangement of the Presbytery seats the ministers occupied the inner sanctuary, while the elders were relegated to the court of the Gentiles.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The annual meetings of the Southern Branch of the Irish Temperance League were held last week in Cork and Waterford, and were in each case well attended, hopeful, and enthusiastic.

Special Gospel meetings have been held at the Y.M.C.A., Belfast. An address on "Rescue Work in the London Streets" was delivered by Mr. J. B. Wookey, London, and ministers of various denominations took part in the services.

Several persons are believed to have been led to decision for Christ at special meetings held during the past fortnight in Donegall-square Methodist Church, Belfast. The meetings are being continued this week under the charge of Rev. R. C. Johnson, Conference evangelist.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Evangelistic meetings are being held at the Shandon Mission Hall, Clydebank. The meetings are well attended and much blessing has resulted, in spite of opposition.

The Bible Society of Scotland stand in the Glasgow Exhibition is doing good service. Upwards of 10,000 Bibles and Testaments have been sold from it, including a fair number in European languages. An attendant in the Ceylon Court purchased a costly Tamil Bible to send it to a friend in the East. A Japanese visitor gladly picked up a copy of the whole Bible, lately completed in his own tongue, and paid 7s. 6d. for a copy in five volumes. The Directors have agreed to present each foreigner employed in the Exhibition with a copy of the Scriptures in his own language. Hungarian Testaments were presented to the fourteen members of the famous Blue Hungarian Band.

The Paisley Lodging-house Mission was started a year ago by a visitation of the various lodging-houses, and the singing and preaching the glorious Gospel. The Adelphi Hall, Cart-lane, was afterwards taken, and the work begun in earnest. The people have been gradually awakened to eternal realities, and many, it is believed, have accepted Jesus as their Saviour.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Daniel Evans, D.D., canon of Bangor.—Rev. T. Lodwiek, Congregational minister of Festiniog, North Wales; he was suddenly taken ill whilst on his way to Neath, where he had arranged to preach, and expired at the hour and on the day when he was to have been married.—Rev. Frederick H. S. Pendleton, rector of St. Sampson's, Guernsey, and formerly British chaplain at Monte Video and at Florence.—Rev. Dr. Stewart, parish minister of Spott, N.B.—Mrs. Morrison, wife of the pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Murree, India.—At Killeagh Glebe, Oldcastle, county Meath, Rev. Robert Battersby, M.A., aged ninety-three years.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Temperance is said to be making great progress in the island of Lewis.

The U. K. Alliance anniversary meetings are to be held October 9 at Manchester.

Merionethshire has voted for local control and for prohibition by immense majorities.

"Fourteen women charged with drunkenness in one day, before one magistrate," is a recent item from Bow-street Police-court.

In Australia, New Zealand, and the Sandwich Islands the supply of intoxicating drinks to the aboriginal tribes is a criminal offence.

The London Branch of the U. K. Alliance has asked the local option unions in the Metropolis to work for temperance candidates for the County Council.

Mr. Sims, of the National Temperance League, has attended meetings recently at the barracks, Bristol, Trowbridge, Exeter, &c. A considerable number of pledges were taken.

An International Temperance Convention is to be held in Melbourne, Australia, during the week commencing November 19, 1888. All the regular temperance organisations in the world are invited to send representatives.

At the Swansea Licensing Sessions the stipendiary condemned "little boxes" in public-houses, called "snugs," and which facilitated secret drinking. He announced that houses with such would not get their licences renewed.

A Coffee Tavern Conference has been held at Hull. It was suggested that the different companies should offer a reward of £2000 for a national non-intoxicating drink to take the place of beer. It was pointed out that the taverns must not depend on the sale of coffee and tea, but should provide meals for working men.

On Saturday afternoon a mass meeting of young people was held in the large marquee, Dalston-lane, in which Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall, is carrying on a Gospel Temperance Mission. About 2000 children of both sexes, belonging to Board schools in the neighbourhood, were addressed by the friends of total abstinence, and entertained with melody singing. In the evening a crowded meeting was held of working men and women, the monster tent being well filled.

The Alliance News tells a pleasant story of a temperance friend who lately celebrated his forty-ninth birthday at Smedley's Hydropathic Institution, Matlock. On hearing it was his birthday, a gentleman facetiously asked him for a song. Instead, he gave a recitation in praise of water. Before the day was out, as the result of his addresses and the discussions which followed, twenty-five persons had signed the pledge. A hop merchant determined to give up his business, and amongst other signers were many of influential social and commercial station. Since returning home several gentlemen have written this earnest worker letters of thanks. One had induced his wife to sign, and they were clearing out their large stock of wines spirits, and beer.

FOREIGN.

Although £5000 could have been obtained for the right to sell drink at a great fair being held at Buffalo, U.S.A., it was refused.

Each W. C. T. Union of Brooklyn, N.Y., appoints some of its members to visit the jails two days in each week. They not only take part in the regular religious exercises, but labour personally with the prisoners, trying to influence them to lead better lives.

Mrs. Maria Bateman, of the Boston W.C.T.U., is a regular visitor among the women imprisoned in the Tombs, every Sunday afternoon. This lady has also extended her efforts to the Charlestown court-room in behalf of the unfortunate, and has been cordially welcomed by the presiding judge.

The question of diminishing the consumption of spirits in Belgium is being seriously discussed. A newspaper published in a poor part of Flanders states that the daily consumption of a working man—not a drunkard—there includes at 5.30 a.m. a "worm-killer"; at 8 a.m. an "eye-opener"; at 11 a.m. a "whip"; at 2 p.m. a "digester"; at 5 p.m. a "soldier"; and at 7.30 p.m. a "finisher." His regular yearly expenditure for drams, without counting extra libations on festive occasions, amounts to 219 fr.—a rather important item in a family budget of from 800 fr. to 1200 fr.

OBITUARY.

MR. DANIEL EARL.

FOR upwards of fifty-three years Mr. Daniel Earl, recently deceased, was a diligent labourer in the Sunday-school of the church over which Rev. Newman Hall presides. A trustee of the church, and actively engaged in promoting the success of its various agencies, he will be much missed. On the Sunday prior to his death he listened with much pleasure to sermons from his pastor on the words: "I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever," and on that scene in the Pilgrim's Progress which describes the entrance of the pilgrims into the Celestial City. He little thought at that time that in less than a week he would be at rest. His confidence in Christ found expression in these last words: "O Jesus, if it be thy will, take me to thyself. Amen, Amen."

MR. FREDERICK THOMAS GAMMON.

Mr. Frederick T. Gammon, the successor to the work of the late well-known T. B. Smithies, has died at Hastings, at the age of thirty-nine. The deceased was one of the sons of Rev. John Gammon, a well-respected Bible Christian minister. He entered the firm of Messrs. Partridge, in which he attained the position of managing partner. The deceased gentleman conducted The British Workman, Band of Hope Review, Band of Mercy, and other monthly publications, besides being the author and compiler of several of Messrs. Partridge's most popular little books. Mr. Gammon was also the President of the South London Auxiliary of the Sunday School Union, an official of the Old Bailey Sunday School Union, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school at Waterloo-road Bible Christian Chapel.

REV. DR. TROWBRIDGE.

The recent death of the President of the College at Aintab is a sad loss to the comparatively small body of Christian workers in the Turkish Empire. For many years an honoured and influential missionary of the American Board, Rev. Tillman C. Trowbridge, LL.D., had many friends in England, who sincerely condole with the widow and family in their bereavement. For two or three years past Dr. Trowbridge had been in poor health, and not able to do much hard work; but he had ever been ready and willing to give counsel and assistance to those about him who were physically stronger. He expired on July 20 at Marash, after sustaining a paralytic attack. On the previous Sunday he attended public worship, and enjoyed the exercises. At the Lord's Supper he urged his fellow labourers to diligence with much fervour, quoting with hearty confidence, and repeating with significant emphasis, the beautiful words of the Apostle, "Forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

GREENWICH Y.M.C.A.—On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, Sept. 17 to 19, meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life were held in the rooms of this Association. Addresses were given by Rev. S. A. Selwyn, Hatcham; Rev. L. N. Caley Brixton; and Mr. J. S. Rivolta. The meetings were very well attended, and were the means of much blessing.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a three weeks' mission at the Y.M.C.A., Malmesbury, Wilts.——For blessing on a mission to be held at Wetherby, Yorkshire, by Rev. W. Haslam, from Oct. 7 to 17.——For blessing on special services, by Rev. Robert Balgarnie, at Carlisle, from Sept. 29 to Oct. 5; and at Harley-street Chapel, Bow, London, from Oct. 8 to 15.

A PRACTICAL GRIEVANCE.—Cannot the Bishops (says The Echo) abolish some of their jackals? A poor parson complains that he recently accepted a small living, said to be worth £80, but really only worth £50, and before he could be instituted he had to pay £9 16s. His predecessor had not held the living a year; so that within a year the Bishop's jackals took £19 12s. out of the £50. Here is a practical grievance for a Church Congress to discuss.

MACEDONIA.—The races inhabiting Macedonia hate one another much more than they hate the Turks. One of the greatest difficulties with which the Porte has to contend in maintaining order is that the different races all denounce one another as carrying on revolutionary intrigues; and if the Porte endeavours to remedy any local grievance it is instantly accused of favouring one race to the detriment of the others.—Times.

DEAR FRIENDS,

Offences against Little Children are increasing. We must extend our Village Homes. A Cottage for incurable cases is promised us, and we can now favourably buy a piece of land on which to build it. Help us to obtain this indispensable extension of our premises.

We are very much tried for want of money, both for the Prison Mission, and its accompanying service, the Medical Mission.

The Sick and the Prisoner cry out to you. Will you visit them with us?

At this season we earnestly beg for Contributions to meet all rents, and other inevitable liabilities, that remain unpaid, because of the very small amount of money that we have received this year as yet.

£1,000 would meet all our present necessities. This is not too much to ask in faith from Him who giveth all. Who will provide this sum at this time?

Pray for us!

THE LATE JOHN KENNETH MACKENZIE,

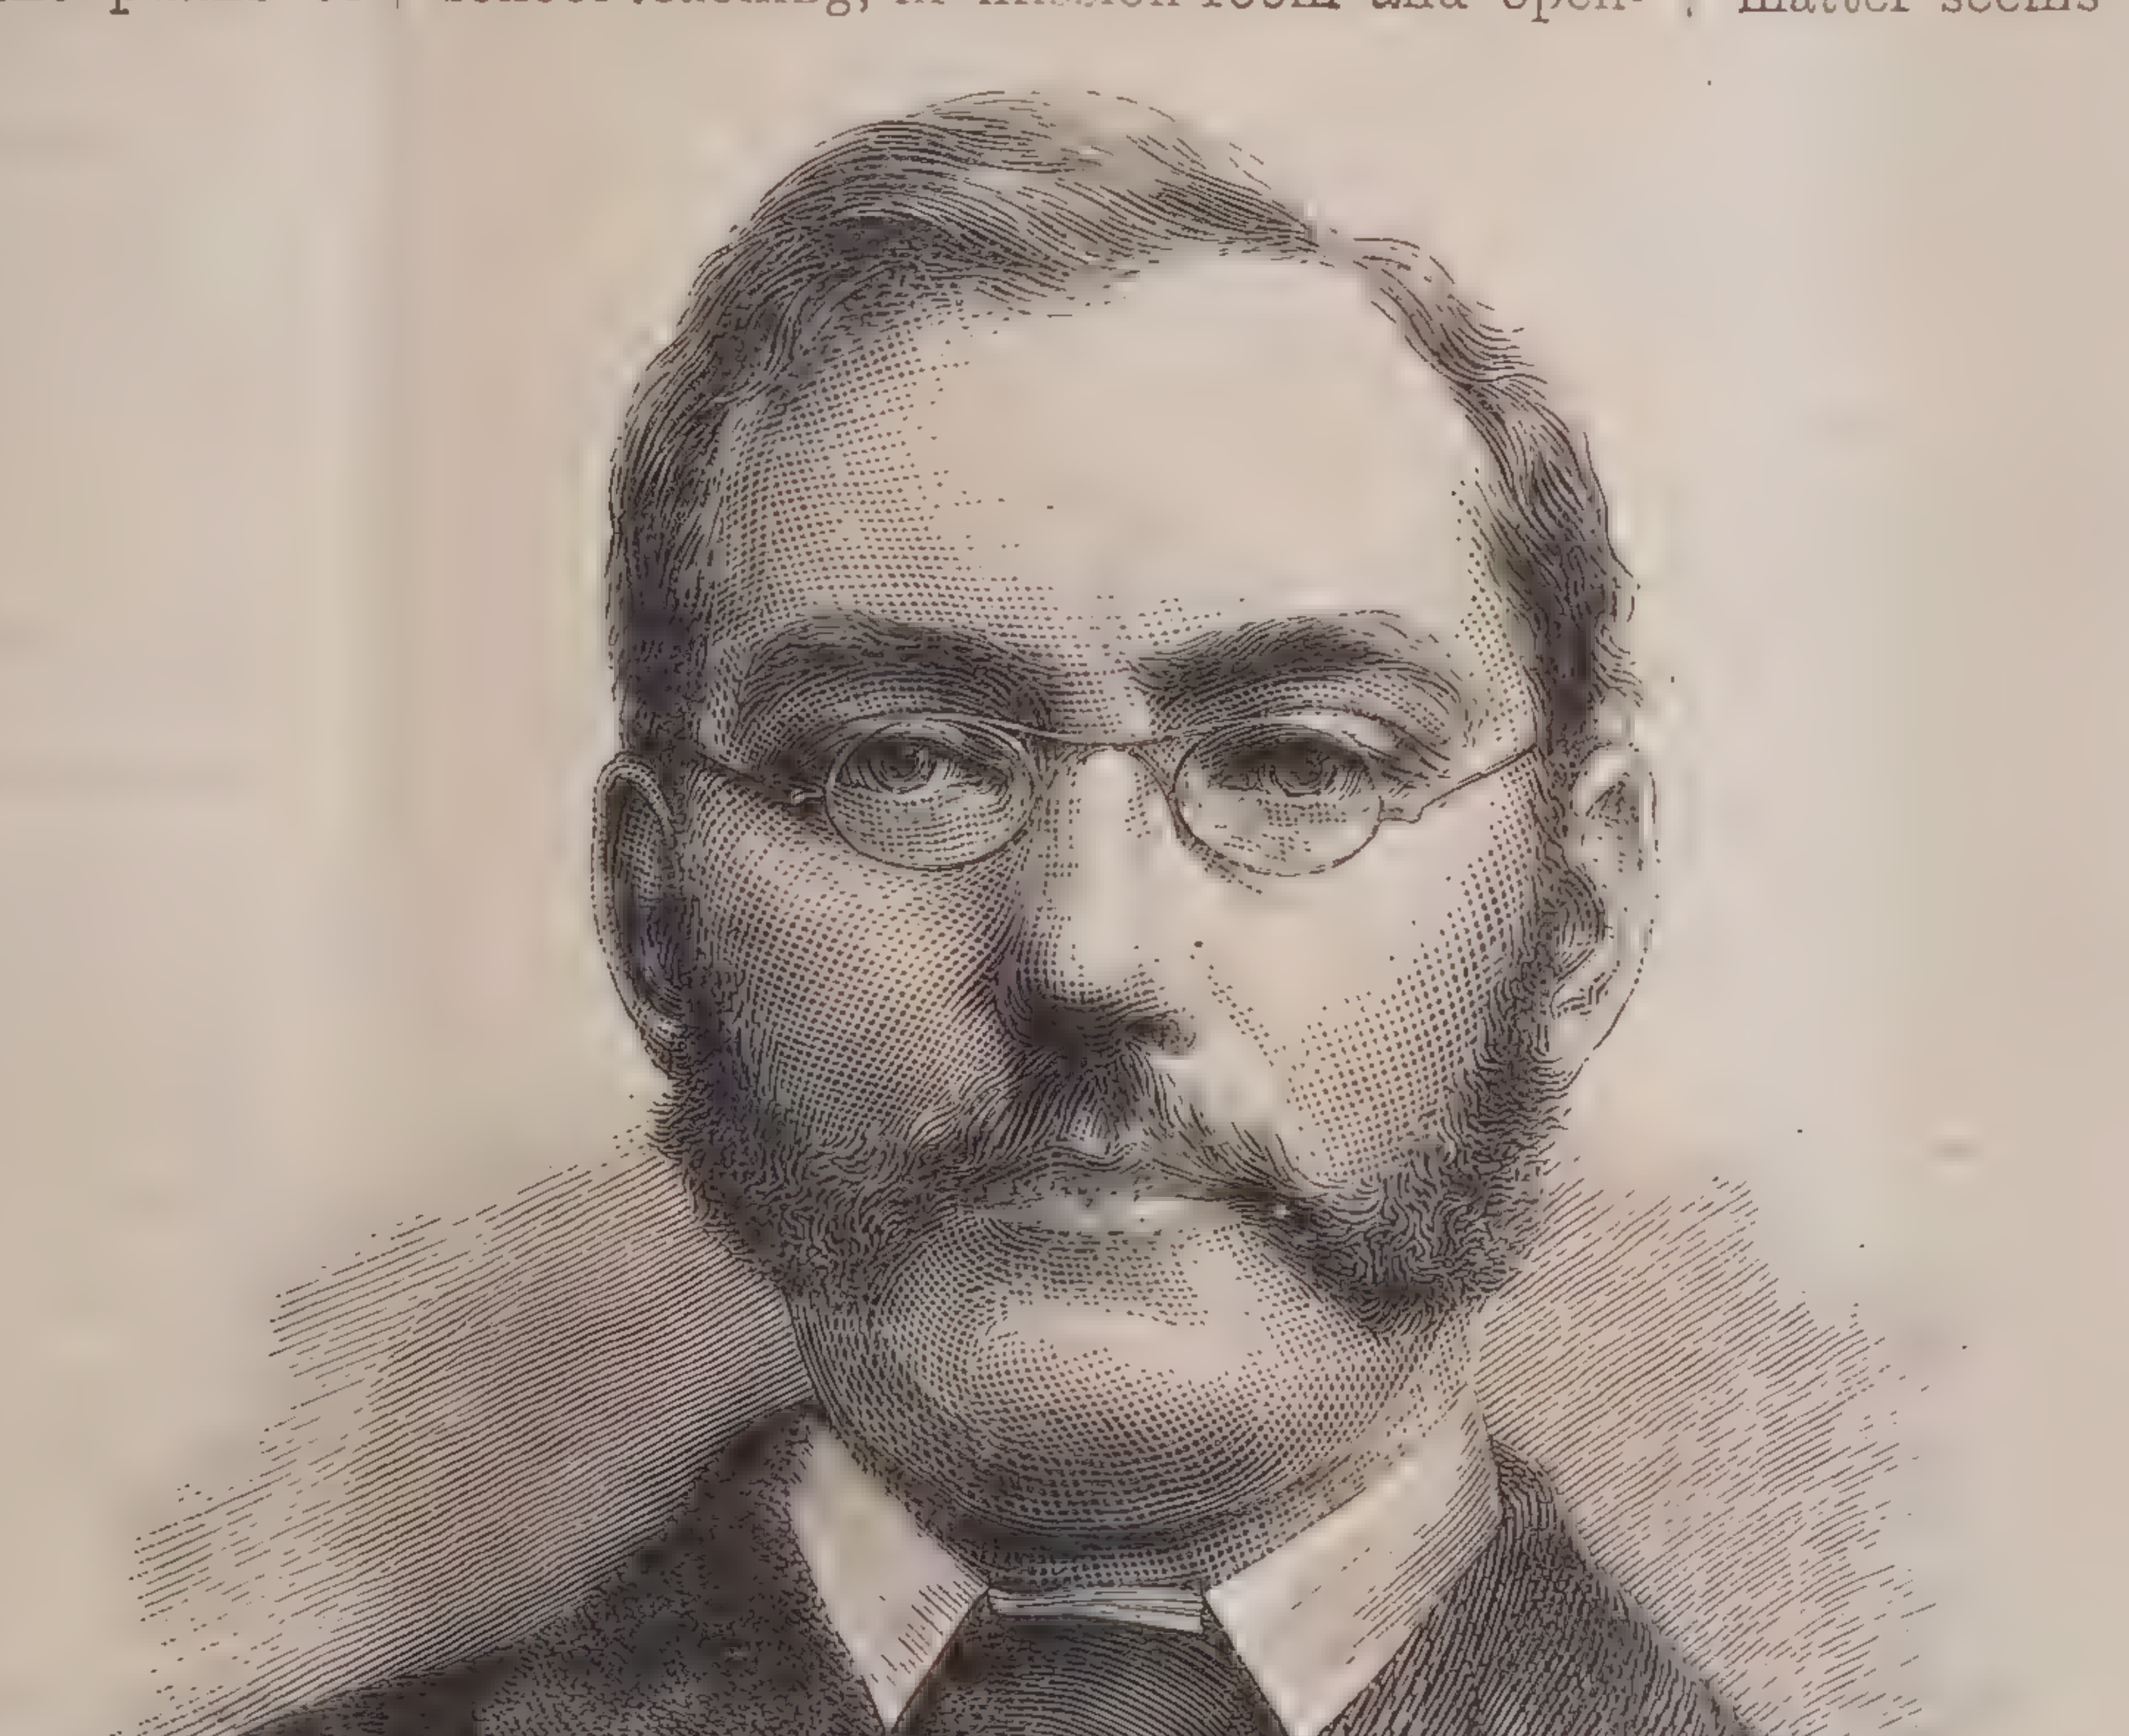
IT would not be easy to find in the annals of Christian service a life more single in its purpose and entire in its consecration than was that of KENNETH MACKENZIE. Whether in the hospitals or medical school, in the humble dwellings on the plains of Chi-li or in the aristocratic homes of Tientsin, he was ever the earnest evangelist and the "beloved physician." His life is a bright illustration of the speedy advantage which a skilful doctor can gain among a heathen population, much of which possesses sufficient intelligence and culture to perceive the superiority of Western medical practice over that of China. Such a man has a key which will unlock doors that would otherwise be firmly shut to the missionary.

Beyond his medical and surgical knowledge, he carried in his person charms which are in themselves passports to a cautious and conservative people. When once admittance had been gained, his bright face and winsome smile claimed the confidence of the hesitating, whilst the proofs of his skill prepared the way for the entrance to dark minds of that living word which was ever upon his ready lips. We need not mourn his departure in the midst of his days. His was not a leisurely pace; he ran his course, practically saying, "If my hand slacked, I should rob God." His work was done, and well done. The Master perceived that he was ready for higher service. We feel sure our readers will be pleased to hear some of the leading incidents of this blessed life.



(From Photograph by Mr. J. Deane Hilton.)

Dr. Mackenzie was born at Great Yarmouth in 1850. When quite young his parents removed to Bristol. After being four years in business, he left at the age of nineteen to study medicine at the Bristol Medical School and Royal Infirmary. While young he had religious convictions, but these were brought to a happy issue upon the occasion of a visit paid by Mr. Moody to a Bible-class in Bristol of which he was a member. This was some years before the first great evangelistic tour of Mr. Moody in England. After his conversion he engaged actively in Bible-class and ragged school teaching, in mission-room and open-air preaching, also as a helper in organising special Sunday evening services in theatres.

While thus employed, Mr. Mackenzie was impressed by two memoirs of Chinese missionaries, and the influence of an address by Rev. Griffith John on the need of medical missions in China enabled him to come to a decision. On the same day that he passed his final examinations at Edinburgh, having retired to his room to thank God for his success and again surrender himself to his service, his attention was drawn to a letter announcing the opening of the new hospital at Hankow, and the pressing need for a physician. In making an offer of his services to the London Missionary Society for the vacant post, he remarks, "The whole matter seems to be so entirely arranged of the Lord that I dare not hold back."

Having been accepted and sent out at once, he entered heartily into the work, with Mr. and Mrs. Griffith John as colleagues. Not only in the hospital but in evangelistic tours in the country districts he abounded in labours. From the time of his arrival he was able, by the aid of an English-speaking assistant, to see patients, and about five thousand were treated during the first year, four hundred of whom were in-patients. It was soon noised throughout the province that a most skilful Western physician was at Hankow, and people came from afar seeking relief. Twenty-three in-patients came from the district of Mien-yang, more than one hundred miles distant, while another came from the province of Kueichow, a distance of one thousand miles. He was a Master of Arts, and had been summoned to Peking to appear before the Emperor. Being much distressed on account of a hare-lip, and hearing of the wonders wrought by the foreign doctor, he came to Hankow, and was greatly delighted with the speedy cure effected upon him.

During the New Year festivities Dr. Mackenzie and Rev. Griffith John made that evangelistic tour which ended in their being furiously mobbed and pelted by the heathen in the district of Hiau Kan. A noble Christian man named Wei had been used of God in the conversion of some twenty of his fellow-villagers, and invited the missionaries to preach there. The day before they left Hankow, Wei appeared, and stated that the native Christians had been attacked, and part of their house pulled down because they had dared to assemble together for the worship of Jesus. The missionaries saw no reason to alter their plans. When about two or three miles from Wei's village, they noticed that the behaviour of the people began to change, and from being simply curious they rudely pushed the missionaries, and trod upon their heels, crying out, vehemently, "Go back to Hankow, and preach your Jesus; you shan't come here." Expostulation was vainly tried, and soon heavy clods of earth were thrown at them. Both were struck many times, and bled profusely; Mr. John was severely cut on face and scalp, and became very faint.

On nearing the river they saw another mob, who, wishing to drive them back, sent a tremendous shower of missiles. But there were over one thousand infuriated men behind them, and they were dragged down the river bank. Hitherto the missionaries had been passive; now they stopped, and, with the native Christians bravely forming a bodyguard, they faced their pursuers, and rushed back through the mob, which was unprepared for this change of tactics. A Hankow convert shielded Mr. John from blows, receiving them on his own body, and saying, "You may kill me, but don't kill my pastor." They succeeded in breaking away, and, as it was now nearly dark, the people did not follow far. After wandering about in the open country, a native Christian took them in, and treated them most hospitably. With some difficulty, and amid a deluge of rain, the weary and wounded missionaries reached Hankow. It is a matter of thankfulness to know that, within a very short time, numbers of these poor heathens were converted, and have given proof of the same in a way not shown by Chinamen before, viz., by building chapels for worship in many of their villages with their own money. The richest harvest of the Hankow mission has been reaped in the fields of Hiau Kan.

In 1879 the illness of Mrs. Mackenzie led to their removal to Tientsin. This seemed a questionable step, as Dr. Mackenzie was leaving a well-appointed medical mission for one destitute of a hospital, and possessing only a small dispensary, which was in debt and out of drugs. The doctor's remedy for this state of things was prayer, daily prayer. Months passed, a memorial to the Viceroy was politely set aside; but prayer was maintained, and an answer given in a manner which showed the right hand of power. This part of the story sounds best in Dr. Mackenzie's own words:—

> One day we had our meeting with the native converts, and, among other subjects, we were remembering the Medical Mission needs. While we were praying, the Lord was already answering. On that morning a member of the English Legation was closeted with the Viceroy, and observed that he was very sad. He asked the reason. "My wife is seriously ill, dying; the doctors have told me this morning she cannot live." "Well," said the Englishman, "why don't you get the help of the foreign doctors?" In the end he was persuaded to send down a courier for me and for the medical gentleman in charge of the foreign station; and, just as our prayer-meeting was breaking up and I was going into my house, the courier came with this message. Here was the answer to prayer.

Dr. Mackenzie's treatment was quite successful, and, with the help of Miss Howard, M.D., who came from Peking to undertake the local treatment, in a few weeks Lady Li was quite well. Thus the first wheel moved, and the motion of the second was quite as peculiar. The news of Lady Li's recovery brought crowds to the Viceregal palace seeking medical relief. At the request of Dr. Mackenzie the Viceroy allowed several of these people to be operated upon in his presence, and he freely acknowledged that Western surgery could accomplish what Chinese surgery failed to do, and immediately set apart a portion of a beautiful temple as a dispensary, and provided all needful drugs. Dr. Mackenzie's help was now sought by many aristocratic and wealthy families, and all fees and presents were scrupulously set apart for the Medical Mission. Soon, at his suggestion, these patients and other people, all Chinese, subscribed over £2000, with which a hospital was built and furnished, the expense of its maintenance being undertaken by the Viceroy.

Dr. Mackenzie was afterwards made the instrument of another important innovation for China. At the Viceroy's request he selected eight young men from the hundred who had been educated at the expense of the Government in America, and formed a school of medicine and surgery. The course was three years, and up to the present over twenty students had been thus trained. The missionary, however, had his mind upon the "one thing needful," and stipulated that he should be wholly free to have Christian intercourse with these young men. This was conceded, and blessed results have followed. The Chinese Government, in recognition of the valuable labours so freely rendered by Dr. Mackenzie, conferred on him an imperial decoration in the form of a Star of the Order of the Double Dragon and a Chinese commission.

While thus labouring, Dr. Mackenzie was called upon to bear a heavy trial in the serious affliction of his wife, who was obliged to visit England in 1881. On going out again in 1882 her health failed upon the voyage, and Dr. Mackenzie had to accompany her to England again immediately upon her arrival at Tientsin.

In spite of this and the anxieties inseparable to the work of the Mission, he ever kept steadily in view the great need of the Chinese, and was first and foremost a Christian evangelist. The welfare of the souls of his patients became to him a matter of even greater concern than that of their suffering bodies, whilst the attractiveness of his bearing and his happy and cheerful face made friends for him of many heathen officers of rank and wealth who stood by him in their friendship and help for years; yet this was not sustained by any suppression of his convictions and efforts for their spiritual good. He lived also with the people, sharing their humble hospitality, and endearing himself to them by that lively sympathy in their affairs which makes all the world akin. Thus, in the highest and noblest of labour his sorrowing soul found solace and refuge. He wisely did not shut himself up within himself, but seemed to live wholly among and for his patients and native friends. In one sense to him it was true that

> The human heart
> Finds nowhere shelter but in human kind.

And, if to this we add that the light of God in which he dwelt, though radiating from him and seen by all, yet proved to him a shelter, for "the light can be a curtain as well as the darkness," we learn at once the secret of that influence which he wielded among men.

While thus busy and self-forgetful Dr. Mackenzie was taken with cold and fever. No alarm was felt at first for him; but, as the days wore on, the cold settled upon his lungs. He recognised his condition by saying, "I think the Lord is calling me to Himself. What a joy it will be to go to Him!"

To the friend who was watching him he expressed himself ready either to die or live whichever might be the Lord's will. Quietly and painlessly, very early in the morning, while it was yet dark, on Easter Day, God's finger beckoned him away to the presence of his risen Lord.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION, ALTON.—The six marquees are well attended: there are some from the lowest grades in society. Last night at the Binsted tent it was cheering to hear the expressions of thanks for the tent and its services. One man, the mouthpiece of the rest, said, "This tent has saved us from going to the public-house, and we have been benefited in every way. We hope the Lord may reward you for all you have done for us." I am more than ever convinced from long experience that this is the way to meet these people. S. Chinn.

FOREIGN SEAPORTS.—Writing with respect to a recent visit to Antwerp, Rev. E. W. Matthews, Secretary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Shadwell, E., says:—The Scandinavian Sailors' Church is well attended by the seamen of their own nation. I visited a reading-room specially for German sailors, and found it full; men reading and writing, away from the dangerous drink and other temptations. The Scandinavian Temperance Sailors' Home, recently established, bids fair to be a very useful institution. This Home, as every sailors' home should be, is without the drink. The Consul told me of a large legacy left by the late Mr. Grisar for the erection of an International Sailors' Home, and the municipal authorities have granted free an excellent site, and they hope to begin the erection shortly. Every influence should be brought to bear to have this large Sailors' Home without the temptation of a drinking bar. We want during this year to start missions in several new ports. Pressing calls come from South America, India, the Black Sea, and other places.

THE DENIAL OF SELF.

The Salvation Army "struck oil" when it conceived the idea of a week of self-denial, the proceeds of which should be given to the funds for carrying on its work. It is a true and righteous principle not to be content with giving to God that which costs us nothing. The beggarly pittance which is contributed to the work of God by the professing Church of Christ in many cases costs nothing, and amounts to nothing in many more. It is the few who give; and as in the days of Christ on earth the widows' mites, rather than the much of the rich men, still represent the actual self-denial. Many an offering acceptable and well pleasing to God will be made with fasting and prayer during the approaching week. The greatest need just now is money. The Holy Spirit has wrought upon the spirits of many bright young Christian men and women to offer themselves for missionary work, but the same Spirit has not prevailed on those who possess the wealth to supply the means for sending them. A week of self-denial on the part of all Christians, even to the extent of giving up a few of the comforts, or even the superfluities of life, would supply the means of sending out an army of missionaries, and of maintaining them for a year. The Salvation Army must have the credit of putting into practice an excellent idea, and the result on the previous occasion showed the devotion of its people, and the sympathy of a great multitude beyond its borders. We do not doubt that the result this year will be still more abundant.

Yet the denial of self means far more than is usually understood by the term. To deny self is to treat it as Levi did, "who said unto his father and to his mother, I have not seen him; neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children" (Deut. xxxiii. 9). It is to act toward it as Peter did toward Jesus when he declared, "I know not the Man." The denial of self is the effect of the expulsive power of a new affection, when the love of Christ constraineth us, and we keep ourselves in the love of God. A week of genuine self-denial—of actual denial of self—would turn the world upside down by the power of the Gospel. It is the assertion of self that, above all things, grieves and quenches the Spirit of God. The denial of self would reverse that painful description of the early Gentile Church: "All seek their own; not the things that are Jesus Christ's."

The denial of self would kill sectarianism; and all the denominations, including even the Salvation Army itself, would be united, like the twelve tribes at Jerusalem, into one Israel. The Church would then be mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, and each sect would rejoice, not in its own individual success, but in the glory of Christ the Head, and in the good estate of the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all.

LIVERPOOL BIBLE CARRIAGE. — For the past month the van working in connection with this carriage has been in the Barnsley district, in charge of Mr. W. H. Llewellyan. Many thousands of Testaments and Gospel books have been scattered, and crowds nightly listen to the old, old story. Tracts and books are needed for distribution among the colliers of this thickly populated district. This may be sent to the Bible Carriage, Peel-square, Barnsley. Mr. Northcote Wells is carrying on a very successful Gospel mission in Ramsey, Isle of Man.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

XXVII.—"HASLAM'S PEN."

One day, in the course of an address I was giving to young believers, I was telling how I began to work in my first zeal. I spoke of myself, because too often believers are touchy, and do not like being "shown up," as they call it.

I said: "I used to sit down and plan what I would say, and how I would say it. I consulted men and books to confirm me in my work, and, of course, asked the Lord to help me carry it out to the best of my ability.

"I knew of no other way, therefore I went on, thinking it was my duty to persevere through many discouragements, both within and without.

"In the midst of my manifold undertakings, God awakened me to see that I was doing my own will instead of his. During all this time I was under the delusion that I was serving my Master in heaven!

"Imagine a servant sitting down to plan what he would like to do, and asking his master now and then to come and help him! Or imagine a pen getting up to write your letters, and asking you to hold it up while it went on writing its own thoughts. You could not trust such a pen as that, and would be afraid to use it. In like manner, God cannot trust believers who go about to do their own will, neither can He use them to carry out his purposes."

A friend, who had been listening to what I said about the pen, passed it by for the time, as if he had not heard it. Perhaps, like many others, he did not hear what I said, but what he thought. Or perhaps he was like the great Baron Munchaussen's horn, which, though a tune had been blown into it, emitted no sound until it was hung up by the fire. Then it thawed, and began to sound out the Baron's tune.

So was it with my friend. At midnight he was heard roaring with laughter in his bed. Some of his household were awakened, and naturally came to his door to inquire what was the matter.

"I cannot sleep," said the gentleman, "for thinking about Haslam's pen." Then he set off laughing again. "It is a funny conceit to be sure," he continued, "but wonderfully true."

What a number of earnest people there are just like that pen. They are working their own will, and verily think that they are doing God service.

My friend could look back upon the time when he himself was exactly like that extraordinary pen, though at the time he was not aware of it.

The Lord says, plainly enough, "Apart from Me ye can do nothing." "Oh, yes," says the branch, "I think I can do something. I will try and do my best."

But how can a branch be fruitful, or even live, except it abide in the vine, and the sap of the vine abide in it? Our dwelling in Christ is not enough, excepting for our safety and keeping; but when He dwells in us, He makes us to bring forth much fruit.

The Lord's teaching upon this subject is very clear; but, notwithstanding this, it is surprising how commonly people make resolutions to be fruitful, and ask God to help them in carrying them out.

A gentleman had, for a long time, been striving in this way; continually begging of God that He would give him a stock of grace, whereby he might accomplish his purposes. He had many schemes in his mind for promoting the glory of God and the good of the people, therefore thought his prayers demanded an answer.

Not receiving the encouragement he looked for, he was getting disheartened. Other people were working successfully who were not half so well instructed, he thought, as himself, or so efficient, while he met with little else than disappointment.

Notwithstanding this, however, he persevered in pleading for strength and grace. Instead of giving him strength and grace, God was answering his prayer in a far better way than he asked; that was by showing him his own weakness and inability to do anything.

He did not understand at the time that this is the way in which God answers such petitions.

This gentleman heard a sermon one morning, during which the preacher pointed out the difference between an agent and an instrument. How the one is deputed to act, while the other is only used to do the work. God once deputed Adam, but Adam failed, and since that He has not trusted poor weak man any more.

Better than this, in his love He has found a substitute for him in his own beloved Son. He has given Jesus Christ to be his Agent to accomplish all the great purposes of his love towards the world.

The Lord Jesus came as willingly as He was sent, and by his death He has already made atonement towards God, and by his resurrection He has conquered our enemies. Now He has all power in heaven and on earth, and no one else has power, or may be entrusted with it.

As the Omnipotent One, instead of doing all the work Himself, He desires the fellowship of his believing people, and, for this purpose, requires that they should be his instruments to carry out his work for the glory of God, and the good of men.

The light flashed into this gentleman's mind. He saw not only where he had been wrong; but what was right.

After the service, he came into the vestry in a very excited state, and said, with much animation, "Thank you, thank you very much for that word. I never saw before the difference between an agent and an instrument. I have for several years been praying to be made God's agent, instead of giving up myself to be Christ's instrument. I have been trying to take Christ's place, and God would not let me have it. I see it all now.

"I am a stock-broker in London," he continued, "and people intrust me with money to invest for them. I am their agent; but I have clerks under me who do the work. How could I make such a mistake!

"But," he went on to say, "your preachers tell us to do the very thing you forbid. How is that? They tell us to make resolutions—do our best and ask God to help us!"

"Yes," I said, "I am afraid this is true of a great many; but if man's teaching is not according to the Word of God, you are not bound to receive it. Can you show me anywhere in Scripture that we are told to 'make resolutions,' and 'to do our best.' On the other hand, are we not told to cease from our own works? Again, 'help,' does not mean God supplementing our deficiencies, but his doing the work altogether."

This gentleman went away saying, "I see now that our grace is in Christ, not from Him—that when we abide in Him, and He in us, we have what He has."

Such is the teaching of God's Word. My friend came into a liberty and blessing which made him one of the most useful of men. He has now no burdens, they are the Lord's—no anxieties or troubles in his work, for that, too, is the Lord's work. He is a pen in the hand of a ready writer—a conscious pen, knowing the joy it is communicating to others.

VILLAGE WORK.—Two evangelists, Messrs. Allanson and Dennis, have been holding meetings in some of the villages of Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire with considerable success.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. R. Milligan, of Dundee.

We learn that Mr. Denham Smith has rallied a little during the past week, though he still lies in a most critical condition.

Our readers will observe that we give eight additional pages with this issue. Notwithstanding, the pressure of Conference reports is so great that many contributions are held over.

☞ We have about five hundred foreign missionaries on our free list, while about six hundred of our readers send their copies to others at home or abroad. There are about four thousand English-speaking missionaries in the world. To these the intelligence contained in The Christian cannot but be of the greatest value and interest, as our correspondence testifies. Will our readers help us to extend our free list so as to embrace them all?

☞ We hope in our next issue to present our readers with the first of a series of papers, containing very interesting extracts from the unpublished journals of John and Elizabeth Nimmo, who suffered much persecution for conscience' sake, during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. The journals contain narratives of personal experience in things spiritual, as also of personal sufferings under persecution, which our readers will find very profitable as well as interesting, whilst the ebb, the turning, and the flow of the tide of civil and religious liberty in 1688 form a study peculiarly appropriate for this year, the bi-centenary of the Revolution which delivered us from the Stuart dynasty.

General Haig, 14, Kemplay-road, Hampstead, N.W., asks us to call attention to Alexandria as an important sphere of labour. He is himself going there with his family for the winter months, and would be glad to hear of other Christian workers willing to do the same. The climate is delightful, and the cost of living moderate. There is perfect liberty to evangelise among a population of 50,000 Christians, representatives of all the populations around the Mediterranean, and 140,000 Moslems. Being a great centre of commerce, and in constant communication with the surrounding countries, the Gospel may be carried from Alexandria into many lands.

There is plenty of work for those possessing a knowledge of French, or Italian, Greek, &c., or willing to acquire one of those languages, without attempting the more difficult Arabic. Christians possessed of means could find no more needy or inviting sphere. The existing Gospel agencies are few, and sorely needing reinforcement. Alexandria may be reached in fourteen days by sea, or in seven, viâ Marseilles, at about the same cost.

An able paper in the September number of The Nineteenth Century, on the miserable conditions and surroundings of the life of a working girl in the East-end of London, does not appear to have attracted the attention which the subject and Miss Potter's capable treatment of it deserve. The terrible results of modern competition and of the relentless modern economic conditions which in some strata of society act as a huge Juggernaut, are pictured in it by one who is not labouring after any socialistic effect, but who simply describes faithfully that which she has seen, and in which she has taken part.

Certainly whatever excuses may be made for the apathy of many of the rich in the face of the vice and poverty in which myriads of our fellow-creatures are almost hopelessly sunk, ignorance cannot be one. It is not difficult to imagine that a passage such as the following from Miss Potter's article will some day rise up in judgment against those who, after reading it, continue to live a life of selfish disregard of their responsibilities as custodians of wealth; and as brothers and sisters of those of whom the author writes:—

> You cannot accuse them of immorality, for they have no consciousness of sin....They live in the Garden of Eden of uncivilised life; as yet they have not tasted the forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil; and the heaven and hell of an awakened conscience are alike undreamt of. There is only one fall possible to them—drink, leading slowly but inevitably to the drunkard's death.

The Bishop of Lichfield has made Socialism a prominent topic of his address to the clergy at a Diocesan Synod. If, as he pointed out, the clergy should direct their attention to the causes which originate Socialism, no less should others consider how far an unequal distribution of wealth is at present involving misery and poverty. It need not do so, and would not if the relations between the wealthy and the needy were better regulated, and if beneficence were more systematic. One aspect of the question demands immediate and very careful attention. A divorce of the population from the soil is going on, with an overcrowding of cities. The one leads to a congested condition of society, which is full of suffering and peril, and the other to a labour-starved agriculture, which impoverishes the land. Surely there are wisdom and philanthropy enough in England to devise a remedy.

The Dean of Achonry, in a sermon lately preached by him in Belfast, gave a clue to some of the misery and disaffection of Ireland:—

> England had made a grand mistake in the days of the Reformation. She had given the people an English Bible and an English service book. Queen Elizabeth, he believed, desired to have an Irish Prayer-book sent over to this country, but, unfortunately, the Marquis of Salisbury told her that the Irish language was barbarous and unintelligible, and constructed of a few meaningless sentences, which induced the Queen to abandon her purpose. At the present day England was simply reaping the fruits of her ill-judged statesmanship.

Happily the Irish Mission is seeking to undo this mistake. In the West of Ireland, and in such a district as that of the Maam trasna murders, it is supplying the Scriptures in the vernacular, and they have frequently been eagerly received, for among the Roman Catholic population the Bible has been a rare book. The Dean spoke of sixty men whom he knew, who, through the means of the Bible in their own tongue, had come out of Romanism, and were now in the army, navy, and police, or had become Protestant clergymen. From other channels we learn that the Colportage Association is doing a blessed work just now in Ireland in the circulation of God's Word.

The order issued last week by the Commissioners to the Metropolitan Police with respect to the supply of drink to intoxicated persons is a marked advance in the right direction, and must be cordially welcomed by all having the interests of temperance and order at heart. In future, when persons are arrested on a charge of drunkenness in or near public-houses, especial attention is to be given to the circumstances under which the accused have obtained their liquor, and if it appears that they were supplied when already in a state of intoxication, proceedings are to be taken against the publicans concerned. The effect of this new departure will be, we trust, to strike a decided blow at the root of the evil. It is the bounden duty of publicans to refuse a further supply to persons who have already imbibed too freely, and that they do not do so is only one instance, among many, of the demoralising influence exercised by the drink traffic upon all those concerned in its pursuit.

It is strange that this new order to the police has not received greater attention at the hands of the daily press, for its effect, if properly enforced, will be to impose a very heavy check upon the vice of drunkenness in the metropolis. Publicans will recognise that for the future they will pander to this degrading habit at their peril, and that any small profits that might accrue from the sale of an extra glass or two will be far more than counterbalanced by the losses involved in a prosecution and the endorsement of their licences. The only cause for regret in the matter is that this very necessary measure was not adopted long ago. It only remains for the police to carry it out with rigour and discretion, and the cause of temperance will undoubtedly receive a material impetus.

The current number of The Expositor contains the first part of an admirable paper on a subject most important at this time, and at all times—the Melchizedek, or Heavenly Priesthood of our Lord. This paper shows that Christ could not be a priest after the order of Aaron, and that his High Priesthood began with his glorification The next paper is by Dr. Marcus Dods, entitled "How far is the Church responsible for Present Scepticism?" We regret that The Expositor should commit itself, without qualification, to the republication of views which have been condemned by responsible men in Dr. Dods' own denomination.

We await with considerable interest the result of the deliberations of the five or six leading ministers who have been appointed by the London Baptist Association to define the meaning of the word "evangelical." We are quite disposed to agree with those who think that the phrase is becoming a little too elastic. For illustration of our meaning, we need not go beyond the very meeting to which we allude. One of the speakers announced himself as "one of the most evangelical brethren in the London Baptist Association," and proceeded to advocate the moral theory view of the Atonement, and the Larger Hope. Certainly neither of these would have been accepted twenty years ago as being within a hundred miles of evangelicalism. And in our judgment they are not admissible for a moment in any right definition of this venerable term, which has played so important a part in the history of religious discussion and controversy.

In our view, the word "evangelical" has been adopted by those who have held the Deity of our Lord, in opposition to Socinianism; the substitutionary death of the cross, in opposition to Broad Church theories; the priesthood of Christ, in opposition to Sacramentarianism; the simplicity of the communion of the Lord's Supper, in opposition to the doctrine of the Real Presence. It certainly has also further references, which the present controversy will probably do good service in establishing, in opposition to those who deny the infallibility of Scripture on the one hand, and who assert another probation for the impenitent dead on the other.

It is time that a very vigorous protest should be raised against the misuse of public hoardings in London and the provinces. It is almost impossible to go through any considerable town without being offended by large and well-executed pictures, depicting some tragic scenes of violence or murder, which are in course of representation on the boards of music-hall or theatre. The minds of the people become in this way familiarised with terrible and ghastly incidents that must act with dreadful directness on morbid and evil-disposed temperaments. We are all more influenced by our surroundings than we suppose. And the same motives that lead us to surround the walls of our Board Schools and Homes with elevating and beautiful subjects, should secure the prohibition of those ghastly sights which become the seed germs of crimes resulting from them in years long after.

We notice in one of our contemporaries an appeal by a correspondent for the institution of a daily paper from which all the horrors should be carefully eliminated. We very much sympathise with the moral shudder with which many an earnest soul turns away from the recitals of crime and violence, of sins against women and little children, with which the columns of our dailies are filled. But, so long as such things are going on around us, is it well for us to shut our eyes and ears to them? Should we live in a paradise of blissful ignorance, whilst our brethren and sisters are in an agony of tears and blood? Is it not right that we should know all the facts, that we may be able to sympathise with our Master Christ, and that we may know how to pray, and labour, and exert such social and political power as we have in the direction of righteousness, purity, and love. Each new story of crime should act as an incentive to a new crusade to check the evil of our times by its only corrective, the Gospel of the grace of God.

The Graphic, of Saturday last, has a horribly realistic two-page engraving representing "A slave raid in Central Africa," from a drawing by Mr. H. H. Johnston, the well-known traveller. A band of naked native men, women, and children, have been cruelly bound together and are being led off by some of the marauding Arabs; while other of these inhuman wretches are shooting down several native warriors who have presumably been endeavouring to interfere on behalf of the captives. This gruesome picture ought to be more potent than the most graphic description in arousing the civilised nations to combine in putting an end to such unspeakable atrocities. Beneath the engraving is the following letterpress:—

> Creeping up through the long grass, gliding through the encompassing belt of forest, selecting, no doubt, a time when most of the fighting men are absent fishing or hunting, the slave-raiders suddenly pounce on the doomed village, which they rapidly encircle. The loud discharge of their guns paralyses the inhabitants with terror, and the panic is doubtless added to by the firing of the thatched huts. The few men who attempt an ineffectual resistance with their spears, and clubs, and bows and arrows are pitilessly shot down. The women, the boys, and such youths or young men as are easily overpowered, are speedily secured; their hands are usually tied behind the back, and their necks are invested with the heavy forked sticks which the slave-raiders have previously cut, and brought with them on the backs of their donkeys, or their slave porters. In addition to these wooden yokes, the slaves are frequently tied together by long twisted liana cords, made of the tough bush-creepers. The little children are rarely tied, except with their heart-strings, for their attachment to their mothers, and the mothers' determination not to be parted from their children, combine to carry them along with the slave-caravan—as long, that is to say, as their poor little legs can bear them.

Commander Cameron returns to this subject in another letter to The Times, in which he says:—

> In the interests of the people of Central Africa, who, according to Cardinal Lavigerie, are perishing at the rate of 6000 a day, I plead for something to be done. Government interference is not desirable, but there is nothing to prevent the line of Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika being occupied, and the slave routes between Manyuema, Ubira, and the other hunting grounds of the human fiends who are now depopulating Africa and their markets in the East being absolutely blocked. No better memorial to the memory of Gordon and Livingstone could be raised than the establishment of this line of blockade, which, while it would link together the territories for whose benefit they laboured, would at the same time put into a practical form the wishes and desires of both these great African travellers and martyrs.
> I have estimated the cost of matériel and personnel for this blockade, and find that it is not greater than has been lavished on some so-called exploring expeditions. The main and central idea is the maintenance by a British association (non-commercial, be it remembered) of an anti-slavery cordon from the Shire to the north end of the Tanganyika, and, if means are forthcoming, to the Albert Nyanza. For this it will be necessary that the Zambesi shall remain an open highway, and Lord Salisbury has pledged his word that it shall be so. By this line constant communication would be kept up, and we should have none of those unsatisfactory plunges into the unknown which, even if successful, cause so much needless anxiety to the friends of those who are thus lost to view.

The last number of The Graphic contains two pages filled with portraits of twenty-four popular novelists. On the railway stations a new cry is heard: "Novels! novels!" The Daily News of Tuesday had an article on "The Evolution of the Novel." These are straws which indicate the current.

REV. EDWARD SMITH, of the Clerkenwell Wesleyan Mission, tells in last week's Methodist Recorder a striking story of spiritual wreckage, compiled from cases met with in his work. If anything will test the fidelity and courage of a Christian worker, he thinks it is the conditions of central London. "False lights are shown on every hand to lure the unwary to their doom; but numbers do not need false lights—they conspire willingly with Satan for their own dishonour. The whole sea-scape around us is dotted with wreckage; but, thank God, we have some salvage on the shore."

TOWER HAMLETS Y.M.C.A.

A member's re-union of this branch was held on Tuesday evening last week at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. Over a hundred members were present to hear from the chairman a graphic account of the recent Conference at Stockholm. In concluding his remarks he exhorted all to make a personal and prayerful effort to win their fellows for Jesus.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin (the president of the branch) also spoke very encouragingly, and pointed out the need that existed for having more branches like the Tower Hamlets, which aims to reach the artisan class of East London. The hon. sec., Mr. S. B. Russell, after reporting progress, asked the members to take a motto for the coming quarter from Romans xii. 10. Mr. Neighbour spoke of the evangelistic work done, and gave an account of a mission held by the members in Limehouse, when thirty professed conversion. Mr. J. Fallaize also gave some interesting cases of conversion in his report of the open-air work. A short address was also given by Mr. Richardson.

CITY YOUNG MEN.

The opening meeting of the winter session of work at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. was held on Monday evening. Every available seat in the lecture hall was filled. The first business of the evening was the distribution of the prizes to the students who were successful in the competitive examinations at the close of last term's educational classes. The awards, which numbered about fifty, were the gift of the chairman of the evening, Mr. J. D. Allcroft, and Mr. George Williams. Mr. Allcroft, from his long business experience in the City, was able to give some good friendly advice to his young friends just starting out in life. He counselled them to pay great attention to the improvement and elevation of their minds, by devoting themselves to earnest study during their long evenings, at the same time not forgetting their spiritual needs. He strongly emphasised the fact that the basis of the Association is the Bible, and that its one great object is the salvation of young men. Mr. Robert Burn, the genial secretary, in presenting the calendar for the session now opening, urgently invited the co-operation of the members in making known the advantages of the Association amongst their fellows. Mr. David Walker, secretary of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., exhorted his younger brethren to stand firm against temptation, and "Be men," giving them also sympathetic counsel calculated to aid them in their Christian lives. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, taking as his theme the prizes, mentioned prizes of a higher nature which are to be attained in life, the greatest of which is to have the love of God in the heart. Mr. George Williams and Captain Cundy subsequently spoke a few words.

IRISH SOCIETY.—A sermon was preached on behalf of this Society in St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Sunday evening, by Rev. J. B. Crozier, D.D., vicar of Holywood, Belfast. The liberal support of Christians is now required to enable the Society to maintain, amid severe financial difficulty, its time-honoured and invaluable missionary work

MAJOR-GENERAL R. S. DOBBS, of Greystones, co. Wicklow, and late of the Madras Army, peacefully fell asleep in Jesus on September 26, at the ripe age of eighty. In an interesting little work published by Mr. G. Herbert, of Dublin, he tells the story of his conversion on a voyage to India in 1827. He became an active, earnest Christian worker, though for some years now he has been unable for much personal service.

GLASGOW CONVENTION.

(By a Special Correspondent.)

To provide more room for the many who in increasing numbers desire to avail themselves of the privileges of the Glasgow Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, the place selected for the meetings of this year was St. Andrew's Hall, one of the largest buildings in the city. The attendances even on the opening day must have rewarded the faith of those who advised the taking of the huge hall. In all, the Conference extended over four days, beginning on Tuesday and ending on Friday. On each day three meetings were held, apart from the early morning gathering for prayer.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 26.

HUMILIATION.

In opening the Conference on Tuesday morning Mr. William Sloan, who presided, remarked that the subject for the day was: "Humiliation, and heart-searching, and confession for sin," and as a keynote he read Psalm li. After a brief season spent in prayer and praise, Mr. Sloan said that they had doubtless all come together with the desire that the Lord would again show Himself unto them, and that while they looked back on the past with thankfulness for the way in which He had used them in his service, yet they looked back with humiliation because of their unfaithfulness.

It had been laid upon his heart to speak a little from the words "We would see Jesus," and in a letter from a friend received before coming to the Conference, this text was sent to him for all who should attend the meetings, "They shall see his face." Those words were spoken of the heavenly state, but might we not expect them to be fulfilled in our present experience, inasmuch as Christ said, "The pure in heart shall see God"? In former years some may have attended the Convention with a desire to see the Lord, but went away disappointed because He had, instead, given them a sight of themselves. That was needed, but now God calls us to a vision of Himself, that we may carry to the world the good tidings of great joy.

Mr. R. Wilson followed with an address on Rev. ii. 7. He reminded his hearers that the last revelation Christ gave of Himself to man was recorded in that book, and that its effect was to make John, the beloved disciple, to fall at his feet as dead. If they were to have the presence of Jesus it must be as an all-searching God teaching them their utter unworthiness. In the messages to the churches the Lord Himself was still speaking to his Church and telling her to be ready for his coming again. The churches were going after anything but their Master; oh, that they might see Jesus, so that He might show them what was the matter.

THE GRACE OF JOY.

At the afternoon gathering the principal address was delivered by Dr. A. A. Bonar. The venerable speaker was in a peculiarly happy mood, and began his address by remarking that the hymn "O for a closer walk with God," although written by a beloved man, had something in it that scarcely helped them. Its retrospective note was not cheering. Dr. Bonar then read a version by a friend in America, characterised by great joy and cheerfulness. Taking that hymn as a keynote, he remarked that it seemed to him one of the best methods of humiliation and confession to select a particular grace in which they ought to be abundant, but in which they failed. For that purpose he would take the grace of joy, much, no doubt, to their surprise. He often wondered why it was that they failed in the grace of joy. It is not a small matter, for the Lord was wroth with his ancient people (Deut. xxviii. 47) because of the absence of joy and gladness in his service. Let us see if all our service can be characterised as joyous. It is of immense importance to us to have this spirit of joy, for "Thou meetest him that rejoiceth." Joy is far oftener mentioned in Scripture than gentleness or goodness. About one hundred times in the Psalms the gladness of God's people is spoken of. The old saints must have been happy people. He would like to have seen them in Jerusalem with their shining faces. Coming to the New Testament we notice that in Galatians joy is placed second among the fruits of the Spirit—"The kingdom of heaven is righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Is not that a rebuke to some sombre Christians here? They seem afraid to smile, or afraid to show that they are very happy. He could never get over that singular passage in Peter, "Whom having not seen ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." He did not often meet with cases of unspeakable joy, but he once met with a young man who, two days before he died, said of his experiences, "It's joy unthinkable." Was not that full of glory? It ought to be a matter of deep humiliation with us that we have so little of this grace. Paul prayed for the Colossians that they might be strengthened with joyfulness in the midst of suffering. That is a good test as to how we are getting on.

Should we not oftener think of the "oil of joy" when dealing with sinners? If we had abundance of joy we should gain an easy victory over the gaieties of the world. When young believers are feeble let us offer them more joy. Contentment, too, would come from a possession of this grace. If we were filled with joy we should never hear of jars and discords in our work. The same grace would have another effect. It would be a mighty help to us in converting souls. Do we not feel that when we are very joyful our arrows are sharper and our words more powerful? Then the grace of joy cures several faults. It cures backward Christians of their backwardness.

Pastor Otto Stockmayer gave the chief address at the evening meeting. He pointed out that there is one sin above all others, of which the Holy Ghost came to convict and reprove the world—the sin of unbelief. We know the parable of the man seeking the treasure in the field, but do we realise that the Lord is seeking through all lands his "peculiar treasure" in men and women whose hearts are perfect towards Himself?

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 27.

CONSECRATION.

On Wednesday, the subject set apart for meditation was "Consecration," and at the morning meeting the address was given by Rev. John Riddell. He pointed out that consecration must be a life and not a word. We are not our own property, but the exclusive property of Him who has redeemed us. The one great fault which lies at the root of our faulty consecration is the want of a proper conception of the truth that we are redeemed. We confuse emancipation with redemption, and think that Christ has merely set us free. Redemption means more than that: it means a change of masters. Mr. Riddell made an extensive use of the experiences of the Israelites in the wilderness in illustration of this point. In return for God's guidance, protection, and provision for us, it is our business to walk with God and learn of Him. All our sorrows and failures arise from our neglecting to do that. If we are to be consecrated we must have the Spirit teach us that there is no deeper desire in God's heart than to have the exclusive use and possession of everyone bought with Emmanuel's blood. There is not only God's consecration of us, but there is this word to be considered, "Consecrate yourselves unto the Lord this day." What does that mean? We may find a parrallel in the fact that although God blessed the Sabbath day and sanctified it, He yet commands us to remember the Sabbath day and to sanctify it. The life of consecration is just the continuing in a surrendered attitude toward our Father. It is in the continuance that we often fail. Israel did not fail in the act of consecration, but in the life of consecration. Again and again during the forty years their consecration kept breaking down. Is that the best we are to expect? Some may answer that that is all they have any experience of. But if a continuous life of consecration is not possible, why was the Lord "grieved with that generation"? Caleb stood on the same footing as the rest of the Lord's people, and yet he uniformly conquered where they uniformly broke down? The secret of his perfect consecration was that he was satisfied with the Lord.

In the afternoon the first speaker was Rev. Dr. Morris, who gave a suggestive address on 2 Chron. xx. 26, "On the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of Berachah, or blessing." Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan, next addressed the convention from Rom. vi. 11, and Gal. ii. 20. He specially addressed those who had failed to enter into the life of consecration, and reminded his fellow Christians that there was sin somewhere at the root of the failure. How can we be so free from sin that we can give ourselves up to God and have the hindrances removed? The verses read seem to show that God's method of dealing with sin is by death.

Both the addresses at the evening meeting well sustained the interest of the Convention in the subject for the day. The first speaker was Rev. W. Haslam, who emphasised the truth that there are two parts in consecration. and that one part is more important than the other. There is the dedication of ourselves to the Lord, but the greater part is the Lord's taking that which we offer Him. The greater part is the believing in God's part of the matter, and it is impossible for us to believe that without rejoicing. In Luke xviii. we read of a great multitude following Christ rejoicing. That was the consecrated host. One of the marks of a consecrated man may be found in the words of the Apostle, "We have given up all to follow thee." We say that to ourselves and among ourselves, but do we say it to the Lord Himself? Do we mean everything? Do we not find a lot of self remaining? He once gave away a torn book to a friend, but for several days afterwards he kept finding odd leaves about the floor. Do those odd leaves prove that he had not given up the book? No; they reminded him that he had given up the book. Let us not be discouraged because we find some of self remaining behind, but let us give again and again. The multitude spoken of by Luke were said to have "followed" Christ, which meant being indwelt in by Christ. How then could they help praising God?

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins in his address defined consecration not as an attainment, but as an attitude that is to be maintained. Why are we continually failing in the consecration of daily life? We break down because we lack power, and we have not power because we lack faith, and faith is absent because we want consecration. In the case of the disciples (Mark ix. 28) Christ pointed out the cause of failure. But is there any power in faith? No; it is that which binds us to the power. When unbelief breaks the contact the power is gone. What is the hindrance to the faith of the disciples? The Lord Jesus indicated it when He asked, "What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?" There is the secret; how can we believe while in that spirit? We cannot believe while there is rivalry instead of brotherhood.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 28.

THE SPIRIT'S PRESENCE AND POWER.

Rev. David Russell, of Glasgow, speaking on this subject on Thursday, remarked that on the memorable day of Pentecost, the disciples found themselves in the midst of a marvellous power. Peter, who had trembled most, spoke and preached in a tone so unfaltering that he did not seem to be the same man. In the present day, we are to look for power from on high, and the amount of power we receive depends on the prayer and receptiveness of believers.

Dr. Morris said we could not have the power without the presence. Thank God, He keeps the power in his own hand.

Colonel Oldham was the first speaker in the afternoon, and he dwelt specially upon the truths contained in John xiv. The speaker invited attention to the opening verses of the chapter, and remarked that if there was one word in the Bible more unhappily translated than another it was the world translated "mansions." That wrong translation he believed had given rise to much erroneous doctrine. Christians had come to look forward to having a mansion in heaven, and did not think much of God's mansions below. The word was really the same as that translated "abode" in ver. 23. God's people were his dwelling-place, and Christ wished his disciples to understand that it was not He alone who was the abiding-place of the Father, but that the Father would abide in his people as well. He wanted to bring them into the place where He was — abiding in the Father. Referring to the promise in John xvi. 7—11, Colonel Oldham said that he often heard Christians praying the Lord to convince people of sin and righteousness and judgment, and they were astonished that He did not do it. They overlooked the fact that Christ said that when the Holy Spirit comes "unto you," He would convince the world of these things. It was only when the Church received the Holy Ghost that the world was convinced of sin. It was a remarkable fact that not once in the Epistles were they told to pray for the Spirit. They had merely to receive Him.

The second speaker was Rev. E. H. Hopkins, who based his remarks on Acts xix. 2, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" He was sure that question had presented a difficulty to almost every student of Scripture. It is clear that it is not possible to be a Christian apart from the Holy Ghost. But there is a fulness of the Spirit which may come after conversion. Those two blessings are not always simultaneous. Mr. Hopkins quoted several passages to illustrate this point, and remarked in closing that there could be no such thing as spiritual enduement without spiritual adjustment.

On the Convention re-assembling in the evening, an address was delivered by Rev. J. J. Luce. They often said they wanted more of the Spirit, but the truth was the Spirit wanted more of them. He was waiting for them, they had not to wait for Him. They might know the theology of the Spirit's presence and power, but never know what it was to be indwelt by Him. The other speaker was Rev. F. B. Meyer, who at once arrested the attention of his audience by a telling illustration. Water, he said, revealed itself to them in three different forms, as a solid, as a liquid, and as vapour. If he were to ask which is the strongest form, those who had seen an iceberg in mid Atlantic might say the solid; those who had seen the Falls of Niagara might say the liquid; but all in the audience who knew anything of machinery would say that water was strongest in the form of steam. They could hardly see steam, but that was without doubt the mightiest form of water. It might seem to many of his hearers that they were talking of something far too etherial to be of any practical use to them, but they should remember that some of the mightiest forces in the universe are unseen. Probably the mightiest manifestation of God is in the mighty, unseen, glorious Spirit. Some of them had been working by hand power; but for the future they might work by steam power, if they would yoke themselves to the unseen, eternal Spirit of God. Mr. Meyer gave five tests whereby Christians might know if they were filled with the Spirit. (1) Were they brought under the dominion of any besetting sin? (2) Did they find that after a convention they "ran down" the next week, and lost the blessing? (3) Was Jesus Christ real and precious to them? (4) Were they sure of their adoption? (5) Were they conscious of being able to win souls to Jesus? Following these tests Mr. Meyer directed attention to "the great chapter on the Holy Ghost" (Rom. viii.), and pointed out nine things which the Holy Ghost did for those whom He filled. (1) He made them free from the law of sin and death, ver. 2. (2) He gave them life and peace—the quiet heart, ver. 6. (3) The indwelling of Jesus, ver. 10. (4) Lifting power, ver. 11. (5) He helped them to mortify the deeds of the body, ver. 13. (6) He led them day by day, ver. 14. (7) He assured them of their adoption, ver. 15. (8) He brings heaven into the soul, ver. 23. (9) He was in them as a Spirit of intercession, ver. 26.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 29.

GOD'S KEEPING POWER.

This was the subject of meditation on Friday, the closing day of the Convention. The opening address was from Rev. J. J. Luce, who told of a believer who requested that the word "kept" might be engraved on his tombstone, because that one word contained the history of his life. Many another child of God had felt that. The speaker indicated three passages, putting the subject of the day in various lights. The first of these was 2 Sam. ii. 9: "He will keep the feet of his saints." That word contains a promise that they should be "kept" as regards their daily life, their life in business, and in the home. They should have a life which would stand the test, and do rough work in a rough world. The second passage read was 1 Sam. xxii. 22, 23, and Mr. Luce emphasised the words of David to the fearful Abiathar, "with me in safeguard." Many Christians felt like Abiathar, escaped, but not secure. But the Lord kept them from the care of worry and anxiety. A working man to whom he once spoke said of his wife, "She wants to feel safe before she is safe." That was a common experience. Yet a third passage was read, Jude 1, "preserved in Jesus Christ." The revised version said, "kept for Jesus Christ." Mr. Luce gave those words as a motto to his fellow Christians. They were kept by Jesus Christ, in Jesus Christ, and for Jesus Christ. He closed by pointing out that the Lord kept his children from the net, and also from stumbling.

Rev. W. Haslam said they were wont to dwell upon the death of Christ; they could not dwell on that too much, but they forgot too much the ascension of the Lord, and that from the ascended Lord they had the power of the Holy Ghost. Was there any need for them to be kept? Yes; for there was temptation all along the line. There were not only God and the sinner in the transaction; there was another person, the devil. They were tempted at home and in themselves, but the blood of Jesus could cleanse them from the things of the flesh. And when they were delivered from the power of the flesh, they were opposed again—the world was all around them. To the world there succeeded the wiles of the devil, but over all these they had power through the ascended Lord.

The afternoon gathering was first addressed by Pastor Otto Stockmayer, who reminded his hearers that when they went out as Pentecostal people they at once met the prince of this world. They should not let Satan meet them directly, but should let him meet Christ, the overcomer. He pointed out that among other things Christians would be kept from jealousies between each other, and that new openings of the Scriptures would be given to them, thus furnishing new helps of security.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said he had not been to so many conventions without being sure that all those who received a great blessing were led straight to the Cross. Ministers who had got a blessing at that Convention would find themselves brought into collision with many members in their churches who only loved worldliness. He remembered one minister whose reception of the fuller life so aroused many of his people against him that it became a question whether he should go, or they. Mr. Meyer said this minister came and asked his advice and he replied, "Let Jonah be cast out of the ship, but let the captain stay." Since then his friend had worked on with half his salary, but the church was full, and the power of God was with him. In proportion as the blessing they got at those meetings was a real one, the devil would try to steal it from them. On going home they would find that temptation would not come to them in any great thing, but in a little one, and they would wonder if they had not deceived themselves as to their having received a blessing. But the religion spoken from that platform was not a superfine thing, it was a good home-spun which would stand the wear of every-day life. When trials came let them remember they were in Christ, in the love of God, and they would stop in, if they didn't step out. There were only three things that could tempt them out: (1) Pride; (2) worldly care; (3) yielding to sin.

Although the night was wet and dismal, the attendance at the closing meeting of the Convention showed no falling off. Indeed, the large hall was crowded to its utmost capacity.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson dwelt specially upon the solemnity of the gathering, as being the last. As a parting word, he referred to Psalm cxix. 133, and 2 Tim. i. 12, chiefly basing his remarks on the latter text. In emphasising Paul's expression, "I am not ashamed," he said that shame would be connected with their profession until they lost that self-reputation of which they were so proud. Where there was not an intensity of love, there was sure to be shame.

The closing words were spoken by Rev. E. H. Hopkins, who led his hearers to a contemplation of the rest of God's people, as spoken of in Heb. iv. 1. What did they know of this rest? It was not the rest of conscience, but of the soul; something positive, God's rest. Many were expecting peaceful rest in heaven, but they might know much of the peace of heaven before they got there.

During Friday a meeting, specially for ministers, was held. Rev. E. H. Hopkins presided, and a free interchange of opinion took place between the brethren on the questions discussed during the Conference. At all the meetings, save that on Thursday morning, Mr. W. Sloan presided with great tact and geniality, and was loyally assisted and supported by his energetic co-convener, Dr. Elder Cumming.

Another correspondent writes:—Some memorable gatherings, which will stand as a landmark in the spiritual history of many hundreds, were held in the Western capital of Scotland last week. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were mightily manifested at several of the meetings, especially at the one of Thursday evening, from which the multitudes crowded out into the streets with a solemnity, mingled with a gladness, which was quite remarkable. It was not that anything was said more striking than has often been reported in these columns, but because there was so much of the eternal and unseen brought to bear on consciences and hearts.

Large numbers of people gathered from all parts of the country, taking advantage of the many cheap trips for the Exhibition. Probably the same reason has accounted for the many ministers who have been present at the meetings. It has been a splendid spectacle for any devout man to look upon those immense congregations, and to realise that many a torch was being lighted which in distant parishes and remote towns would kindle a fire that might spread, never to be extinguished.

Care was taken to define the teaching, repudiating all thought of sinlessness or perfection; and insisting on the duty of those present yielding themselves to God that He might fulfil in them the full purpose of his will, and secure all the possibilities of Christian life and usefulness.

The early prayer-meetings at 7 a.m. were conducted by Pastor Stockmayer, and were much prized; and a meeting for ministers only was full of blessed testimony and praise. We cannot but be thankful that such opportunities are being multiplied for the gathering of Christians, irrespective of minor differences, on the common platform of Scripture, and for the quickening of the inner life. And where they are characterised, as this one was, by careful Bible exposition and exhortations to more devoted lives, it is impossible to doubt that immense good must result.

LIVERPOOL TOWN MISSION.

Under the superintendence of Mr. J. B. Bain the work of this Mission continues to extend. Three new halls have been added, and at one of these in a recent week thirty professed decision for Christ. At some of the meetings there are nightly conversions, and a real work of grace is going on. An "occasional paper" lately issued, says:—

The committee have reason to be much encouraged with the work that is being done, but they are the more concerned for that which is left undone, and which might be attempted if only means were provided. Unfortunately the income of the Society is considerably below the existing requirements, so that no new appointments can be considered. This is the more to be regretted, because several of the missionaries have grown old in the service of the Society, and must now be allowed partial retirement, as they are no longer able for full employment. No one will grudge pensions to those who have given the best years of their lives to the self-denying labours of a missionary, and who cannot be expected to make any provision for old age out of their modest stipend of £80 a year. It is estimated that between £300 and £400 more will be required for the current year. The open-air work during the past summer has been carried on with vigour, and results have not been lacking. A man told the missionary in charge of one station that he had been prevented from destroying his life. It was touching to see this fellow weeping as he told his story. On another occasion a well-dressed man called one of the men to speak to him; just outside the crowd, he decided for Christ, and before all the people said he would follow Jesus. Two "all-day meetings" have been held in front of St. George's Hall. But perhaps the best meetings have been those conducted in the courts and alleys, right among the people. At one meeting when testimonies as to blessings received were called for, fourteen held up their hands, mostly men, some up in years, and others in the full vigour of their manhood. After this eight similarly testified to having received good. It was a solemn moment, and with glad hearts, and heads bare, the workers gave expression to their pent-up feelings in the words of the Doxology. Among the many striking cases of blessing are those of a husband and wife, both the victims of the drink, who were in succession soundly converted and restored to a happy, godly life.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

Our readers will recollect that some months ago Mrs. Hilton met with an accident, which completely prostrated her in health, and confined her to her room. We are glad to say that she has now to some extent recovered strength, though she is still a prisoner in the house, and likely to be for some time to come. Added to the physical suffering she has endured, Mrs. Hilton has felt keenly her removal, during these weary months, from actual participation in the work to which she has devoted so many busy years. Some extracts from her new Report, prepared, we may say, under difficult circumstances, will be read with interest by all friends of work among the poor:—

"There are times when it seems that the battle is too hard, and that the misery will crush out hope and paralyse energy; but God is faithful to his promises, and across the path that seemed all darkness a light breaks, and those for whom there seemed no earthly hope are lifted up, and enabled to go on their way rejoicing.

"It is touching to note the admirable way in which many poor women live. Although their own lives are one long sacrifice, they will cheerfully undertake any service for one who appears to be in greater suffering. One of our mothers, a widow with four children, took into her room a newly-made widow with two little ones. When asked how she would manage, she said, 'Oh, very well, I think. You see she is new to her trouble yet; but God always fits the back to the burden.' We watched closely to see that extreme want should not touch them, yet we were careful not to tarnish the beauty of the deed by any display of charity. Such acts as these are frequent, and their most striking feature is the perfect unconsciousness of those who perform them that they have done anything extraordinary.

"The Crêche has never been more needed than in the past year. It has been a haven of refuge to the poor mother who, if she could not leave her children in such care, would be with them in a fireless room, without sufficient food. We often wish we could translate the words that issue from the baby lips when the little people are brought into the Crêche in the morning. Doubtless they are songs of thanksgiving which are borne upwards, and will descend in blessing on those who have helped to provide such a home of brightness for them.

"It is not only the children that are benefited by the Institution; it is a blessing to the mothers also. They are softened and touched by the loving care bestowed on their little ones, and when baby folds her tiny hands in her last sleep, it is to us the mother comes to talk over her sweet and loving ways, and to pour out her gratitude for all our kindness to her darling. The attendance has been as large as in any previous year, and it was with much regret that we were obliged to close twice in the year for a short time while there was an epidemic in the neighbourhood. The general health of the children has been very good, and visitors frequently remark on the bright looks and rosy cheeks which are to be found in our nurseries.

"The Infirmary is always a bright spot. Here frail, delicate little sufferers are nursed back to health and strength, and it is wonderful to see the improvement that a few weeks of special care will make. Nurse is quite proud when one of her little charges is considered well enough to go downstairs to the larger nursery. The long winter and scarcity of work brought much suffering outside the Crêche, and we were very thankful to those friends whose kindness enabled us to lend a helping hand. When the mother is ill for any length of time, and the father out of work, the home must be wrecked but for a little timely help.

"We have admitted nineteen fresh cases into the Home during the year, and fourteen children have left. One of the saddest parts of our work is to see the partings between mothers and children. A mother brings her baby girl to us while she goes into a hospital. She cannot tell if she will ever see her again, and she tries so hard to keep the tears back while she kisses her, and tells how she has never been away from her before, and she hopes she will not be any trouble.

"A widow in the first freshness of her bereavement has to break up her little home and fight the hard battle of life single-handed. She cannot keep all her children with her, so she brings the two youngest to us, two little girls aged three and four years. The children are quite unconscious of the impending change, and the mother will not speak till the nurse has taken them away, lest she should break down and sadden them. Then the tears come, and in broken voice she tries to say how she knows it is for the best, but she shall miss them so when their bedtime comes.

"On the other hand, we have our times of rejoicing, when the mother comes back from the hospital, refreshed and strengthened, to take her baby to her arms again; or the widow, after a few years' struggle, makes a little home, and gathers her children about her.

"In reference to our balance-sheet, it will be seen that there is a balance of about £100 due to the treasurer. We have striven hard to keep down expenses, but our contributions are less than last year, and we have had no special aid. We held a small sale last month, the result of which will appear in next year's Report, as it was too late for this. This, we hope, will add about £50 to the funds. We also intend holding a bazaar in May next."

AN AFTER-MEETING.

A correspondent of The Methodist Times, in an account of the service at St. James's Hall on the evening of Sunday week, says:—

To the after-meeting the great bulk of the congregation remained, and as the seats were vacated they were immediately occupied by those persons who could not be admitted before, and who had hung about the doors during the whole service, in the expectation of getting in. The orchestral band was now dispensed with, and a harmonium substituted as the accompaniment to the singing. One of the Sisters presided at the instrument. After the singing of "Rescue the perishing" and "Pass me not," Rev. T. D. Barnes, late chaplain to the troops in the Soudan, offered prayer. Mr. Price Hughes then spoke a few solemn words of warning to the unsaved, showed the awful consequences of rejecting salvation, and then asked the sinner to come to Christ now. The vast audience was here deeply moved, and I observed several in tears. "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," was next sung, after which Mr. Hughes prayed, concluding with another appeal to the unconverted.

Then occurred a most touching sight. An old man, with hair as white as snow, over whose head more than the threescore years and ten appeared to have passed, came tottering along the centre passage. Unbidden tears were chasing one another down his wrinkled cheeks, and he was sobbing. The word spoken had found a home in his heart, and though during all his previous life his back had been turned upon God, he could shout before he left the inquiry-room on Sunday night—

I'm satisfied with Jesus,
  He's everything to me;
His dying love has won my heart,
  And now He sets me free.

Among the others who were dealt with in the inquiry-room and found peace, were a Frenchman and a German.

BRITTANY.—Dear Sir,—In sending you the report of the recent conference of workers in Brittany, under the presidency of Rev. Carr J. Glyn, I ought strictly to have used the proper title of the committee by which the work at Tremel as a centre is carried on. It is the "Breton Evangelical Mission," being supported by Christians of all denominations; and is thereby distinguished from the good works of the Baptists and Welsh Methodists in other parts of Brittany.

The Salvation Army.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER & SELF-DENIAL

OCTOBER 6 to 13, 1888.

WHY SHOULD YOU DENY YOURSELF IN ORDER TO HELP FORWARD THE WORK OF THE SALVATION ARMY?

I.—Because the one great object of the Army is worthy of the deepest sympathy of every true lover of Jesus Christ.

The worst enemies of this Army never attempt to deny that in its ranks there is unceasing effort to seek and to save the lost. Indeed, our critics often complain that this one idea so completely absorbs the attention of the Army as to exclude due regard for other necessary things. But let us see what this one idea includes.

We all know, alas! only too well how utterly God is forgotten by multitudes of the people, even where the utmost effort has been made to evangelise them, and therefore one cannot but rejoice if even by means of a big drum some are compelled to turn their heads, at least for a little while, away from the public-house, and every other sinner's resort, and to listen to anything about God and eternity. No one can deny that the Army's 40,000 meetings and marches every week arouse the attention of multitudes who would otherwise never give a thought to religion; and if nothing more than this were done, would you not like to feel that for one week you had some share in the doing of it?

(b) The proclamation of mercy and deliverance.

Nobody disputes that the Army does in its songs and addresses continually declare that there is mercy in Jesus for all who will come to Him, and that there is not only the promise of a deliverance from hell in the future, but a salvation from evil here and now by the power of an Almighty Saviour. Many charge the Army with unreasoning reiteration in this direction, and describe their speaking as consisting simply of urgent calls to "Come to Jesus." But even if it were so, to have this call given again and again to crowds of the poorest and worst in 40,000 meetings outdoors and in, every week, is, after all, a great work, and ought you not to help it?

(c) The securing of instant decision and surrender to God.

Everybody admits that the Army presses its hearers to decide the question of salvation on the spot, and that in the most public and pronounced manner. It requires men and women to walk out before mixed audiences, and kneeling in the sight of their old companions, and often of a scoffing crowd, to pray for mercy. This very method constitutes one of the objections raised, but there can be no question that it most remarkably succeeds in inducing thousands of profligates and prodigals in the most open and avowed manner to go and return to their Father and commence a holy life. Ought you not therefore to help them?

The system adopted of urging every professed convert to testify publicly from the first, whatever disadvantages it may have, has unquestionably resulted in raising up hosts of men and women who are always ready to declare that whereas once they were spiritually blind now they see. When you hear that more than 40,000 such persons were induced to come to the Alexandra Palace, on July 9, at their own cost, not only paying travelling expenses but a charge for admission, in order to unite in thanksgiving to God for His Salvation, ought you to listen to those who would call such simple, though noisy and vulgar, witnesses, "blasphemers"? Ought you not rather to help to multiply such "evidences of Christianity"?

It is well known that this Army calls upon all its converts, and upon multitudes of them with success, to spend all the time, money, and effort they can in work for the Master; to wear upon their very dress tokens of their being absolutely His Sons and Soldiers, and to give up, when able, their whole life to the War. When you hear that more than 6,500 young men and women have responded to the call, and have left home, friends, and situations, not only without any guarantee of salary, but with the all but certainty of privations, sufferings, and toils, for Christ's sake, you must feel, as the Bishop of Manchester once said, when in Melbourne:—"I must say of the Salvation Army, in the first place, that I believe it to be inspired by the noblest impulse that can direct human energies—by the desire to make sinful men love and follow Christ. I see in its leading ministers and agents a holy self-denying enthusiasm which, on the large scale, is nowhere equalled at the present time. If the Master were here I am sure He would own them and honour them and set them above me. If they don't shame all of us into more earnest, self-denying efforts to fight the great foes of Christ and of humanity, it must be because our hearts are cold, and we have lost the glow of our first love." Will you not help them?

(f) The object of the Army includes the spread of salvation throughout the whole world.

That this is the object of every Salvationist there can be no question; and as they have already, within eight years of sending their first officer out from England, planted their flag in 32 countries and colonies, where they have no less than 3,333 officers wholly employed as Foreign Missionaries, holding 2,300,000 services annually, there can be no doubt that, whoever may like or dislike it, they will go on pushing salvation into every quarter of the globe. As the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage once said in New York, "They will sing their way round the world."

If you could have these Salvationists made altogether such as you wish, or secure a similar agency more to your taste, which would advance with equal resolution and speed, it might be preferable. But these poor people, who emerged only eight years ago from Whitechapel, could not have made such progress had not God been with them. Therefore, will you not help them?

We think that under whichever aspect you may regard the object of this Army, it must command your practical sympathy. It is impossible to dispute that the Army is at least striving hard to accomplish the very purposes for which your Saviour came into the world, and which "demands your soul, your life, your all." You are only asked, by one week's special self-denial, to give the Army a little help. Can you say No?

II.—Because there is no satisfactory reason why you should not help the Army.

When we think of the thousand millions of our fellow-creatures perishing for lack of knowledge, we often wonder how any Christian can listen to petty criticisms on any body of men and women who are devoting their whole lives and energies to the work of publishing salvation. Can it be supposed that there could be any workmen in the vast vineyard with whom many faults might not easily be found? But when truly self-denying devotion and successful labour for the one great end are seen, can there be any justifiable excuse for refusing help?

(a) The Salvation Army is said not to be doing the whole will of God, nay, to be even neglecting this or that part of it.

But, alas! the same objection might be raised against any set of workers, according to the varying opinions prevalent amongst the persons who criticise. Will not a moment's thought show the impossibility of any body of Christians labouring, in word and doctrine, exactly according to the views of all the bodies around them? "And there are differences of administration, but the same Lord."

Suppose the Salvation Army be only a foot of the one great Body, is it reasonable to refuse to help it because it does not perform the services of the head or the hand? If you turn your back upon these humble labourers because they do not see it to be their duty to say and do all that which you say and do, is it not possible that you may thereby come into condemnation yourself for refusing to help these humble pioneers, who are straining every nerve to bring the whole world to the feet of Him whom you call Saviour and King? Would it not be better to help them to do what they are doing, and leave them to His guidance?

(b) But the Army is said by some people to be propagating erroneous views on some points.

Even assuming that the views of these critics is correct, what does this amount to? That tens of thousands of people who formerly spent their leisure in drunken revelry, debauchery, and folly, but who are now employing their spare time in speaking and singing for Jesus to crowds as utterly Godless as they once were, do not in every matter hold the same opinions as are held by those who criticise them. Which is best? To leave the millions who have never heard of Christ in utter darkness, or to send them these rough, though possibly on some non-essential points, erring teachers? Certainly, you had better use the tools ready to hand—anyway, until you can get better ones. Dear friend, will you not help them?

(c) But it is remarked that the Army is not friendly to other religious organisations.

But how this statement can be made we find it hard to understand. Thousands of the converts of the Army are already enrolled in membership with the churches. Hundreds more occupy ministerial, evangelistic, and other official positions in them. Aggressive efforts of every kind have been instituted in every quarter of the globe, either inspired by our success, or in direct imitation of our means, from which an enormous harvest of souls has already been reaped, and which it cannot be doubted will yield still further results, alike honouring to God and beneficial to man. Indeed, it is no uncommon thing for it to be said by those outside the ranks of the Army who are familiar with its influence upon the churches, that the indirect blessings it has conferred upon the Church exceed the direct. Even if the Bishop of Durham was mistaken in saying that the Army had recalled the Church "to the lost ideal—the compulsion of the souls of men," it is evident that they cannot have diminished the interest taken in other good work. No, no, and even if they were lacking in charity the best way to teach them better must be to show them more practical love.

(d) "But you have been told that——"

It is astonishing how many scandalous stories about the Salvation Army are current amongst Christian people. Yet some of these, like the great Sweating story about the Army of the spring of the year, were found on examination to be absolutely without foundation. You should, at least, before withholding help on account of any evil report, write to Headquarters to ask if it be true, as the Officers there are always glad to reply to such inquiries. But even if all who are in the Army are not worthy of your help, ought you not to help those who are?

(e) But perhaps you may not like their ways of working, yourself.

Is that a satisfactory reason for not helping them? Would you in your sphere of Christian work be pleased if God and everyone else were to refuse to help you unless they found your ways pleasing them in every particular?

Nay, is not this a special opportunity for self-denial? It is perfectly certain that vast multitudes of the common people are simply delighted with the Army's ways. They crowd to their noisiest meetings, listen attentively for hours to their exhortations and songs, and contribute of their poverty many thousands of pounds annually to sustain the enterprise. So will you not deny yourself for once the pleasing sensation of giving to promote what is just in accordance with your tastes, and help what suits the taste of others widely different in education and position from yourself?

(f) But the Army will not last.

Surely this is a desperate objection, for it half admits that the thing is, and would be, good if it did last. We admit that many good movements have not lasted, but that can be no reason for withholding help from this one. On the contrary, it is exactly a reason why you should help it, and that quickly. You may not always have the opportunity to do so. You should seize it whilst you can, and then if the Army should cease from its great work you will not be to blame, and if God is really its Creator and Friend, it will probably last after all.

III.—Because the World's unsupplied need is still so vast.

You believe that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world, and that if His salvation were received by the people of every land, all other needs would soon be supplied as a result. But, alas! after nearly nineteen centuries how far we are from the realisation of the grand Bethlehem song of peace and good-will.

Not only are many millions of the people—in many cities from 60 to 90 per cent. of the total population—found outside places of worship, and entirely indisposed to take any notice of God, but the day of leisure is turned to account for drunken revelry and all manner of sensual pleasure. Are not those Anarchical and Socialistic principles, subversive of the very foundations of Society, rapidly spreading; whilst crowds of the young men and women who have had a School Board education, so far from showing evidence of improvement, are notorious for such disorderly and even ruffianly conduct in public streets and parks, as makes it unpleasant, and in many cases unsafe, for single women to walk to and from a place of worship alone? This is no time for mild measures. Ought you not to help the people who go out amongst those crowds, and labour in the only way they can to turn them to the Lord?

In thousands of these villages, evening after evening, there is absolutely no place of worship open. The villagers have no place of resort but the public-house, and in many cases there is no successful effort to evangelise them made.

The Salvation Army has opened rooms in hundreds of villages during the past two years, and proposes to give every villager somewhere to pass his time other than the public-house every evening. In view of this state of things, ought you not to help?

The word "classes" has recently been applied peculiarly to the wealthy, and many of these are doubtless becoming scandalously irreligious. But suppose the Salvation Army can do nothing for the multitudes of educated young people, whom it is admitted no other agency is reaching, there are "classes" to which most people admit its adaptation. It can be no exaggeration to say that there are hundreds of thousands of the people who frequently get drunk, and if no drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God, how vastly important to reach these multitudes.

The parade of lust, the market of whoredom established in all the principal streets of our cities, is a disgrace to the nation. But this Army, with its scores of officers specially devoted to this branch of work and rescue homes, is able to report that out of 1,005 poor girls who have passed through our five London Homes alone 860 are now living righteously, whilst the Army's processions and platforms show saved drunkards, harlots, thieves, gamblers, vagrants, and scoundrels of every description, who are undoubtedly the most likely to attract the attention and secure the salvation of those of the class to which they formerly belonged. Should you not help them?

With scarcely an exception it is notorious that the men of each Christian nation in Europe and America are becoming more and more indifferent even to the outward form of worship, and if in Russia this is not the case it is nevertheless quite certain that utter darkness as to the simple way of salvation generally prevails. The Saviour is practically unknown by the very peoples who are called by his name. The most essential truths of his Gospel are ignored, if not disputed, by many thousands of those who are described as his priests or ministers, and unless new efforts be made on a scale utterly beyond anything yet attempted, the very idea that men need a Saviour will be dropped from men's minds. How, then, can you possibly refuse a little help for once to the Army, which has raised up during the last seven years thousands of witnesses to the one old faith in France, Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, and has 549 agents labouring in those countries? Tens of thousands of the inhabitants of those countries cry to you piteously for help. Will you not unite to send it them?

The civilised world has not yet so much as formed any adequate idea of the population of the Dark Continent. But accepting the rough guess of two hundred millions, what a vast work remains to be done. A few missionaries, in all about 850, are scattered over its twelve million square miles; but these must be multiplied by hundreds if anything effectual is to be done for the vast hidden nations lying within this immense area. Yet is there a Missionary Society which is planning to send any large number of missionaries out this year? The Salvation Army, it is true, have merely established themselves at the Cape, and have only this year commenced their efforts amongst the native races. But as the three officers sent out in 1883 have already been multiplied to 185, and as operations amongst the Zulus, Caffres, and other native races have already resulted in very remarkable conversions, it is reasonable to expect that with help they will become in Africa as elsewhere a mighty power. Will you help them?

(f) Think of the huge nations of Asia, of the 250,000,000 of India, of the 400,000,000 of China, of Japan with its 34,000,000 eagerly longing for the light of some religion that can bring them peace and rest; to say nothing of Arabs, Persians, Afghans, Burmese, Siamese, and Islanders, numbering in all 200,000,000, with only 300 missionaries amongst them all!

When you reflect that the Salvation Army has sent out within six years 235 officers to India, including the fifty just landed in Bombay, and that within the same period these have been enabled to raise up 120 Native officers, while 20 more are about to be sent from Canada, you will perceive that the Army is determined to push on to every nation. Will you help them?

IV.—Because a Week of extra Self-Denial is not likely to injure you or anyone under your influence.

You will note that we do not ask anyone to deprive themselves of anything necessary to health and vigour. But it is manifest that most Christians could for a time at least do without some of these ordinary comforts, or spare some article of adornment, furniture, or equipage to help to further the interests of the kingdom of Jesus Christ without serious inconvenience.

V.—Because you can in this way Help the Army without lessening your contributions to other good works.

One of the most important considerations connected with this proposal is the fact that if you thereby save ever so small a sum, you will not only have found out how to help the Salvation Army without turning aside a penny that you would otherwise contribute to other purposes, but you will have discovered a new reserve, enabling you to do more for God in the future. Will you make this invaluable experiment?

VI.—Because the Salvation Army people deny themselves.

Many of the 6,500 separated Officers have left comfortable homes and tender, watchful friends to spend the remainder of their lives among the poorest and most wretched of the Anglo-Saxon population, or to live with the natives of India, Africa, the West Indies, or the Continental nations.

Tens of thousands of our soldiers deny themselves evening after evening of needed rest after their hard day's toil to go out and labour for the salvation of others, and that often in the face of all manner of scorn and violence. And now, when you find that these very people are about to make this desperate effort by denying themselves the very necessaries of life in order to save a little money by which they can still further help forward the war for souls, you cannot help feeling that they have a strong claim upon your sympathy. Will you let them leave you entirely behind?

VII.—Because you ought to esteem it a Privilege to have fellowship with so many of Christ's poorest followers.

It is not every week that you are asked to unite in a hearty effort to please God, and save souls, with crowds of poor brethren in every quarter of the globe. This grand combination of prayer and fasting amongst faithful servants of the Lord, residing on both sides of the world, and from Burmah (if not China) to San Francisco, is not an everyday affair. You cannot doubt that such an effort will greatly please the Saviour, and bring down multiplied blessings upon the world. If you cannot personally witness and share in one of the universal three hours of prayer, on the evening of Friday, you can join in it at home. No, you must not be left out of this great week.

VIII.—We urge this upon your attention, above all, because the Saviour says:—"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me."

"Give to him that asketh thee; and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away."

You will not be able to say, it is not in your power to do anything in this very special way. Since God commands us to give, as He makes His sun to shine upon the evil and the good, you can have no further question but that you ought to share in this week's practical devotion.

You must not risk hearing Him say, "Ye did it not to Me."

Please fill up this slip of paper, tear it out, and send it with the result of your Self-Denial!

For the glory of God and the extension of His Kingdom, I desire to have fellowship with the Salvation Army in their Week of Self-Denial on behalf of a perishing world, and I enclose £ s. d., as my contribution to the Self-Denial Fund.

THE MANCHESTER CONVENTION.

EVANGELISATION AT HOME & ABROAD.

(By our Special Reporter.)

The annual Christian Convention at Manchester was held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, last week; on the first two days at the Conference Hall, Strangeways (Boys' and Girls' Refuge), and on the third at the Central Hall, Oldham-street. The season was one of distinct spiritual profit to many who attended the meetings, which, though varied in form and proximate purpose, were pervaded by one spirit, and subjected to but one motive. That motive was the glory of God in effective evangelisation at home and abroad. This inspired the concerted prayers, which began on the evening preceding the opening of the Convention, and it also dominated all the conferences and speeches.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 25.

After a prayer-meeting and Bible-reading, conducted by Rev. C. Dunlop Smith, there was an open conference on

HOW TO EVANGELISE OUR CITIES.

The Chairman (Mr. John Thomson) opened the subject in a thoroughly practical speech. Premising that though large cities may be alike in some respects, in others they are very dissimilar, he showed that no methods of working will admit of universal application. In Manchester the masses of the people have certainly drifted away from church and chapel almost entirely. Merchants, tradespeople, and others generally attend places of worship, but the mechanic class, and those classes which are made up of less educated people, do not. This does not imply that these people are infidels: rather, he held the number of infidels to be exceedingly small. Having some knowledge of the truth, the result of their bringing up in Ragged or Sunday schools, these men want to hear of Christ, and hope to catch hold of his hand in the hour of death.

Below the mechanic is a lower, not exactly the criminal class—the improvident grade; labourers earning 15s. to 20s. a week. These are not only dissociated from all places of worship, but have very much come under the influence of drink, and are connected somewhat closely with the criminal class. Very difficult to reach, these people need at the outset to have inculcated into them higher notions of comfort, and to be taught what is good for their bodies. Then there is the vicious class. All who are doing anything to rescue working men from the evils of frequenting the public-house deserve encouragement. That which will reach the mechanic, however, will not reach the lowest class. An enormous debt is owing to the Salvation Army for showing that the Gospel can be brought home to the degraded outcast classes; but for the mechanic the methods of the Salvation Army do not seem at all adapted.

STATEMENTS ON LABOUR AND METHODS.

Mr. J. W. MacGill, of the Manchester City Mission, maintained that in dealing with the lapsed masses the machinations of Satan must be studied. The policy of the prince of darkness is expressed in the maxims, "Divide and conquer," and "Catch the world with drink." If division could be swept out of the Christian Church, to the obliteration of that jealousy which stands in the way of good work, and prevents anything considerable being done among the poor, all the stratagems of the devil would be powerless. Then, as to the drink, it must be resolutely fought. In and about Manchester and Salford there are about eight thousand places set apart for the sale of strong drink, and among the men in charge of those houses there is no such thing as division, for they all belong to "the trade." In evangelising great cities, all these things should be considered; and unity in effort and total abstinence work should be the double-barrelled gun with which to fight the powers of evil.

Mr. J. M. Weylland, of the London City Mission, told the interesting story of the rise and progress of that great organisation, the working methods of which he explained in detail. Special attention was given to his remarks on the missions to different classes of men—cabmen, slaughterers, and others.

Rev. J. Renfrew, of the Glasgow City Mission, having made an encouraging statement, Mrs. Grimké addressed the meeting, presenting the case of the medical mission founded in Salford, and successfully managed for some years by her lamented husband. She remarked that in compliance with the late Dr. Grimké's request, she had temporarily undertaken the management, but she could not continue to perform those duties. Considering its great value, the work is not one involving heavy expenditure, and she sincerely hoped that it would be taken in hand by an evangelical committee in Manchester or Salford. She was willing to do her part, but could not fill the position of manager, although, at her husband's request, she had consented to do that for a year.

Rev. C. F. Ward, curate of St. Mark's, Gorton, referred with regret to the stand-offishness of the clergy of the Church of England. There are many whose supreme aim and object is the advancement of the Church, and they are what he called the hopeless class. They are strong at vestments, incense, and nonsense, but there is little of Christ in their action or theology. A second class is made up of men who bear the evangelical name, and from whom co-operation in undenominational Christian work might be expected, but who, however, stand on one side, and do nothing. He called them the disappointing class. Most of the clergy steer clear of the third class, which are a mere handful, and may be called the sympathetic class. In conclusion, Mr. Ward told of the good-fellowship subsisting between various Christian workers in his parish. He had spoken in every one of the dissenting chapels, and hoped to do so again.

Mrs. L. Birt, of the Liverpool Sheltering Homes, said a few words on her endeavours, unwearying and fruitful, to care for the poor children and women of the city. The last party of children sent to Canada consisted of 101, the number of the Pilgrim Fathers. There were about 700 applicants for those little ones, who will, it is hoped, turn out missionaries, as well as useful citizens. Being trained in intelligence and taught to sing, they will cheer the homes into which they are taken. Indeed, their influence will go beyond the home circles, for the children who have gone out in years gone by are at a premium as entertainers by singing and recitation at religious meetings.

Mr. E. Whitwell, of Kendal, emphasised the importance of individual dealing in the work of city evangelisation. Mr. W. Eadson, officer of the Manchester Society for the Prevention of the Degradation of Women and Children, greatly moved the audience as he told of the horrors of criminal life. In his midnight rounds he sees many bad people, but no good ones. Therefore, he said, the Lord Jesus has not a proper chance among the lapsed masses. Christians will have to go to them, and they will find that words of love will excite sympathy, and the Gospel will not then be preached in vain to the outcasts.

Most of the speakers dwelt with more or less practical force upon the power and place of individual dealing.

THE WORKER'S ARMOUR.

In the afternoon, Mr. Robinson Souter, of Oxford, presided over a meeting at which addresses were delivered on "The Worker's Armour."

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown delivered a vigorous address, based on words found in Rom. xiii. 14, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," and Rev. xvii. 14, "He is Lord of lords and King of kings, and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful." At the outset he maintained that the secret of power is to be found in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. These three names express a threefold purpose and character. We may receive the character of the first name without realising the character of the second or third. Only in proportion as we realise the full powers of these characters shall we be adequately armed for our work, and victorious for God. Called "Jesus" because He would save his people from their sins; called "Christ" because anointed with power by the Holy Ghost to defeat the devil in dire temptation, and to proclaim the Gospel; and called "Lord" when he had taken the sting from death and carried captivity captive, the Saviour is emphatically, as the passage in Revelation says, "King of kings and Lord of lords." Those who are with him are "called," not unto uncleanness, but in sanctification; "chosen" when set apart, sealed, anointed by God, as his sons and co-heirs with Christ; and "faithful" when they endure hardness as good soldiers, and not only fight in the ranks but lead under the great Captain of Salvation. The desideratum, now as ever, is enduement with the power of the Holy Ghost. There is much said about churches being endowed; let us rather talk of individuals being endowed with this holy power. In conclusion, the speaker called upon Christians to show their principles in their life, and to seek to be kept by the power of faith unto salvation.

GREATLY STIRRED THE MEETING.

Basing his remarks on the words whereby the Apostle Paul urged the Ephesians to "put on the whole armour of God," he spoke of the need there is to-day for the spiritual weapons at the disposal of the Christian being brought into active use. Soldiers of Christ ought at least to be as brave as red-coats in the service of Queen Victoria, who, paid 1s. 1½d. a day, are expected to stand before any weapon! Proceeding to speak on idolatry and its horrors, Mr. Champness said: I have lived among the heathen, and almost suffered the loss of all things among them, and have seen idolatry as it is; and I say that no language can tell the story of wickedness that accompanies the worship of a false god.

What a number of idolaters there are in our own country! There are worshippers of race-horses, and I fear that the man that is going to be king in this country is bowing down to the horse. I tremble sometimes for the future. God bless the Queen! She is the grandest woman in the kingdom in some respects. I feel we ought to pray more than we do for the royal family. If the Bible is true, the idolater will have his part with the liar. Therefore I want to be enthusiastic on this, and I want the Church to be in accord with the key-note of salvation. Let us agree to do something to save the world from the grasp of the idolater.

A CALL FOR LABOURERS.

We want ten thousand more missionaries—yes, a million more—men and women who are prepared, not to wait until the Church sends them, but to go straight to the work. If I had waited till the Church sent me I should never have been a preacher. They did not think I could preach; and there perhaps they were right. They said I had no originality—the only original idea I had was that I should be a preacher. I replied if they would not have me, I would go out into the streets. We do not want men to wait for orders. Let those who are strong at talking about the weather just speak about the Sun of Righteousness: instead of saying, "It's a fine morning," let them say, "God is shining in my heart to-day." Here is a field as wide as the world, and there are pulpits everywhere.

We do not want, moreover, to wait till missionary societies send us out. Any Christian man who has an income ought to spend it to the glory of God, and support himself among the heathen. It will come to that one day. If a fire is burning my house down, am I to say, "I will have no water but what comes out of the fire-engine"? No; but I say, "I will take a pail from anybody that comes along."

Speaking of his own "Joyful News" Mission, Mr. Champness said: I have been a poor man all my life, but having a few hundred pounds some years ago, Mrs. Champness and I went in for spending it for the Lord Jesus, and now, by the grace of God,

WE HAVE SEVENTY EVANGELISTS.

To-night we say "Good-bye" to seven who are going out to the heathen. Three are going to Ceylon, one to my old station in Western Africa, one to Madras, and two to Central China. They are plain people like myself. One is a village blacksmith, who can do many things besides, and has a wife who has been laundress in a large family.

I believe in every mission that means glory to God and happiness in the souls of men. The world is wide enough for all Christian workers. It is not a question of running two or three 'busses on a road, but of running men throughout the world; and in "all the world" there is plenty of room. Our little work has gone on growing; we never ask anybody for anything, and never make a collection, but the money has always come in when needed. In all such work as this, you must take the shield of faith. And remember that, if the devil cannot find some of his own people fools enough to throw a stone at you, he will get some Christian to do it. Some of us will never lose the scars of wounds thus received. In glory such brethren will beg our pardon; and I am not sure that their tears of regret are not some of those that will be "wiped away."

"THE WEAPONS OF OUR WARFARE."

Rev. Charles Graham delivered an address characterised by exposition of the Scriptures as they define the Christian's armour. The soldier of this world has his arms manufactured for him, and they are no part of himself; but the soldier of Christ has his armour as part of himself. This even applies to the girdle of truth and the sword of the Spirit; for unless he has received and digested the truth, a person cannot be said to have on the former; and unless he has himself come under the power of the Word of God, he cannot wield the "sword."

Pursuing the subject in its relation to service, Mr. Graham called attention to Christ's words to his disciples: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit has come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." That promise was fulfilled after a great prayer-meeting that lasted ten days. The Spirit came "as the sound of the rushing of a mighty wind," and it "filled all the house" in which the disciples were sitting. The "sound" gathered Peter's congregation, and the "tongues of fire" which rested on the Apostles did more than inspire, they burned their way into the sear and callous consciences and indurated hearts of men wherever the witnesses of Christ went. From the very beginning the Holy Spirit was the great agent, the efficient cause, in human salvation. There never was a soul saved, from the fall of man, that was not regenerated by the Holy Spirit.

Every believer has the Spirit. But the Spirit was not given in his fulness and Divine plenitude to the Church, and for all believers, until the day of Pentecost. "He dwelleth with you," said Christ, "and shall be in you." Every believer has the Spirit of God. "Know ye not that ye are the temples of the Holy Spirit that dwelleth in you"? "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." As men may have life in them, and yet not be sensible, so also believers may be without power from the indwelling Spirit; for when sin is indulged in, God will leave us to ourselves, and not work through us. In order to having the Spirit in its fulness, we must give up sin; we must give ourselves to God. These positions were powerfully enforced, after which it was shown that one of the effects of receiving the Spirit is to bring the devil out of bad men. Who ever endured the contradictions of sinners as Christ Himself did? Shall the servant expect an immunity which the Master did not enjoy?

But faith in God overcomes all things. And in the early days of the Church, the word faithfully preached in the power of the Spirit resulted in "many of the priests" believing. I have, continued the speaker, myself seen Ritualistic priests and Romanists converted —seen the most unlikely people converted. Talk of difficulties and obstacles! What are they to omnipotence? And is not God with his faithful servants — with those who trust Him, and have a single eye to his glory? He never leaves them for ever, but makes their course one from victory to victory.

The Lord Jesus received the Spirit in the way of obedience and humiliation. He comes from Nazareth, and asks for baptism at the hands of his servant John, in order "to fulfil all righteousness." All blessing comes in the way of obedience, and in the way of disobedience there comes no blessing. The same Spirit that anointed Christ for his ministry, took Him into the wilderness, where He underwent temptation. In the power of the Spirit He entered upon his ministry, and went to Galilee of the Gentiles—regarding the darkest spot as most suitable for the first shining forth of the light of the world. When the true follower of the Lord selects his field, the rule will be for him to take the darkest part of the world; when we wish for ease and prominence, we are out of harmony with our Lord. In conclusion, Mr. Graham urged us to yield ourselves to God, in order that He might fill us with his Spirit; thus trusting, we shall certainly triumph.

Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh, followed with a few words. Pertinent to the subject in hand, and tinged with a humour which sent them straight home, his remarks were greatly enjoyed. He described and very forcibly presented several lessons therefrom. If his eye had not been fixed on God, and his heart upon the honour of God, David would at the outset have waged a war of words with Eliab, when questioned as to his motives in being on the scene. That is the point with us to-day, said Mr. McNeill. But David replied to his brother in the soft answer which turneth away wrath. He did not take the intended insult: and insults are just as they are taken. The giant was towering so high before the eyes of Israel, that Almighty God was not seen. David's vision, however, was not thus obscured, and he gave way to a truly sanctified recklessness. If some of us had less caution—less all-roundness, less extensiveness and more intensiveness—it would be the better for us.

Reckless striplings like David do the work, while great, broad, stalwart soldiers are discussing the situation. They looked at the length of Goliath's arm and their own, and said: "A man has not a chance." They then looked at their spears and his, and said—and with reason and logic on their side—"There is not a chance; we would be spitted upon the end of his weapon before we got within a yard of him." And so discretion became with them the better part of valour. God brought forward, what Eliab, no doubt, called a hare-brained fool—a laddie from the hills, who knew next to nothing about trained fighting, but who would give place to no one in feeling that Israel was suffering great disgrace at the hands of the Philistine. I feel I need what David had so splendidly. He was so lifted up to God, and thought so deeply of God, that he was carried out of himself, and away from the cold multiplication table calculations which agitated Israel; and he went and gained the victory. God is continually using such men as David, and through them gaining victories in such a way as seems to pour contempt upon military prowess and strategy. He does his work in a way that compels us to give Him all the glory.

Things are with us to-day much as they were in the days of David. Goliaths in a large number are parading up and down, and defying successfully the armies of the living God. In the Press, in books, from influential quarters, everywhere there is the scoff, the insult, the defying sneer. David saw the disgrace, and encouraged himself in the Lord his God; and just because he was so untrained, so green and raw, he proved such an instrument in the hands of God. He threw aside Saul's armour, and gave up attempting to do what he could not do, and at once undertook to do that of which he was really capable. The armies of Israel were paralysed by fear and custom. But David, apt at the sling and stone, felt that he ought to be able to strike a mark of such enormous size as the giant's head. From a human standpoint, it was David's very folly that made him tower high above everyone else for sheer common sense and bravery. He did the thing he could.

Let us do the same. Let us feel the disgrace of these Goliaths defying God and his truth. Let us not find fault with each other if we do not all preach the Gospel in regulation ways. If regulation ways had prevailed, Goliath would not have been killed. Each man has his own work. Let each yield himself to God, and realise what his purpose has been in saving us. David's feat was

A VICTORY OVER CUSTOM BY CONSECRATED INDIVIDUALITY.

I refuse to be myself plus King Saul on top of me. Let us stop aping the fighting man, for we are not laying Goliaths low. The devil has seen that sort of thing before. If he now saw us on our knees, he would have something to fear; then we shall arise and fling with some force, and not before. God redeemed all our powers of body and soul; let us give them into his hand, as that young herd laddie did, and the Goliaths will begin to totter and reel. We must keep our eyes on the great Mark and the great Model. If we cannot fight in regulation ways, we must be poor hands if we cannot throw stones.

A prayer-meeting and Bible-reading was afterwards conducted by Rev. Benjamin Bell.

HOME EVANGELISATION.

Mr. Edward Whitwell opened a conference on this subject, presided over by Mr. J. Garnett, J.P. He called attention to the fact that although the heathen are the inheritance of the Redeemer, yet professedly Christian people are cursing them by sending agents of evil into their midst. The Church needs to be endued with power for service; but it cannot be until its members are fully consecrated to God. In our own islands drink is doing immense injury, and yet we do not rise and rid the weak portions of the population of the many temptations to use it. We profess to regard the Lord's Day as a day to be kept holy; but, while we make it illegal for trades to be then carried on for the feeding of the hungry and the clothing of the naked, we flagrantly break the Divine command as to keeping the Sabbath holy, by allowing the public-houses to be opened, so making many people hungry, and naked, and wicked. Mr. Whitwell earnestly asked Christians to exert their religious and political influence in favour of reforms that shall further the cause of temperance and righteousness.

Mr. Henry Cook, of the Seamen's Mission, related the story of his work, now growing to proportions which he little expected when, with much anxiety, he began simply to tell the Gospel to seamen in southern ports. He has now several useful agencies on land, and two good ships at sea, by which he takes the message of mercy to fishermen and sailors in the English Channel, and even into French waters. For thirty-five years he has been busily engaged, and his unselfish endeavours have been greatly owned of God. At the close of his statement, the Chairman gave expression to his high estimate of Mr. Cook's labours.

The Chairman followed with some remarks for the encouragement of laymen. He said: A great many of you remember the meetings that were held in Manchester some years ago, when Dr. Ziemann was amongst us. A gentleman attended those meetings, and saw the work that was being done by laymen. His friends very strongly urged him to begin to do something, but he felt himself so incapable of speaking, or doing anything of the kind, that, for some time, he made no attempt to enter upon any work at all. At last he began holding cottage meetings, and, although the beginnings were small, there was rapid progress. Drunkards were converted, and men who had been a curse to the neighbourhood in which they lived, left their old and wicked courses. At one of the meetings that gentleman's own son came out on the Lord's side. Two years afterwards another son witnessed the good confession. Both have been a blessing to their parents ever since. Shall I tell you, added the Chairman, that I was the gentleman who could not be induced to begin those meetings? And I tell you that if you will do something for God, you will, like myself, derive blessing such as you cannot estimate.

Mrs. Reaney spoke of some auxiliaries to Christian effort, showing them to be in reality elements in home evangelisation. Emphasising the importance of everything being taken in hand with prayer, and carried through with the same, she told a touching story, by way of illustrating implicit faith in God. The wife of a godly man lay ill, and the doctor said, "I can do no more." A little daughter, in great distress, said to the doctor, "Kneel down and ask Jesus to let mother live a little longer." Not being a Christian, but a sceptic, the doctor only sneered at the child. The little one was in earnest, however, and she knelt down, and prayed about like this: "Please, Jesus, let mother live a little while, and help us children to go to heaven." She added: "But mother says we must not choose. Thou knowest what is best; and if it is thy will, let mother live. Amen." Still the little girl knelt. The doctor grew impatient, and asked that the child should be taken away. Indeed, he said, "She is mad." Still with her hands folded, the little one said, "Not mad, doctor; I am only waiting for the answer." And the answer came, for the mother lived and related the circumstances. We want, said Mrs. Reaney, faith like this, that will claim God's promises.

At considerable length, Mrs. Reaney told the story of recent efforts on behalf of the tramcar men of London, in which she was enabled to take a prominent part. She then enlarged upon the blessings of Convalescent Homes, and showed the power, in the eyes of sceptics and others, of Christian effort which takes the form of showing kindness to worn-out city people, by making it possible for them to have a period of rest at the seaside.

Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, spoke of the great need for evangelisation. In the past such exertions have too generally been only spasmodic; whereas, the need is for continued and sustained effort. He said he represented twelve thousand working men and women who are not merely holding a mission once a week or month, but are giving their time whenever they can get away from home duties. He asked his hearers to devote themselves to some distinct work, if possible in connection with church or chapel organisations. As a rule, earnest men may depend upon a hearty welcome being given to their voluntary services by Christian ministers. Any young men or young women, not knowing what to do, but who are disposed to give up good salaries in response to the call to go out and preach the Gospel to the people, would receive every attention if they would write to him. He wanted five hundred men and women of the right sort. Having told of good work in the Eastern counties, and of effort in low parts of London, Mr. Carlile pleaded for sympathy for open-air labourers, and concluded by saying that, while it remains written, "Let him that heareth say, Come," no one can excuse himself by declaring that he has not had a call to tell out the Gospel.

THE "DECENT DEVIL."

Rev. J. McNeill said a few words on a loving heart as an essential qualification for work for Christ. The woman, of whom we read, "loved much, because she was forgiven much." He asked anybody who had been forgiven little to stand up, and proceeded: "If you have been forgiven little, then love little, and do little—save yourselves as much as possible! But if you have been forgiven at all, you have been forgiven much. I am in the Lord's service, and trust I have been truly converted; and have no tale of early wickedness to tell, but I am what is called "a decent man." And that sort is very hardly converted. It needs a miracle of grace to convert such as you and me—to convey the decent devil, the civil devil, out of us. We heard the preacher, and we praised him; we heard the Sabbath-school teacher, and praised him. Oh, how civil we were—as polite as the people in the Gospel, who made the excuses. Perfect gentlemen they were! That is the kind of devil that was in us; the white devil is just as bad as the black one.

We need enthusiasm, divine enthusiasm, to carry us onward and forward. We worry ourselves, but there is not much done. Oh, for a living, loving heart, to do God's will, and go to sinners. I speak according to my own observation when I say that I do not know a single Christian worker at the present time who is being blessed in his work, who is either a drinker or a smoker. I ask you to push the inquiry through men in your own ken. Some of you may be talking about your liberty; but, remember, there never was such a slave as the Christian. The Son of God is the Lord even of our conscience. Therefore, it is not for us to say, "I am clear in my conscience." I ask you, not simply for the sake of other people, but for your own sake, to give up these practices. I do not care what your Christian profession may be. If you are dealing with alcohol, remember that men and women have been slain by it, and are being—not the weak and the worthless, but the strong and towering. Take care: "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

If you are "making up your mind," just make up your mouth in the meantime; I have no doubt that your mind will follow. Drink is a destroyer, a deceiver, and a snare, and "he that is deceived thereby is not wise." Until you give it up, you cannot claim to sympathise with temperance workers, and those who care for the fallen. I charge it, decent brother, decent sister, upon your conscience; if this thing of hell is in your house, then sweep it out. I know Christian workers who call themselves moderate drinkers, but no one else calls them by that title. For Christ's sake, and the sake of the perishing, we ought not to have anything to do with this evil. If we really love Christ, then these perishing people are our brothers and sisters. Go, my sisters, to the poor harlots, and tell them of the Divine love. Say unto them, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ came into the world to save sinners." And then continue the quotation straight on. Do not proceed to put the words into the oratio obliqua; but say, "Of whom I am chief." I have heard ministers quote the passage in this form, "of whom, Paul said, he was chief." Let us, however, pronounce the words in all their directness, "of whom I am chief."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26.

THE FALL OF THE WALLS OF JERICHO.

The morning prayer-meeting and Bible-reading was conducted by Rev. J. McNeill, and all who attended felt it to be a season of great profit. The subject of the reading was the fall of the walls or Jericho, as described in Josh. vi., and alluded to in Heb. xi., where they are explained to have fallen "through faith." Faith was just then in a revived condition in Israel; it was vigorous and healthy. As for Jericho, "None went out, and none came in," of the Israelites. Jericho was there, and Israel here, with a clear issue of conflict between them. When faith is weak, this is not realised; we are all jumbled together, and we do not know which is Israel and which is Jericho. The first effect of a revival of faith, by God's Spirit, will be a blessed separation.

It may well be imagined that there were some people in Jericho who, remembering that the Israelites had been before the walls forty years previously, now had them in derision; while others might have had apprehensions that nothing could long withstand them and the invisible God whom they worshipped. What may be called the "plan of campaign," of which Joshua was God's mouthpiece to the people, was one of faith working through organisation. The organisation was simple to foolishness, but wonderfully efficient. And the ark of the Lord was the lynch-pin in that organisation. We might as well try to organise the dead as organise without the ark of the Lord, which is the symbol of the Divine presence and power. Let us have organisation and plan, and purpose and method; but the ark must be the mainspring of all our movements, if God is to own and bless them.

The organisation was silent as well as simple. "Ye shall not shout, nor make any noise with your voice, neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth, until the day I bid you shout." Human wisdom could have devised no better plan, for the silence worked well in more ways than one. First, this closure stopped the so-called "long-headed," cautious man from having his say; for he would have argued, "The line must be drawn at this proposed six days' march round the city." What good could such a thing do? That class had to keep their doubts to themselves. There is to-day far too much canvassing of the situation and discussing probabilities. Remember, there are no probabilities or possibilities; with God, all things are absolutely certain.

Doubtless some of the Israelites thought, and truly, that God was testing them—testing them clean down to the ground, to see if they had faith in Him. First, God's test pulverises us, grinds us to powder as regards our wisdom and judgment, and then it builds us up again. The plan proposed to the Israelites was very humiliating to the carnal mind; it needed big men to do what was required without questionings. Some of our mighty men of to-day are not fit to stand in Joshua's ranks; their measure is too little—both round the head and the heart. The second class which the silence muzzled was the over-enthusiastic men—the "small pot, soon hot" men. There is an enthusiasm that is only noise. Some shout "hallelujah," when they ought to be silent until the walls are falling down. There is a vapid kind of enthusiasm that consists more in word and tongue than in solid tramping, in the simple and splendid obedience of faith.

Not only simple and silent, that organisation was also splendidly effective. It looked to be foolishness; but "the foolishness of God is wiser than men." It looked to be weak to contemptuousness; but "the weakness of God is stronger than men." Yea, "base things, and things that are despised, hath God chosen, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are." Why? "That no flesh shall glory in his presence, but, according as it is written, let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord." I believe that God is waiting for his people to be united round the Joshua of the New Covenant, the Lord Christ, in order to a going up against those seemingly inveterate obstacles, those impregnable walls of sin and Satan, that are entrenched in our modern society. Let us go up to them in faith in God, with the ark of the Lord in its place, trusting in God, and not in ourselves; and we shall find that again God's arm will be put forth, and great and marvellous things will be done.

Mr. McNeill indicated further lessons in a forcible way. The horn-blowing is like the work of Gospel ministers to-day. God would bring men to an end of their own wisdom and notions. It was a very trying thing, and likely to bring up a blush on the face of the intelligent priests. To the Jericho that now looks on, the preaching of the Gospel is a foolish thing; the newspapers tell us to stop our horn-blowing, as nobody is paying any attention, while we are making ourselves ridiculous. Yet "to those who are saved," the Gospel is still "the power of God, and the wisdom of God." There is a power in it that proclaims it from age to age to be not simply wind, and breath of man's speaking, but wind of God, and breath of the Holy Ghost.

Round the Israelites went, and on the seventh day they compassed the walls seven times. Then, when there was no longer any unbelief in them, when they were stone-dead to the world, to shame, to fear, and to self, and alive unto God, by stupendous faith in Him, then the thing happened, as a matter of course. When God had tested them perfectly and thoroughly, on the seventh day, Joshua unmuzzled the people. "Shout," he said, "for the Lord hath given you the city." And there arose such a tempestuous shout that the walls of Jericho fell down in it. The half has not been told of what God wants us to see and feel of his power in connection with the great cause of his to which He has called us. Let us be done with ourselves. Let us get to our wits' end—it is no great road from home! It is when we get there, that we cry for the living God, and are heard, and see his power put forth.

WORK IN VILLAGE AND COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

Mr. J. W. MacGill presided over an open Conference on "How to evangelise our villages and country districts."

Mr. Gawin Kirkham, in an address at once informing and suggestive, recommended that as far as possible existing agencies should form a basis for further effort. The need of aggressive work is great, in view of the immorality prevailing in country districts; and the ignorant conservatism of the people demands that care should be taken not to shock their prejudices by the adoption of some methods which may find favour in cities or towns. He urged (1) the strengthening of present agencies; (2) that only men and women of undoubted piety should be engaged in the work; (3) not to neglect the opportunities in the open air, in barns, and in tents; (4) to teach the people as well as preach to them; (5) to use healthy auxiliary agencies, such as lectures, dissolving views, and temperance meetings; (6) and also to circulate pure literature in the homes.

Rev. J. Scruton, of Broughton, called attention to the fact that 800 out of the 1100 ministers in the Primitive Methodist body are men who were brought up in the country. Mr. Whitwell ranged the great evils of country life under three heads: drunkenness, immorality, and gambling. The Gospel is the great cure for all, and, illustrating his statements by draughts upon his own experience, he recommended tract distribution as well as preaching.

A gentleman from Moss-side was in favour of additional efforts everywhere to keep the boys of the generation from evil, and teach them good. The Chairman mentioned the Boy Brigade movement, of Glasgow, as an institution worthy of extended adoption. Mr. L. K. Shaw urged prudence and kindliness, as well as prayerfulness, in the distribution of tracts.

Dr. Grattan Guinness held that great results would follow earnest house-to-house visitation. He called attention to the usefulness and attractiveness of night schools—for which men in the region of Cliff, in Derbyshire, walk several miles after a hard day's work—and pointed out that the musical talent of the villages might be organised with profit in more than one direction.

Rev. Charles Graham told of blessed work done in villages by ladies of his acquaintance, specially mentioning the efforts of Lady Tankerville at Chellingham, in Cumberland. Mr. James Boyd related some endeavours of his own in a village, in which permanent good has been accomplished. Mr. J. S. Langley having defined present needs as workers and money, Mr. R. Butcher, of the Religious Tract Society, held up for wide imitation the practice of those Christian men and women who select needy villages as places in which to spend their holidays, and then make evangelistic work a form of recreation. Rev. F. J. Horsefield urged people of different denominations to work together where possible. Rev. S. Stafford commended Mr. Butcher's advice, and said that he had for years acted on the very rule.

Mrs. Grimké spoke of work among young women; Mrs. Birt endeavoured, by words of encouragement, to induce ladies and gentlemen to "stir up the gift" they might have.

The remaining speakers were Mr. Henry Lakin, who told of his labours in the villages, attended, as the Chairman said, with such remarkable results that on one occasion some 700 people were brought together, the whole of whom had been converted by his agency. Rev. R. W. McAll spoke a word for "sanctified ingenuity" in efforts to bring the children into the fold of the Saviour. Above all, fathers and mothers in the country should be careful to protect their children, lest they fall victims to the great rural evil of impurity.

THE WORKER'S HINDRANCES.

This important subject engrossed attention during the afternoon. Mr. L. K. Shaw occupied the chair, and at the outset read a note received from Mrs. Josephine Butler, expressing regret that, through the illness of her daughter, she was unable to leave home. Mrs. Butler had hoped to speak to parents on their attitude to God in regard to their children, and great regret was expressed that she could not attend and deliver her message.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness defined the "work" as God's, and concluded that the "hindrances" must also be God's. What, however, are hindrances to omnipotence? Proceeding to speak of external hindrances, Mr. Guinness briefly, but lucidly sketched the world's history, and showed it to be a series of hindrances swept out of the way, and obstacles removed out of the path of God's purpose. In Old Testament times, in the days of Christ, and throughout the present era, difficulties have been overcome one by one. The work now in hand is the evangelisation of the world, and what are the difficulties to be overcome? Who has fairly faced this matter? Mr. Guinness showed in some measure the immensity of the work, pointing first to China, and then to Africa. It will not do for us to sit still and neglect the perishing millions. God will help us to get over the hindrances. We must take the wants of the world to Him in prayer, and our own wants too. He can meet our ignorance and weakness—can give us divine power, and work with us, but He will be sought unto concerning all these things.

What is wanted is faith and love—to take hold of God and man. We need to go to the Lord's work in the Lord's name, and with this song in our hearts: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked place shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Rev. Charles Graham spoke of internal hindrances. In an address replete with Scripture illustration, he showed what sort of men God's workers should be, in earnest consecration and real holiness. The Apostle Paul called himself "nothing," and it is just such that Christ can use. Seeking only God's glory, we shall be approved and successful labourers; and with God for us, it does not much matter what the hindrances are. For the Lord we shall do valiantly, and his work will prosper in our hands.

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown maintained that to true workers there are no real hindrances, inasmuch as in them it is "God that worketh, to will and to do of his own good pleasure." All hindrances actually become helps in Christ; they are only transitory in character, and pass away. They are, indeed, stepping stones to higher things—victories covered over for the time being. Having divine faith, hope, and love, we shall be fully equipped to bring men to the Saviour.

Rev. E. D. Williams, who is about to leave for China, made a few earnest remarks on the conditions of spiritual life and vigour. Rev. W. Cooper, of the China Inland Mission, followed with a recital of triumphs in the Empire of the Celestials, and also with a warm appeal for more labourers.

HOME AND FOREIGN EVANGELISATION.

In the evening the session was specially interesting, Mrs. Grimké described her good work in providing Scripture text cards for world-wide distribution. It was her husband who instigated the movement, which has now developed far beyond original anticipations. Great good is known to have resulted from the cards being read by people in many countries, and not the least encouraging of the facts related was that many ladies, who had in the past been two nervous or timid to say anything on salvation to strangers, have found it quite impossible to remain silent while offering for acceptance pictoral text cards, which absolutely need the utterance of words of explanation and kindness on the part of instructed Christians. Mrs. Grimké particularly called upon workers to help her to circulate the foreign cards, on the production of which great care has been bestowed.

Dr. Guinness delivered an address on the needs of Africa. Having described several large areas, he gave an account of past Christian effort. The story of the Congo Mission, now in the hands of the American Baptist Board, was full of interest, and it was heard with regret that the American labourers are not entering the field and reinforcing the strength of the already settled agents. Dr. Guinness related that in conversation with Dr. Murdock, of the American Baptist Board, he mentioned that British missionaries were prepared to go out, and though it was natural that the supporters of the Mission should prefer to support men going out from their own country, yet it was a pity that the services of willing Englishmen should not be made use of in some way. Dr. Murdock intimated that there would be no objection to another mission being started in the very heart of Africa, in order that the Gospel might be presented to the Bololo nation, who, some ten millions in number, and all speaking one language, have never heard of the love of God in Christ. Dr. Guinness continued: We prayed over this matter, and one morning a London friend who knew of the proposal asked how much it would cost to start the Mission. We said about £800, and the gentleman in question, said: "I should like to give that ball a kick." He followed up that remark by giving us a cheque for the money. A short time afterwards, I asked the sympathy of another in the matter, and he approved the proposal heartily, and a fortnight later sent a cheque for £200 for the Congo Bololo Mission. A third friend has given £100, and so it seems that it is God's will that this Mission should be started.

I have just returned from the North of Ireland, where there are people who are all on fire for Africa. One said, "You will want a steamer to go up those rivers with"—rivers which traverse for hundreds of miles a country covered with populous towns and villages. "How much will it cost?" I replied, "About £590." The rejoinder was, "The Belfast Y.M.C.A. will raise £500." At the meeting at which that promise was made, a Church of England clergyman, who was in the chair, put his name down for £100, and the money is flowing in in earnest for work in Central Africa.

Better still, Mr. David Hamilton, one of the brightest and best of the young men in Belfast, said, "I want to give my life for Central Africa," and the Y.M.C.A. said, "We will support you, and you shall go out as our agent." Let me commend that Y.M.C.A.; I wish all such associations had their representatives on the mission field. I also saw a bright, sunshiny young fellow, named Boyd, to whom I said, "I believe you are going to be a man for Central Africa." He replied, "No," as he thought he had his work in Cork. But at the end of the week, he came to me with a candidate for the field, and said, "I could not sleep a single wink last week after that missionary meeting, and I am willing, and now offer, to give my life for Central Africa, if Jesus will have it." The other candidate was named Day, a friend of Boyd's. I believe Cork is going to support both of them.

That has all taken place within the past few weeks. We no sooner thought of establishing the Mission than the way was opened. In other words, we had no sooner thought of getting into God's lines than God's hands opened, and supplied our every desire.

Rev. J. McNeill gave a striking Biblical illustration, with the object of showing that in the work of God there should be nothing less than whole-hearted zeal. Thirty-two thousand Israelites rose to their feet when Gideon stood up to do battle for the nation. Just as the leader was going forward, however, God stopped him, and said, "The people that are with thee are too many for Me to give the Midianites into thy hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against Me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me." God had to winnow that great host, and the same thing has to be done to-day.

Rev. R. McAll spoke on the great work of his brother in Paris and elsewhere in France, and expressed a fervent hope that Manchester would, in the future, do more than in the past to support that good cause. Another appeal for labourers was made by Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 27.

The Bible-reading at the morning prayer-meeting was given by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, who delivered an able exposition of the name "Israel," pointing out that the secret of power with men is agonising with God. He showed that this order of things runs throughout the dispensations, in human co-operation with God for the salvation of mankind.

HOW TO REACH THE MASSES.

Mr. Alexander MacDougall presided over a conference on this subject. Mr. J. W. MacGill spoke of exertions among adults. The best workers among the masses are people from the ranks of the poorer classes. Having told remarkable stories of schools being taught by factory girls in Glasgow, and eulogised the heartiness of their labour, he maintained that most workers want sympathy; accommodation for their efforts is required, and ladies would do well to come forward and act as leaders. He spoke of the great needs of Manchester, and showed that the City Mission is more than ever made up of men who thoroughly understand the lower classes. Every mission-hall should be a centre of work, and converts should be banded together as helpers. The masses must largely be reached by volunteer labourers, and these must come from the Christian Church. In the halls lately built in Manchester, something is provided for men, women, and children, and the agencies are numerous and designed to reach all these sections of the community. Temperance, conversion, and the Bible are the three principal instrumentalities in the work. On Saturday nights the workers are all about; some of them, being musicians, station themselves outside public-houses, and at times whole bodies of men are enticed to leave these drinking dens. They are taken away and made comfortable, and afterwards talked to on spiritual things. Men who have themselves been rescued are enthusiastic in this, and ever ready to lend a helping hand to the degraded. Thousands have been already picked up.

Mr. G. R. Kirlew, of the Boys' Refuge, made some excellent remarks on how to reach the children. He counselled parents to let the Gospel of love shine in the home, for lasting impressions for good or evil may be made very early. In their teens children must be made companions of by those able to instruct them; and they should also be trusted, as many a fine character has been ruined through being subjected to constant suspicion. Christian parents, guardians, and others who can influence children should give them a chance to know something of God and Christ, as well as the subjects of ordinary educational routine. Mr. Kirlew warmly commended to public sympathy the many agencies for caring for and teaching children of various classes, and maintained that with more consecration and common sense, better results would follow efforts to spiritually benefit the rising generation.

Miss Watson introduced the subject of work among the criminal class. Confining her attention to exertions among women, she told some very touching stories. She urged ladies to see that they do all in their power to prevent the swelling of the criminal classes. Mistresses should care for their domestic servants, and see that they have somewhere to go when leaving situations. Some Christian ladies are very anxious for the well-being of their servants, and see that they are in places of safety between one situation and another. There must be kind deeds as well as words of sympathy.

Mr. L. K. Shaw made some remarks on general work among prisoners. During last year many thousands of discharged prisoners visited the rooms of the Manchester Prison-gate Mission, a goodly number of them signing the temperance pledge. A number of poor females have been put on purer paths by the agency of the Mission, which is contemplating important enlargement of its operations.

"THE FIELD IS THE WORLD."

In the afternoon there was further conference on "Home and Foreign Evangelisation." Mrs. Stephen Menzies ably stated the case for "our daughters." She described the aimless life some of them are compelled to lead, through mistaken notions on the part of their parents; and she asked Christian fathers and mothers to face the fact that they are in many cases selfish in the extreme. Why not commit the children to the Lord, trust Him for their welfare, and encourage them to engage in Christian effort?

Whether children have decided for the Lord or not, godly parents should see that their training is fitting them for service in due course; for some have, on entering the service of Christ, found themselves able to do little or nothing, and this through lack of sensible bringing-up. Having given excellent advice to Christian parents, to keep their homes bright and so commend the Gospel to their children, Mrs. Menzies advocated measures by which young people who make no profession of religion may at once make themselves useful, and be brought into contact with truly consecrated labourers in the Lord's vineyard.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness followed with some practical remarks on the same subject, showing that Christ's love may be revealed to the child through the parent's love. Children should not be pestered with religious teaching, but they should be won; and, after continued prayer and guidance, example will prove the great power.

Proceeding to speak on the needs of the heathen world, Mr. Guinness showed that the prime thing now demanded is self-sacrifice. Christ emptied, humbled, sacrificed Himself; the early messengers of the truth were like-minded. The love of Christ should now likewise constrain to holy zeal. Enlarging upon the condition of the great Soudan territory of Africa, Mr. Guinness described its sad darkness, and called upon Christian people to send some light there. He emphatically urged the point, and expressed a fervent hope that Manchester would begin a mission to the hundred millions of blacks living without God in that great belt of the African Continent.

Rev. J. McNeill delivered a powerful address on the great opportunities of parents, the force of godly example, and the abounding confidence in God which is guaranteed to those who have the welfare of the young really at heart. He spoke strongly in favour of more joy and melody in Christian homes, and expressed a belief that Sunday-schools would be more blessed if the teachers had more generally the root of the matter in them. He advised teachers to put their best into their work, and God will surely give them spiritual offspring.

Illustrating the power of love, he called attention to the case of the paralytic who was let down through the roof of the house to the feet of Christ. The house was full, and there was a crowd about the doors; but yet there was room for one more at the Saviour's feet! And so there always is! The four who bore that poor man must have had love for him in their hearts, for not only did they bring him to the house, but they further determined that their friend should get near to the Saviour. Christ spoke to the man's sinful soul first, and his body next. So we must give people the bread of life first; care for the other bread will, with other things, fall into its proper place afterwards. And where the Gospel is preached the people will congregate, even to crowding "about the door."

CLOSING WORDS.

The evening meeting was the largest of all, the platform containing the evangelical no, bility of Manchester, with visitors from London-Liverpool, and other places.

Rev. Dr. Macfadyen, in an address which touched many hearts, commended John iii. 16 as furnishing thoughts suitable for closing words on "Home and Foreign Evangelisation." He showed how the force of the first clause of the passage may be brought home:—"God loves the world"; therefore God loves England—Manchester—my household—me. The same mode of logical realisation of God's love may be applied by any man, woman, or child in any of the continents, or the isles of the sea. But how few know of the love! In some words of application the speaker beautifully explained believing as implying confidence, and asked his hearers to be in earnest in making known this way of salvation.

Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson spoke on "The Power of a Consecrated Life," which is nothing less than the power of the Spirit of God making use of the faculties of man as instruments by which he effects his gracious purposes. Having illustrated consecration from the lives of Christ and his Apostles, and called attention to Christ's words: "For their sakes I sanctify (consecrate) Myself that they themselves also may be sanctified (consecrated) in truth" (R.V.), he enlarged upon baptism with the Holy Spirit and fire. The Spirit gives us life; the fire gives us light for darkness, and warmth for coldness. Fire must give itself out, and thus light and warmth are spread. Let us welcome the Spirit. May He come to us, in the grace and power of water to cleanse and refresh us; of Spirit to blow through us as channels of grace to others; and, finally, of fire to purify us in the inmost recesses of our souls, to quicken us to a warmer and brighter life, and to give us the blessed power of shedding light and life all round about us.

In introducing General Booth, the Chairman spoke in warm admiration of the Salvation Army. In the course of an address of much fervour, on "The Application of a Consecrated Life," the General gave as a short definition of the subject, "an immediate joining of the Salvation Army." Having exposed the hypocrisy of mere Sunday, or "times and seasons," religion, he called upon consecrated people to lose no time in showing what they mean. He asked them to band together and get to work. Church pastors must get their members to work; if they will not fight, they must be drummed out of the regiment. A consecrated life will be satisfied with nothing but victory. We must, he said, increase our numbers, and devise some methods of forcing religion upon the attention of the people. In conclusion, the General called upon the people present to consecrate themselves, and he led them in prayer for God's grace, and for Divine power for service.

The Convention concluded with a brief prayer-meeting, and it will be remembered by many as a time of great blessing.

Farewell to Dr. Pierson.

AFTER doing conspicuous service to the cause of missions in Great Britain, Rev. Dr. PIERSON, of Philadelphia, left on Saturday last in the Umbria. On the previous evening a farewell missionary meeting was held in Hope Hall, Liverpool, presided over by Mr. T. MATHESON, and attended by representatives of all sections of evangelical Protestants, as well as a large assemblage of the general public. In some opening remarks, the Chairman referred to the warm place Dr. Pierson occupies in the hearts of many Christians in England and Scotland. He also made special mention of the effect with which the experimental and Scriptural appeals on behalf of aggressive work have been made by Dr. Pierson in Liverpool and many other places.

Dr. Pierson seemed delighted to have yet one more opportunity to speak on the theme which lies so close to his heart. After a few words of an introductory character, he soared high above personal explanations, and advocated with strong arguments and many Scriptural reasons the great cause of missions. He set himself the task of specially indicating the things upon which supreme emphasis should now be laid, and maintained in the first place that a wide-spread diffusion of information on missions is of the greatest importance. He gave in condensed form an array of facts which showed how very interesting the study is, and convicted most of those present of having little or no knowledge of the subject, which he proved to be eminently entertaining, as well as immensely important. And the great need of the Gospel, he showed in ways that astonished not a few. We talk, he said, about there being a thousand million of the human race unevangelised. Do we realise what this means? It means that if the heathen should pass before us in procession by night and day without interruption, it would take so long for them to move by that the procession would never cease, for before the adults of this generation had passed us, children yet unborn would become of mature age and follow up the rear. Think of the fact that before the eye of God such a solemn procession of unregenerated and unevangelised souls has been passing for eighteen hundred years, not to speak of the days that preceded the coming of our blessed Lord into his tabernacle of flesh.

The cruelties of heathenism were graphically described, and some of the triumphs of missions detailed, by way of illustrating the history and literature of evangelisation abroad. In the second place, Dr. Pierson contended for a sense of individual obligation in missionary work. The Scriptures show most distinctly that all believers are to take part in the work, and all mankind are to be the objects of this solicitude. It is a common notion with many people that the gift of a few shillings once a year relieves one of all responsibility, and that missionaries can take the work off the shoulders of believers in general. The Gospel motto is, "All are to go, and to go to all," such divisions as are now maintained between clergy and laity having no place whatever in New Testament teaching.

Thirdly, there must be an acceleration of Christian endeavour. "The King's business requires haste." Our performances are simply contemptible. The heathen who have been converted to Christ are putting us to shame by their earnestness and comparative generosity. Should we not put all the forces of our modern civilisation to the chariot of God—steam, the telegraph, the printing-press, and the piles of accumulated wealth—and have it drawn over the waste wilds of the unevangelised world? I should not be in England to-day but for the solemn belief that God has given me in charge to state my conviction to my brethren in this land of Britain, that before this century passes away—certainly before this generation passes away—the whole world may have heard the Gospel message. This is work which we cannot do by proxy, as we have too long thought we could.

Dr. Pierson spoke some earnest words on consecration—the devoting of the person and his other talents and possessions all to God. With more holy Hannahs and more holy Elizabeths, there would be more Samuels and Johns. In conclusion, he said that he had been asked to return next year and undertake a tour of the British Isles, and he proposed laying the matter before his church.

Rev. A. E. BARNES LAWRENCE moved a resolution expressing warm appreciation of Dr. Pierson's services to the church in Great Britain; recording the love entertained for him by the meeting, and its prayer that he and Mrs. Pierson would reach home in safety; and invoking God's blessing on Dr. Pierson's work, as well as assuring him of a hearty welcome if he should find the way open to return to this country in order to further the work already begun. Rev. E. R. BARRETT seconded the motion, which was cordially supported by Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, and acknowledged in terms of Christian affection.

"JOYFUL NEWS" FOREIGN MISSION.—On Tuesday evening, Sept. 18, a valedictory service was held at Wesley Chapel, Rochdale, in connection with the departure of the following Joyful News evangelists for foreign work: Mr. and Mrs. Braithwaite and Miss Lord for Ceylon; Mr. Pinnock for West Africa; and Mr. Grant for Madras. Rev. T. Champness presided. There was a crowded attendance, and the proceedings were full of interest and enthusiasm.

EMIGRANTS' INFORMATION OFFICE.—This quarter's circulars, relating to Canada, the Australasian and South African Colonies, have been issued by this office, under the supervision of the Colonial Office; and a poster, giving a summary, is exhibited in every post-office. Queensland grants free passages to female servants and selected unmarried agricultural labourers. Western Australia and Queensland grant assisted passages, and the two former and Natal nominated passages at reduced rates—mainly to female servants and agriculturists. Farmers with capital, and female servants, will find openings in all the Colonies; and agricultural labourers in Canada (in the summer months), New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, and some districts of New Zealand; while mechanics are only in demand in very few localities, as in Melbourne for those connected with the building trades. Intending emigrants are invited to write to the office as to the arrangements (if any) which are made by Colonial Governments, and in some cases by private committees and individuals in the Colonies, for the reception and assistance of emigrants on landing. The committee wish to urge the need of careful selection in the case of emigrants, and of providing those who go out with money to keep them on arrival. The circulars may be obtained, free of cost, from the office, 31, Broadway, Westminster, S.W.; and ten separate handbooks, with maps for each colony, at 1d. each, post free, or bound together, at 1s. 6d.

NOT AFRAID.

AN ANSWER TO THE QUESTION, "ARE YOU NOT AFRAID TO DIE?"

"Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Ghost."—ROM. xv. 13.

"AM I afraid to die," my dear?
Why should I be afraid?
My Saviour-Lord has died for me,
And all my debt has paid.

I'm not afraid to die, my dear;
For, when my flesh doth fail,
And thought of all that draweth near,
May cause my heart to quail,

The Lord Himself will then appear,
And to my soul will speak
The words of peace I often hear
When I that refuge seek.

I'm not afraid to die, my dear!
For when Death calls for me,
'Twill be his voice that I shall hear,—
"My child, I come for thee!"

I'm not afraid to die, my dear,
For all that darksome flood
Will gleam most bright with lovely light
From out the throne of God.

I'm not afraid to die—for why?
The Lord my Surety is;
His hands outstretched will draw me nigh,
And through the gates of bliss.

Oh! I should fear to die, my dear,
Did I not know for sure
That He has conquered sin and death,
And made my place secure.

And at the gate of heaven He stands:
My passport what beside
The wound-prints in his piercéd hands
And in his holy side?

Then by the holy riven side
Of Jesus Christ, my King,
My soul will evermore abide,
The praise of God to sing.

Wilt thou not trust this Lord of mine,
Who also died for thee,
Who loves thee with a love divine,
Far deeper than the sea?

And He will guide thy soul through all,
Safe to the home above,
Then at his feet thou, too, shalt fall
And praise the God of love.

Torquay. GRACE FILDER.

CORRECTION.—By a printer's mistake the last line of the hymn "Peace in Jesus" was printed—

Tune we still the harps of gold.

It should have been—

Tune we still the harps of God.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—Owing to the intended demolition of 38, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. John Shrimpton begs to acquaint the many friends of the above Homes that it has been necessary to find other offices; and he therefore asks that all communications may for the future kindly be sent to him at the new address, 2, Westminster Chambers, London, S.W.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The strength of a movement cannot always be tested by its anniversary; nevertheless, a good annual gathering lends a healthful stimulus thereto. The Mildmay and North London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission is to be congratulated in this respect. An overflowing tea-meeting, followed by a large gathering, in the Conference Hall, must have cheered the workers on the 27th ult. Mr. George Carter presided, and Mr. Charles L. Young (hon. sec.) read the report. The speakers were Mr. C. Russell, Hurditch, Mr. John E. Jack, Mr. William Noble, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Rev. D. B. Hawkin, and Mr. P. S. Badenoch. Each of these had a word of cheer or caution to offer to the workers. Mr. Hurditch's address on "the Open Ear, the Open Mouth, the Open Heart, the Open Air, and the Open Heavens," was specially appropriate.

Mr. Henry Varley's Good-Bye.

A TROUBLESOME throat complaint has made it advisable that Mr. Henry Varley should spend one or two winters away from the humid fog-bound shores of old England. He has therefore resolved to emigrate, with his family, for a time at any rate, to the Antipodes, where he is by no means a stranger, and where plenty of work awaits him. A numerous company of his London friends met in the Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, on Thursday evening last week, to express to him their affectionate esteem, and to bid him God speed. Mr. R. C. Morgan was president of the meeting, and clustered around the platform were many friends well known in the ranks of evangelical workers. Letters were read by Pastor F. H. White from a number of others, regretting their unavoidable absence, and expressing their heartiest good wishes for the future welfare of Mr. Varley and his family. Among the writers was Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who said he felt heavy at heart at Mr. Varley's departure; because we have great need, in these times, of true, valiant witnesses for the truth, such as he has proved himself to be. He felt specially indebted to Mr. Varley for his recent defence, in the columns of a contemporary, of the doctrine of Biblical inspiration.

Brief addresses were given by the chairman, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. W. F. Gooch, Dr. W. T. Moore, Mr. Edward Wright, Rev. D. Hooper (Hendon), Mr. M. H. Hodder, Rev. William Cuff, Rev. W. J. Mayers, Rev. J. Wilkinson, Mr. Charles Inglis, and Mr. A. C. Coote. While varied in expression, the remarks of these brethren were one in essence and in purport. Eschewing all "fulsome adulation" of the man, they agreed in thanking God for the grace bestowed on Mr. Varley, which had enabled him in the past to bear such loyal, courageous testimony on behalf of truth and righteousness, and to labour so successfully as an evangelist in many parts of the world. Special references were made to his boldness in reproving sin, whether it is found among the gilded mashers of the West, or the besotted sensualists of the East; to his skill as an expounder of the Holy Scriptures; to his clear setting forth of the Gospel, and his strenuous hold of evangelical doctrine; to his readiness in all sorts of Christian service; to his invaluable advocacy of social purity, his denunciation of bad men and of bad laws, and his counsels to young men on delicate and difficult questions; and to his late utterances on inspiration. Several of those who spoke thankfully acknowledged the personal benefit and stimulus they had received from fellowship with him, and from his teaching. Mr. Wilkinson said he had hurried up to town from a distance, and left his own prayer-meeting for the Jews, to be present. Mr. Inglis said he also had made a special journey from the country, in order to show his deep appreciation of Mr. Varley's services.

The main feature of the evening's proceedings was, of course, Mr. VARLEY's own address. The many kind things uttered about him made it more difficult for him, he said, to know how to express himself; nevertheless, he had self-possession enough left to make an earnest, thoroughgoing speech, that was not only full of biographical interest, but extremely characteristic of the man. Just thirty-one years, he said, had elapsed to a day since he came into that neighbourhood of Notting-hill. Thirty years since he began work in the Nottingdale schools, in which he was successively teacher and superintendent. He began to preach, and the people gathered in great numbers, so that by and by a church was formed, though he was then only twenty-three years old. He went on to tell how, being a simple layman, his success awakened considerable searchings of heart among the ordained pastors round about, and how he was urged to seek Orders in the Church of England. To this proposal he replied that he would not forego his freedom, even to become Archbishop of Canterbury. These things all combined to throw him the more unreservedly for guidance upon God alone, whose ordination for service he felt he already possessed. The work at Nottingdale progressed, and ultimately the West London Tabernacle was built, where (as Mr. Varley subsequently observed) he gave eighteen years of gratuitous services as pastor, besides bearing a heavy share of the financial burden in connection with the place.

While the tabernacle was being enlarged, Mr. Varley went out of London, and did a good deal of Gospel work, and very soon he felt called specially to the work of an evangelist. In the pursuit of this service he had visited many parts of Great Britain, besides the United States, Canada, South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. Without any suspicion of boasting, he felt he could thank God for having given Him more than twenty thousand souls for his hire, as an ambassador of Christ, in these different places. With his strong individuality he had doubtless done and said unwise things; but he was addicted to having strong convictions on many of the subjects referred to by the friends who had spoken. Referring particularly to his efforts on behalf of our youth, he did not hesitate to say that the curse of licentiousness is slaying more young men and maidens in this country than we have any conception of. During the last few years he had received as many as fifteen thousand letters from men in connection with his addresses and published lectures to this class of the community; these letters have come from all parts of the world. He believed that in London alone he had a constituency of fifty thousand young men who look on him as a personal friend. On this point Mr. Varley urged the wide dissemination of these lectures; there is nothing in them, he declared, that any mother or daughter need hesitate to read.

Turning to the future Mr. Varley spoke of his need of a change of climate; of the pressing call for plainness of speech in the present day, and his resolve to use it; of the unspeakable debt of gratitude he felt towards his beloved wife for her unceasing help given to him in his work; and of their desire to do what they could in Melbourne to welcome lonely young men into their home, and give them a helping hand in the battle of life. One of the sad things to Mr. Varley in the present time is this, that there are so many lonely and tempted young men in our great cities, who have nowhere to spend their Sundays. Oh that many of the West-end drawing-rooms were open to receive our young men in business houses. If Christian ladies would let it be known in some of the shops that young men would be welcomed in their homes, what good might they not do. What avails all this fashion and æstheticism in the sight of God, if we take no practical interest in our fellows, and leave them to perish. Satan is very busy; ungodly men and women are busy; the public-houses are busy from morning to night; what are we doing in the way of self-denying, earnest work, to counteract these forces of evil?

In closing, Mr. Varley made a statement as to his relations with the West London Tabernacle, the purport of which was that there had been much misapprehension with respect to his financial position. He was not, and never had been, a rich man; and though, as a man of God, he did not make public his needs, yet he had not been without his monetary anxieties. The point he sought to impress was this: that Christians generally should have more consideration for evangelistic workers, and see, that they do not suffer because they seek freely to render service to the Church of God. A last word was one of appeal that the truth of God might be held and defended at all costs.

During the evening earnest prayer was made to God by several of the brethren that Mr. and Mrs. Varley and their family might have a safe voyage, a prosperous stay in Australia, and, if it please God, a speedy return. Mr. Varley hinted that possibly he might come back with the swallows in the early summer.

LONDON BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

A LONG and animated meeting of this Association was held on Tuesday afternoon last week at Bloomsbury Chapel, at which there was a very large attendance of ministers and representative men. The meeting originated in the desire, strongly expressed, by several ministers educated at Mr. Spurgeon's College, to have a formulated creed as the basis of the Association.

A resolution was moved by Rev. F. B. Meyer, reaffirming the belief of those present in evangelical truth, but repudiating a credal basis as alien to the spirit of the free churches, and as substituting an invention of man for the Holy Scriptures. He suggested that, instead of dealing in vague rumours, each case of defection from evangelical doctrine should be dealt with in the spirit of Christ's command; first a personal interview, followed, if needful, by an appeal to the Association.

An amendment was proposed by Rev. Mr. Hooper, Hendon, requesting that a committee should be constituted to draw up a declaration of the truths included in the term "evangelical." This, after a long discussion was lost by 115 to 83; but it was afterwards carried by a large majority, when proposed in another form by Dr. Underhill.

Rev. A. G. Brown made a special appeal that the meeting should carry this amendment, as its rejection would involve the exodus of a great number of those who thought with himself that the word "evangelical" was too vague. Mr. Meyer said he was quite willing to receive the amendment as part of his motion. And it was afterwards agreed that certain ministers who were named, including Dr. Angus, Dr. Clifford, and Professor Gracey, should draw up the statement required. The result of the deliberations of this committee will be looked for with much interest.

A BRISTOL BIBLE-CLASS.—One of the most remarkable Bible-classes in the kingdom is that conducted in Old Market-street by Mr. C. R. Parsons. During its existence of eight years, the attendance has risen from thirty-five to about seven hundred. A large number of the men in the class have given good evidence of conversion, and there is quite a network of agencies connected with the class. At the recent annual meeting, Mr. Parsons stated that it was intended to raise a loan fund, from which any members needing it will have temporary assistance. There is also a lads' Sunday morning class, with considerably over one hundred members.

BOMBAY.—At a meeting of the Bombay Missionary Conference an intensely interesting paper was read by the Rev. Dhunjibhoy Nowrojee on the Native Protestant Church in Bombay. He stated the number of recorded native converts in full communion, after seventy-five years of missionary work in Bombay, to stand at 454. This includes all the Church of England, Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Free Church, and other Protestant native churches, with the exception of the Salvation Army, the members of which are of a rather floating character, and who have not yet been able to fix a settled native corps in Bombay, though there are two places where preaching is regularly carried on. These numbers do not include children, the exact number of native Christians and their children being 956, or with Salvationists, say one thousand. The question may be asked by English readers, "Why do you not include Roman Catholic natives in the number?" Surely they are partial Christians. They are not. The Roman Catholic natives are not Christians at all, but have changed one form of heathenism for another.—Bombay Guardian.

SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

The eighteenth conference took place last week. This is a unique gathering, smaller in numbers than some others, but none the less enjoyable and edifying on that account. The convener and chairman, the genial and generous host, is the Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, of Fisherton Rectory, who overflows with good spirits, but is always intent upon spiritual good. The tone he gives to the meetings is solemn but not sombre; joyous and bright, but always reverent.

The subjects were: in the mornings, "The Service of the King;" and in the evenings, "Foundation Truths." Nothing could be more timely, and no uncertain sound was given on either subject. Our limited space entirely precludes our giving more than a brief notice of the proceedings, and a few of the remarks of the principal speakers, without attempting to set forth their arguments as a whole.

Rev. J. Taylor, Torquay: Three things are said in Scripture to abound—sin, grace, and suffering. The secret of holiness is love (1 Thes. iii. 12, 13), and love is founded on knowledge (Phil. i. 9).

Rev. J. Ormiston, illustrating his subject by Gideon: The Lord did it: in the dark He did it: the darkness and the light are both alike to Him. The people were too many for God. He cannot use the fearful, nor those who think more of their refreshment than of the battle.

Rev. F. E. Wigram: The conditions of work —we must be with Christ—without self—having the will surrendered—and doing all for the glory of God.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites: God does not eradicate sin like extracting a tooth: but He has promised that sin shall not have dominion over us.

Rev. E. F. Baldey: Holiness of heart and life is essential to acceptable service. Service is not optional. We are saved to serve.

Mr. R. C. Morgan: Only as we hold fast grace, through which we have received an unshakeable kingdom, can we serve God acceptably.

Rev. Mr. Worsfold: The highest privilege in Christian life is to show forth God's power in our daily walk. We wish to represent our King; the world knows nothing about Him: let us ask for grace not to misrepresent Him.

Rev. Walter Bradbury: The presence and power of the Lord are essential for service. The greatest injury to the cause of Christ is to preach the Gospel without the Holy Ghost.

Mr. West: Paul's power was in living in the presence of the Lord.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites: Cathedral cities are not forward in sending missionaries abroad. We have too many ladies; many of them would be much happier in the foreign field.

Rev. R. Graves Walker: What we have got is God and his right arm. We must be loyal. "Cursed is the man that maketh an idol, and putteth it into a secret place."

Rev. Mr. Law: The presence and power of God are necessary, and we have them. There never will be a time when He will not be with us.

Rev. Dr. S. C. Morgan: The fool says in his heart what he does not utter with his lips, "No God." The greater fool is the man who believes there is a God, but lives as though there were none.

Rev. J. B. Figgis: John v. 24 contains a double condition and a triple blessing. We have not remission of sins through the life of Jesus, but through his death.

Mr. Eugene Stock: Sin in a believer is more sinful than in an unbeliever.

Rev. R. Graves Walker: You are saved through agony, and through joy; not your agony, not your joy, but his. God's victory is finished; his triumph is going on.

Rev. J. Wilkinson: The Jew is the key to the problem of the world's interests. The love of the Father to the Son is the measure of the love of the Son to his people, and should be of his people to each other. I never found a Jew or Gentile thoroughly awakened who did not find himself a great sinner. No man, when convinced of sin, doubts the Divinity of Christ.

Mr. West: Distinguish the times (dispensations), and the Scriptures will agree.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites: Bridges, the expositor of Psalm cxix., visited a lady who was very miserable, and said to her: "Madam, the soul has two eyes: the one to look at self, to keep us humble; the other to look at Jesus, and fill us with joy. If you shut this eye no wonder you are miserable."

Rev. — Hughes, vicar of St. Matthew's, Southampton: In old Rome the Temple of Honour could only be entered through the Temple of Virtue. An old painter was constantly adding touches to his pictures. Being asked why, he replied, "I paint for eternity." Let us live for eternity. Another painter broke his pallet because he found himself satisfied with his work, and was sure his painting days were done. It is to those who continue to the end that God's promises are given.

AFTERNOON ADDRESSES.

Mr. Wilkinson gave an exposition of Esther, with reference to Israel's past and future, which was much enjoyed.

Mr. Fegan and Mr. Holland moved the hearts of all by their records of work done—the former in rescuing boys, and the latter young and old of both sexes, from the sins and sorrows of the great city, and preparing them for the eternal city.

The Rev. F. E. Wigram gave a very interesting account of his visits to stations of the Church Missionary Society in various parts of the world; and was followed by Mr. Eugene Stock, who spoke of the present condition and prospects of Africa. A daughter of Canon Tristram, a lady of great intellectual power and ability, and who last year took a B.A. degree, has given up all her honours, and is going to Japan to seek to win to Christ the ladies of that progressive country.

BRIEF AFTER-DINNER TALKS.

Mr. Haselton, secretary of the Aged Pilgrims' Society, said they had 7209 pensioners, and £7800 was expended among them. There were four buildings, giving rooms to 180 persons. All these inmates and out-pensioners would probably be in the poorhouse but for this society.

Mrs. Thwaites gave some touching illustrations of the work of the Y.W.C.A. One young woman, in order to make a little money for the work, had undertaken to darn her companions' stockings at a penny each. Among the hindrances were mentioned: (1) The tone of patronage adopted by some ladies, which the young women would not endure; (2) the attentions of young men leading to aimless flirtations and Sunday outings; (3) dangerous and misleading novels, such as those of Edna Lyall, are an appalling evil.

Rev. Mr. Graham said of the Irish Church Missions, that in the West of Ireland, where their stations existed, there were no crimes or outrages; while in neighbouring localities, where there were no such stations, these are rampant. Sixteen years ago, two men who tried to distribute Bibles were obliged to fly for their lives; in two months recently in the same place 800 were sold, 200 of which were the authorised version.

Miss Griffin said that eight years ago a policeman might have said, "No man cares for my soul." Now there are 150 branches of the Policemen's Association, and God has converted numbers of them.

THE AFTER-TEA BIBLE-READINGS,

not exceeding five minutes, were instructive and encouraging. We have given extracts from a few of them in the notes above, but we cannot transfer to paper the pleasant and edifying atmosphere of these occasions.

Nothing was more thrilling than the narration by Mr. Wilkinson of the conversion of a nobleman, who not many days after passed into eternity. During the Jubilee procession, Lord —— said to himself, "I was present at the Queen's coronation fifty years ago, and I am here at her Jubilee; but I shall not be here fifty years hence. Where shall I be?"

Mr. Wilkinson spent his vacation in the locality where this nobleman was visiting, and was asked to meet him at dinner. His daughter was extremely anxious for her father's eternal welfare, and begged Mr. Wilkinson to endeavour to get into conversation with him. "No," was the reply, "he will see that it is a planned thing, and we may do more harm than good. But we will lift up our hearts in prayer, that if God has a message for your father through me, I may be enabled to deliver it wisely." A remark was made during dinner which interested the nobleman, and after the ladies had retired the subject was renewed. This led to a private interview, at which Lord —— entered somewhat fully into his past history. Then he proposed that they should pray, and in a very childlike way he thanked God for his mercies, and then said: "My daughter tells me I can be saved for nothing. I heard in church on Sunday that I can be saved for nothing. And now this man tells me that through Jesus Christ I can be saved for nothing. If that be so, I accept it."

Both men were in tears, and furthur intercourse satisfied Mr. Wilkinson and the daughter and other friends that Lord —— had passed from death unto life. This was in August last. On the 23rd of the same month he died on board his yacht.

Mr. Wilkinson did not mention the name, but as it was publicly mentioned at Manchester we may add that it was Lord Alfred Paget.

PRAYER FOR THE EAST-END.

The want of a weekly united prayer-meeting for Christians on Saturday evenings has long been felt in Whitechapel. Entertainments and concerts to reach the masses have been substituted, where once hundreds of Christians gathered round the throne of grace. As the recent dreadful murders and the increase of lawlessness keeps Whitechapel in a state of excitement, never experienced by resident Christians before, some friends from Miss Macpherson's Homes, and others, met on the evening of Saturday week, in the hall of the Victoria Home for Working Men, 39, Commercial-street, for praise and prayer. These meetings will be continued every Saturday, from 8 to 9 p.m., in the Victoria Home.

All Christians, of every section of Christ's Church, are heartily invited. Requests for prayer and praise will be faithfully laid before the Lord.

FINLAND.—This country, which since 1809 has belonged to Russia, received Christianity through its union with Sweden in the twelfth century, and participated in the religious movements which affected Sweden. The State Church is therefore Lutheran, not Greek. The Finns do not possess such liberty as most of the countries of Europe at present enjoy. No one can exercise the rights of citizenship unless he has been baptized and confirmed as a member of the State Church. Marriages are legal only when they have been celebrated by its clergy. In February, 1887, at Helsingfors, an association was formed for the furtherance of religious liberty and equality. The Landdag, which is composed of the nobility, clergy, burgers, and peasants, and which meets every third year, has often been urged to revise the laws affecting liberty to hold religious meetings, &c., but the clergy and peasants resist any change, though the nobles and burgers are more in sympathy with modern progress. We learn that the association is forbidden to hold any public meetings, or make any collections for the furtherance of its object.—Journal Religieux.

Evangelical Alliance Conference.

PLYMOUTH, SEPT. 25, 26, and 27.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

LAST year the Evangelical Alliance travelled as far north as Aberdeen in its annual pilgrimage; this year it has gone so far south-west as Plymouth. In each instance it was a first visit in those parts of the kingdom. The Alliance has been fortunate hitherto in securing, as the meeting-places for its conferences, the principal buildings in the towns it has visited, and the rule on this occasion has been sustained. The opening gathering was in the Guildhall, and the rest of the sessions at St. Andrew's Hall, the Y.M.C.A. offering it there a commodious and a comfortable home. "The unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" signalised the whole of the proceedings, and in testifying to "the truth as it is in Jesus" there was "mutual edification," in fulfilment of the prediction expressed, in expectant faith, by the framers of the circular which accompanied the printed programme. A representative local committee laboured successfully to complete the arrangements which the incoming of so many visitors necessitated, and at their gentlest hint the hospitable doors of many Christian houses stood open to receive guests.

As half-past six o'clock on Tuesday evening, the 25th, approached, a stream of "Evangelicals," belonging to various denominations, flowed into the Western Law Court, at the Guildhall, where a conversazione, according to custom, was held, prior to the public meeting. The LORD BISHOP OF EXETER (Dr. E. H. Bickersteth), whose father was one of the founders of the Alliance, presided over a numerous assembly which nearly filled the vast hall. The platform was representative of lay and clerical sympathisers with the principles of the Society, and these, with the Right Rev. Prelate at their head, received, to use his words, "a right hearty Devonian welcome." All present seemed to be impressed with the prospect, doubtless very near to some, of the Alliance above, of which this one below was a type, though shadowy in comparison, as they sang with earnestness—

Come, let us join our cheerful songs
With angels round the throne.

A fervent prayer from Rev. Joseph Wood (Presbyterian, of Plymouth) disposed the assembly to devoutness of spirit; and then rose, amidst warm demonstrations of welcome,

The BISHOP OF EXETER, who, referring to one of the modern signs of a closer union among Christians, as indicated in the Encyclical Letter of the Bishops assembled at the late Lambeth Conference, observed that, notwithstanding the tenacious grasp, there manifest, of the historic Episcopate and of all it involves, a real yearning was exhibited for unity—a unity which, he believed, now pervaded the whole Church of God. That yearning, he went on to say, was no weak sentimentalism, no unsubstantial dream, no hope that would make ashamed: it was founded on the Rock of Ages. Foretastes of the perfect union longed for were found in united meetings for prayer (the week of universal prayer in January to wit), and in songs of praise. Nonconformists claimed for their authors Watts and Wesley. Doddridge and Cowper, Newton and Heber, Wordsworth and Montgomery, Monsell, Bonar and Keble, who led the sweet choirs of song in words which the spirit of love moved them to write: and no one singing their hymns cared to ask whether the writer was of his own church connection or of another. And here the Bishop employed a happy and inspiring illustration. Like the lark on the wing, we had risen above the mists of the valley; yea, into the pure ether of heaven. The world pointed with scorn to the dissensions and divisions of Christendom; but faith calmly answered, in words to which the hearts of Christians were vibrating day by day, "There is one Body and one Spirit, even as we are called in one hope of one calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of us all, who is above all, and through all, and in us all."

The genial task of giving the "Address of Welcome" fell to the lot of Rev. G. B. BERRY (Vicar of Emanuel, Compton Gifford); Mr. Fox, J.P., emphasised the greeting, and the response, on behalf of the Alliance, came by the mouth of Mr. DONALD MATHESON (Chairman of the Council), who claimed for the Society that it had greatly fostered unity of spirit, and in work, too, among evangelical Christians, counteracted the inveterate tendency to sectarianism, and assisted to drive away the odium theologicum which had done such tremendous mischief in the Church in past times. The Alliance was very much needed now, in prospect of the rising tide of Romanism; for it was necessary to set forth true unity in the Church of Christ, in opposition to the specious uniformity of the Church of Rome. Replying for the foreign delegates, Rev. Dr. Herrick (from Marsovan, Turkey) testified to the positive value of the Evangelical Alliance in mission fields, as regarded not only the fellowship enjoyed by the workers, but the work actually done.

"The practical value of Christian union as shown by the work of the Evangelical Alliance" was forcibly treated in an address by Mr. A. J. Arnold (General Secretary), who rapidly reviewed the distinctive work of the several branches of the Society, including judicious interposition on behalf of the persecuted in many lands, united prayer, and manifesting the unity of spirit prevalent among all true believers in Christ Jesus. He called particular attention to a fact illustrative of the value of union in prayer. Tracing the progress of missions during the past five-and-twenty years, he had found that the advance was concurrent with the growing observance of the week of prayer in the same period.

While the speaking was going on, a telegram was despatched to Berlin conveying a brotherly greeting to the International Committee of the Alliance in session there, and praying for God's blessing. An apology was tendered to the meeting for the absence of Lord Polwarth, President of the Alliance, on account of the state of Lady Polwarth's health.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The "Annual Address" was delivered at the morning session, on Wednesday (over which Mr. DONALD MATHESON presided), by the Rev. Dr. MACEWAN (Presbyterian Church, Clapham), who proclaimed the grand object of the Alliance to be the exaltation of Christ; for, said he, the more we exalt Christ, the less likely are we to give undue prominence to the minor denominational differences that divide ourselves. The subject of his address, "The Ascended Saviour filling all things," served as the centre of many a radiating thought and many a thrilling passage. A few will show the drift and spirit of the theme:—What an exalted view the doctrine of the ascension gives of Christ Himself and of his work; and what a powerful encouragement it affords to trust and serve Him. Other doctrines of the Gospel have their important relations to particular churches and systems of Christian belief, but this was one of those all-embracing truths which, like the arch of the sky overspreading the earth, may be said to encircle in one common interest and brotherhood all the churches and creeds of Christendom. It was the Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, that spoke of Christ having ascended far above all heavens, that He might fill all things; and he said this in connection with that variety in unity, and unity in variety, which characterises the Church of God upon earth. What did Christ's ascension proclaim concerning Himself? It was a witness to his Divinity. It was a witness also to the greatness of the work which, as a Saviour, He had done. It gave assurance of his sympathy with all who take part in his work upon earth. He who descended was the same also which ascended; it was his human nature that Jesus took with Him into the heaven of heavens: the same Christ, yet how highly exalted; the same in human sympathy, the same in human passion, the same in willingness to help and to succour all who seek his divine aid. Our interests are identified with his interests, our humanity is for ever identified with his, and his ascension is but a pattern and pledge of our own. Indeed, our ascension began in his: He is our great forerunner, who has passed into the heavens, the Head of his redeemed Church. Our wants are his wants; our interests his interests. His ascension gave assurance, too, of his nearness to us in trusting and serving Him; of his sufficiency for us. If we were to give Him that place which He claims, and to which, in virtue of his ascension, He is entitled, then all our prayers, preaching, worship, and Christian effort must draw its inspiration directly from Himself. No sacerdotalism, no magnificence of service, no mere humanitarianism, no Mariolatry, or confessional, should be allowed to take his place. The world needed Christ; neither Church nor world could do without Him. As the progress of agriculture could never outgrow the fertilising power of the earth, or the vivifying influence of the sun, so neither could the world's progress, whether in the world, or in the Church, dispense with the need of the living and ascended Jesus. In these days, when Antichrist, with all their boasted human progress, sought to undermine the foundations of our freedom, and when infidelity insinuated itself under so many guises, when heresy crept in, when the sanctity of the Lord's Day was being invaded in so many ways, when, too, men of this world's philosophy spoke as if they were the physicians to root out moral disease, and to regenerate mankind, and when the tide of commercial excitement was rising higher and higher, and threatening to submerge society in mere secularism, from which thoughts of God and eternity were excluded, it was for the churches of Christendom to lift their time-honoured testimony to "the truth as it is in Jesus," and to proclaim, with one heart and voice, that He is the only Head of his Church on earth, and the only hope of men. Let England be faithful to Christ, and Christ would be faithful to her; but let her prove faithless, and swift might be her ruin.

The "Practical Resolutions" were read and ably enforced by Rev. H. E. Fox (Durham). Adopted in 1846, these resolutions are read at every annual Conference. Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH (Norwood) spoke on "The Unity of the Body of Christ; its manifestation a special need of the present times." The body of Christ was the Church of the living God, i.e., all who were regenerated by the Divine Spirit, quickened by the love of Christ, and made one with their ascended Lord. The unity and oneness of this body was as clearly taught as the fact of its existence and its association with Christ; it was something we had to rejoice in as part of our common spiritual life, and then earnestly and individually to develop as we grow up into Christ, our living Head, in all things. But unity was not necessarily apart from diversity. There were diversities of gifts, and operations, and ministries. God did not always work through one form of church organisation, but He did work through all forms. The Evangelical Alliance did not wish to break up existing communities, or to disturb existing organisations, but they desired that Christians should be brought to a realisation of the oneness which the creeds asserted to be a fact, but which their lives so often ignored. Christ's Church was to bear testimony to his truth. But how that testimony was marred when diverse voices were raised one against the other. We could not ignore the unity of the Spirit without grieving the tender heart of the Lord, who loves us. As churches of Christ, they were, in these days, confronted with peculiar difficulties and dangers. All around them they saw the spirit of rationalism, and of scepticism, in relation to spiritual things. How should they meet this advancing scepticism and rationalism? Only by enforcing with experimental power, as well as with doctrinal force of assertion, the spirituality of the truth of Christ's Church, and the oneness which that spirituality denoted. Men would believe in them when they saw that they loved one another. When it so controlled their hearts and minds that they could sink all minor differences, and in faith, prayer, and common brotherhood could draw together for the defence of the faith of Christ, men would then begin to feel, as men felt in the Apostolic age, that the doctrine was indeed from above. Union should not end in mere talk; there must be action, and why should evangelical Christians not co-operate more freely in advancing the kingdom of their common Lord and Master?

General Field (General Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance) submitted to the Conference an abstract of the Report for the past year. The secretaries, he said, have been diligent in deputation work, and the enrolment of 700 new members is an evidence of unabated interest in the principles and labours of the Alliance. The Report was adopted, on the motion of the Rev. G. Hadow (Tiverton), who joined the Alliance when he was a clergyman at Plymouth forty years ago, seconded by the Rev. De Kewer Williams (London).

A telegram was read from Count Bernstorff, at Berlin, in reply to the message of greeting sent on the preceding evening. It was to this effect: "International Committee expresses warm thanks for brotherly greetings, and prays for God's blessing on the Plymouth Conference."

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

"Foreign Missions: The Future of the Native Churches," first engaged the attention of the Conference at the afternoon sitting of Wednesday, Mr. F. E. Fox, J.P., in the chair. In the course of his address, the Rev. W. J. Smith, M.A. (Vicar of St. John's, Kilburn), said we had reached a crisis in the history of Protestant missions. In missionary progress there were two periods, (1) the preaching, and (2) the formation; when the third stage, that of a native church, had been reached, then the missionary work proper ceased. It was in regard to the formation period he solicited consideration. There were two concessions which, in a general way, we should be prepared to make, viz., (1) that our own beloved form of church government, however prized and dear to us, was not perfect; and (2) we would fain not see again amongst the native Christians the war of churches, and the struggle of denominations. In the New Testament there was not more than a slight outline given of church organisation, therefore, a very ample latitude was permissible in developing that outline. In seeking to guard the native churches from the rifts and the fractures of divided interests, it would be a much simpler thing to have to deal with a few compact large societies than with manifold little ones. The only possible means of averting conflict and painful differences would be by the allotment of distinct areas to various missionary bodies: areas large enough to stand by themselves, and to agree by themselves, and to develop amongst themselves. The districts ought, indeed, to be either coterminous, each with a language; or, if not, fenced round by marked geographical boundaries. We ought, in short, to expand and to extend upon a more systematic and resolute scale than had yet been effected by the comity of missionary societies. Thus Presbyterians might be left to command a native language or a native district here, and the Episcopalians there; the Wesleyans here, and the Congregationalists there. In this way native Christians would not be brought into daily contact with all our bewildering denominations and our endless sections.

Co-operation, as in the translation of the Bible and other Christian books, might be extended to education and other objects. Here would be much economy in more than one society contributing towards central institutions for the education of the natives. Yet the chief and most important thing of all was to leave the natives as free as possible, and to foster in them whatever was indigenous—to cultivate their native styles of architecture, to adhere to their national costumes, to examine their municipal arrangements and their social order. We had made too light of these. We had often purposely subverted them. There should be no formation of State churches in the mission field. Whenever missionaries had acted as legates and as Lord Chancellors, serious complications had soon arisen. It was natural that the English Churchman should bring his prayer-book, and the Wesleyan introduce his class-meetings. Admirable indeed were these, but they should not be stereotyped. In Tinivelly, there was a native marriage custom, according to which a bridegroom does not give a wedding ring to his betrothed, but a wedding circlet—a little cord with golden ornaments strung on it, which is tied round the bride's neck. Instead of replacing this circlet by the ring, our Christian marriage service has been ordered so that the bridegroom is instructed to say, "With this knot I thee wed." Let the pattern of this accommodation be largely imitated. What finer scope for the activities of the Evangelical Alliance than the formation of a General International Missionary Council which, having on its board representatives of all Protestant missionary societies, might suggest, advise, direct, and co-operate with all movements for avoiding the schism, and for the advancing unity, amongst the native churches!

In the open conference that followed, Rev. Dr. Herrick (Turkey), whom Mr. A. J. Arnold (General Secretary) introduced as connected with the American Mission Board, said that the principles on which his Society had been working in Turkey for the last fifty years were identical with those laid down by the previous speaker. He asked for help towards the American college for the higher education of youth in Asia Minor.

A mission to India, to stir up spiritual life among the churches there, was described by Rev. H. E. Fox, who expressed a hope that the Indian churches would shortly be independent, and that native leaders would be raised to build up the churches.

Rev. Dr. Gritton pointed to experience as showing that a mistake had, in the past, been made, in imposing upon the churches in India ecclesiastical arrangements which were not in conformity with the genius of the native people.

"Culture as Hindering or Helping Christianity" was the topic of an address by Rev. Dr. A. C. Murphy (Presbyterian Church, Belfast), who held that true culture must uniformly help true religion. Religion demanded the development of the whole nature of man. There were two principal parts of culture—science and art. The scientific spirit could not but assist a true, while it exposed a false, religion. Beauty had its place by Divine right in religion as well as truth. The sense of beauty struggled for utterance through the baldest religious ceremony. The depreciation of culture was really irreligion, for what shocked the æsthetic sense could not but damage the spiritual sense. When he found the morbid dread of loveliness in the place where God was worshipped, he looked for cold and sullen views of God Himself. But, being what we are, he submitted that we must apply art to worship with a circumspect and sparing hand. The artistic, or the devotional part must never be allowed to overshadow the spiritual. Let culture play the part of minister, not of tyrant, to religion.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Right Hon. and Rev. Lord Forester presided at the evening session. Two addresses were delivered, the first by Rev. Canon Taylor (Liverpool), on "National Deliverances: the Spanish Armada, 1588; the Revolution, 1688"—an eloquent deliverance on a theme which has but recently commanded public attention—and the second by Rev. Dr. Nicholas (Wesleyan Church, Dublin), on "Christianity in relation to the Social Questions of the Day."

Dr. Nicholas said the teaching of Christianity was, "Don't be selfish; be fair." It was the selfishness of men that disturbed their mental balance, and led to unjust conclusions. But, then, Christianity said to men, much more than merely, "Do that which is just:" it taught them to be loving; it taught the brotherhood of man. Christianity told us to be fair in our dealings with our fellows, and then it taught us that our fellows are our brothers. If we felt that men are our brothers, we would not like to see them badly fed, or living in wretched tenements, in filth, in squalor; we would not like to see them badly treated; we would not like to have them sick without their receiving proper attention; we would not like to see their children grow up without education. Let us realise that men are our brothers, and then we should use our strength and energy in going about, as our blessed Lord went about, doing good. If we had a Christianised society, the individuals composing that society, just men and loving men, all social difficulties would vanish. Readjustments might have to be made time after time, but these would be made without strife or bitterness: men would feel that the laws on earth were being assimilated to the laws of heaven, to the eternal principles of justice; and they would say of earthly laws what the Apostle says of the Divine commandment: "For the law is holy, and just, and good."

The following resolution was passed, on the motion of Rev. J. Pitkin (Exeter), seconded by Mr. B. Thomas (Clifton):—

> The Conference having heard with deepest interest the valuable address of Rev. Canon Taylor, D.D., on the "National Deliverances of 1588 and 1688," when, in God's great mercy, our civil and religious liberties were preserved to the nation, and having also taken into consideration the noble testimony to the cardinal truths of the Gospel borne by faithful ministers of the various evangelical churches at public meetings convened by the council in March last, desire to unite in offering special praise to God for the grace and wisdom given to those who took part in the proceedings. The Conference rejoice that such special witness for God and his truth was called forth, and they would assure the council of their warm appreciation of the public protest thus made against the prevailing sceptical views and superstitious practices which appear to be increasing in our midst, as well as against teaching which is opposed to the redemptive work of our Lord and Saviour. The Conference therefore place on record this expression of their full confidence in the council as the executive of the Evangelical Alliance, and pledge themselves, in dependence upon the Holy Spirit to a continued earnest support of the principles and great objects of the Alliance.

THURSDAY MORNING.

General Aylmer was chairman. Prebendary Edmonds, B.D. (Rector of High Bray, South Molton), delivered an address on "The Bible, a Witness in all Ages to the Common Salvation, and to the Unity of God's People." They were brethren, with inherited differences, outstanding disputes, historical inequalities. Some of these were not trifles that evaporated in the warm atmosphere of an Evangelical Alliance, but were questions only just short of the highest in importance. They would, however, never deal hopefully with their unhappy divisions while they felt uncertain whether or not they owed a brother's love to one another on the ground of a common salvation. He was willing to surrender whatever applause some might be ready to give him if he betrayed a lukewarm spirit towards his own Church; but, he added, "Our ugly cracks do not go to the bottom." The floods of division had arisen, had separated group from group, until the visible Church looked not like a continent, but like an archipelago. These islands, however, deep down, were rooted in the primary foundation, and that rock was Christ. When the floods subsided the unity would appear. The obligations which grew out of this were many-sided—wider far than the basis even of such an Alliance as that. If some high soul, full of Christ—full of his high priestly power and consecration—was just now to take his stand, where it was no illusion to discover room for him, on this unbreakable rock of the common salvation, and swing his censer there, right and left, over all his brethren, he might do much to stay the plague of division. There were signs that such high souls were likely to appear. Much that looked like division was not really division; much that was all but division might take a different shape under favouring conditions; and meantime there was something that all could do—all could seek to produce that temper which made healing thoughts not impossible. It was a plain duty not to deepen existing ditches, or to break down existing bridges, and to have as few contentions as possible. War, if not necessary, was a crime. "The common salvation" was a noble watchword, the Bible provided us with it; but nearly all the discipline of ecclesiastical life was a discipline with a distinct tendency to narrow our thoughts of "the common salvation." The one Catholic and Apostolic Church was not seen as yet, it was an object of faith rather than of sight; but it was nearer and clearer than before. Those who were best acquainted with the early "undivided Church" would be the least ready to affirm that ground had been lost in the matter of unity. Here were many dangers around and ahead. "The common salvation" was exposed to searching tests, but there was no peril so perilous as party spirit, no loss so surely fatal as the loss of love.

For want of time, the next speaker, Rev. F. W. Macdonald (Wesleyan College, Birmingham), had to abridge an eloquent address on "The Oneness of the Christian Life; with Illustrations from History and Literature." Those who studied the history of Christian doctrine, he said, would admit that one of the first impressions received from that study was frequently disappointment and perplexity. Diversities of belief led to the opinion that proof was impossible, and definite conclusions unattainable. This feeling would minister largely to scepticism, were it not found that difficulties were not all they seemed to be, and that variations of doctrine lay within tolerably definite limits; that the fixed points of Christian teaching in ages and regions most remote from each other were, after all, very much the same. It was much to be desired that Christians should recognise each other as brethren. The brotherhood of Christians was not constituted by, and did not depend upon, recognition; it existed whether recognised or not. But brotherhood must not be confounded with brotherliness. Men were brothers by birth; brotherly by consent. So Christian brothers must needs be one, but they might be, and often were, most unbrotherly brothers. It was their business not to ask men to be brothers, but to say, "Sirs, we are brethren," and to cultivate the spirit of brothers. A man could not belong exclusively to his church or sect, and the private rights of communities yielded to the larger rights of the kingdom of God. There was a free and common circulation of spiritual life through the various communities of Christendom. No church, no school, no period was self-contained or self-sufficing. A man bred in this or that church might be quickened into spiritual life by a breath from beyond its borders, e.g., a clergyman's son was converted by a sermon of Mr. Spurgeon, and a deacon's daughter by a sermon of Mr. Aitken. Mr. Moody's spiritual children were in all the churches on both sides of the Atlantic.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

This was a meeting for open conference, Mr. W. D. Hanson, J.P. (Cornwall), presiding, and the two subjects for consideration being (1) "The Lord's Day," and (2) "Unbelief, and How to Meet it."

In his address on the first of these themes, Rev. Dr. Gritton (London) said: Nothing more desecrated the Sabbath than the drink traffic, and the Sunday press. The former was nourished, under false pretences, by working men's clubs, especially in London. Various organisations and societies rendered it difficult to keep the Lord's day sanctified and a day of rest, and these dangers grew in proportion to our cosmopolitan education. The dangers were many, and serious. In view of these perils, he urged upon Christians a cultivation of a sense of the immense importance of the day of rest in its aspects as a memorial, a promise, a possession of blessing, reminding themselves of its influence on the body, the mind, the spirit; its benefits to the family and to the nation.

The second selected topic was intrusted to Rev. T. T. Waterman, B.A. (London), who began his paper on "Unbelief, and How to Meet it," by reference to the publication of recent novels as an indication that change is unquestionably coming over religious opinion, that women of culture and ability are discussing questions which have heretofore been generally left to divines, and that the novel now possesses immense influence as a vehicle of thought, as an arena of debate, and as a means of attacking or defending Christian truth. He also showed that articles are frequently contributed to periodicals on controverted religious topics. Consequently, the views of unbelievers are put before the so-called educated public, who are beginning to accept them, or, at any rate, being persuaded that they have some claims on their attention. Reference was also made to the "secular" propaganda. With regard to the practical measures for counteracting current unbelief, literature could be best met by literature. A large number of scholarly works have been called forth by modern attacks on Christianity, which are rendering invaluable assistance to those who are able to study them. But what is wanted is a more popular presentation of what has been thus produced, sound in argument, clear in style, brief in treatment, handy in form. The Religious Tract Society has provided a larger supply of Christian evidence literature than all other societies and agencies combined. There is a demand for short and carefully written tracts. The Christian Evidence Society gave away 75,000 last year. A weekly publication was also required to refute and counteract the influence of publications advocating Secularism.

But the printed page would never altogether supersede the living voice. The ministers of religion should therefore judiciously furnish reasons for believing the truths which they preach, and supplement their own teaching and ministry by calling in the aid of experts to lecture on those subjects with which they felt themselves unable adequately to deal. Such lecturers were supplied by the Christian Evidence Society; but, inasmuch as they have no one entirely devoted to the work, it was desirable that at least two men, of wide and thorough scholarship, should be wholly and constantly employed in going throughout the country. Open-air lectures were recommended. The recuits of unbelief were gathered from among the young, many of them from Sunday-schools and Christian families; indeed, most, if not all, of the prominent advocates of Secularism were brought up amid Christian associations. The Christian Evidence Society, therefore, encourage individual and class study of prescribed works, by offering to examine students, and award them certificates and prizes according to their merit. A large increase of popular literature, development of lecturing agency, especially in the open air, and holding of classes for the study of Christian evidence were, therefore, the means suggested by experience for meeting current unbelief.

THURSDAY EVENING.

This was the final meeting, and a public one. Colonel Malcolm (Burnfoot, Scotland) occupied the chair, and gave the key-note to the proceedings.

"Fidelity to the Truth: its Offensive and Defensive Aspects," Rev. Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson (Notting-hill Presbyterian Church London) spoke upon with his accustomed ability and fervour. So long as they held the fundamental truths of the Gospel, they were essentially one, by whatever name they might be called. The Evangelical Alliance had recently made a fresh claim on the adherence of all Christian men and women within these realms. Many within our churches had fallen from the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ. He did not think there was a single church now in Great Britain that could lift up its head and say, "Within the bounds of our communion there is no false doctrine believed or taught." That was a sad confession. Whether they looked to the Church of England or to the Church of Scotland, or the Nonconformists in either of those kingdoms, or in Ireland, they found that some people were allowed to proclaim falsehood, and to preach from the pulpits that which was contrary to the doctrines stated in the fundamental basis of the Evangelical Alliance. The mischief lay here—that no one seemed prepared to take a bold stand, and to demand the expulsion from those bodies of all who were teaching false doctrine. The Bible was not a book of conundrums or of puzzles; it was a plain book, written for plain people, and "he who readeth may run." We could discover easily for ourselves the truths contained in the old Book—truths that our fathers, the Puritans of England, formulated in such a way as they had not been formulated since. Members of the Evangelical Alliance held to those old doctrines, and were more united than Presbyterians to Presbyterians, than Episcopalians to Episcopalians, Congregationalists to Congregationalists, or Baptists to Baptists. This was the great work the Evangelical Alliance had done: it had formed a true Church out of all the churches, and yet a Church that does not unchurch the others, or claim to be a Church itself. It was a brotherhood in which evangelical Christians could come together "to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Standing by the old paths, they held firmly to these truths that had been the heritage of Englishmen as well as of Scotsmen, during the ages since the Reformation. The inspiration of the Bible was now denied on all hands, and the beginning of the denial was about fifty years ago, when some man wanted to explain God's method of inspiration, and to talk about suggestion and superintendence and other modes whereby men could be inspired to write God's will. We should not attempt to make any explanations about a thing of which we are in ignorance. Too often it was forgotten that inspiration was miraculous. A man was a fool who would try to explain a miracle. We know nothing about inspiration, any more than about the constitution of the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had two natures in one person, but who could explain it? We believe it, because God tells us. We believe that the Bible is a book at once the most divine and the most human in the whole world. It had been written by men with as much freedom as man can have in walking with God, and in serving God. When we were doing God's will the best, our freedom was greatest. As long as we failed to have God's Word as our sufficient and sole guide, there was no hope for the stability of piety or the progress of evangelical doctrine throughout the land. Our apologists—he would like to say this to his friends of the Christian Evidence Society—were very weak-kneed, apt to be frightened by ghosts, or, less than ghosts, shadows. When there were any objections raised against the truth, they seemed to be all of a tremble, and very anxious at once to give in and to compromise, or do something or other, instead of facing the difficulty as our fathers faced difficulties. If they were bold enough to do the same, the same results would follow.

Rev. Dr. Bennett (Worthing), on the same topic, said they took up no position of antagonism to intellect, knowledge, or science: there was no hostility to light, from whatever quarter it might come. But Christianity was not a philosophy which men have discovered for themselves, it was not a science being gradually reduced to order; but it was a revelation which God has given, perfect and complete in all its parts. When they heard of "advanced thought," they must retire to that quadrilateral, and, standing there, rest on the power of the living God.

"Our Spiritual Shortcomings, Possibilities, and Determinations," formed the subject of the closing address, which was given by Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A. (Brighton). Having touched gently, but faithfully, on the shortcomings even of Christians, he said, as to possibilities, that all things that are commanded are possible: God would be a tyrant else. God's commandments are not grievous. God could not abate one jot or tittle of his holiness; but his requirement for each man is such as, with the grace that God Himself gives at each moment, can be fulfilled; for He giveth more grace: He is always giving, and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is exceeding abundant, with love and power. All things that are commanded, then, are possible, because all things that are provided for are possible. God has made a wonderful provision for us in Christ Jesus. Is He not of God made unto us sanctification, and must not that sanctification be sufficient? Paul said it was: "My grace is sufficient for you" was the word of the Saviour to him, and he wrote it down that it might be echoed to each ear, and to each heart. All things promised are possible. Every promise of God in Christ is, yea. Trust Him, take Christ, and you will find the word kept, and the promise fulfilled. Let us pray—

Give me this hour in Thee to prove
The sweet omnipotence of love.

The devotional character of the Conference was sustained by special services, one preceding Wednesday's sessions, and the other prefacing those of Thursday. The first was a meeting for prayer and meditation, conducted by Rev. S. Vincent (minister of George-street Baptist Chapel); and on the second morning there was a united communion service in St. Andrew's Hall, Rev. H. E. Brooke (Bromley), presiding, and Rev. Alex. Wilson, B.A., of Bristol, delivering an address entitled, "The Still Hour; or, Communion with God." This, however, was given as the first business of the Conference immediately ensuing.

THE NEW AND LATTER HOUSE OF ISRAEL.—The recent death of "Queen Jezreel" has led to the collapse of this sect. The great building at Chatham is to be converted into a jam factory.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION has received a legacy of £500, which will meet the deficiencies of the summer quarter, and enable the committee and directors to enter on the work of the autumn without financial anxiety.

TRACTS FOR INDIA.—Colonel M. Millett, Dharmsala, India, writes:—"Would the kind fellow-workers who send me tracts, &c., kindly in future, as I hope to be moving about this cold weather, address their packets to Miss Fox, Amritsar, India? Tracts with pictures are specially prized."

FOUR NEW MISSIONARIES are immediately needed to fill up present vacancies in the staff of the Baptist Congo Mission. At the last meeting of the Mission Committee it was resolved that, in view of the great urgency of this need, an immediate appeal for reinforcements should be made.

YOUNG MEN IN SOUTHWARK.

The youthful secretary of this branch of the Y.M.C.A.—Mr. G. F. Assiter—must have been a proud man on the evening of Tuesday last week, to see the magnificent Metropolitan Tabernacle crowded from floor to ceiling for his anniversary meeting. He could not, of course, have been sanguine enough to suppose that such a vast concourse of people had come there simply to express interest in the work of the Association. Mr. Spurgeon himself can attract a big multitude to his meeting-place any week night. When, in addition to his name on the bills there was that of Canon Wilberforce, and there was also the off-chance of hearing Mr. Sankey, we have a sufficient explanation of the phenomenal attendance. Anyway, the claims of the young men of Southwark were made known to an immense constituency, and this live young Association must surely be the gainer.

Mr. Assiter's report was commendably brief and to the point. He drew attention to the special feature of this branch, the provision of comfortable residence for young men away from home. Seventy had availed themselves of these advantages during the year, and fifty-eight new members had been enrolled in the same period. There are the usual meetings, lectures, classes, &c., and every effort is made to benefit those for whom the Association is designed. In order to secure a needed extension in the way of building, an appeal was made for about £400. A small deficit on the yearly accounts was wiped out through the generous kindness of Mr. Denny, the treasurer.

Mr. A. Lafone, M.P. for Bermondsey, was in the president's chair, and made a speech full of earnest appeal on behalf of the institution. He confessed that he had never been in the Tabernacle before, and could hardly be blamed for not discovering all at once the proper pitch of voice for such an auditorium. Sir Thomas Chambers, the City of London Recorder, succeeded better, and made what Mr. Spurgeon afterwards called a historical speech; that is to say, he recounted the improvement that was manifest in the social condition of London compared with past times. Among the agencies that had brought this about of course he included the Y.M.C.A.; though, as a judge on the bench, he expressed the view that the peace is kept among the seething masses, not by force, but by "the silent omnipotence of law." Juvenile crime, he observed, has diminished in London seventy-five per cent. in the last twenty years. He moved a resolution thanking God for the past success of the Y.M.C.A., and commending its operations to the sympathies of the Christian community.

The resolution found a seconder in Canon Wilberforce, who began by declaring that he could not make an address, he felt so wearied in body, and still more wearied in mind. But everybody knows that when the eloquent Canon gets to his feet on a congenial platform he will rise superior to physical conditions; so he did on this occasion, and spoke in such fashion that Mr. Spurgeon was constrained to say about him: "Was there ever such an express train in the world?" Premising that he was present chiefly because he could not resist the privilege of once more speaking in that building in the presence of that honoured servant of God, Mr. Spurgeon, the Canon built up on that circumstance an impassioned plea for greater manifested unity among the different sections of Christ's Church, and for a cessation among Christians of the mutual process of picking holes in each other's coats. From that he passed to a powerful argument in favour of the Y.M.C.A., which commends itself to him because of its unsectarian character, and the fact that it places the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in the forefront of its diverse operations. It is belting the world with that glorious Gospel, and in London, with a quarter of a million of young men, its claims on the Christian are simply irresistible.

While the collection was being taken up a letter was read from Mr. George Williams, regretting his inability to be present, but enclosing an excellent solatium for his absence in the shape of £50. Last, but not least, came the address of Mr. Spurgeon. His words, he said, were to be addressed to Christian young men, but he evidently forgot that, for he proceeded to appoint himself "a recruiting sergeant," and with many convincing arguments besought the young men in the audience to begin at once to live in earnest. This life is a serious thing because of the eternal issues that hang upon it. There are some who talk about the special difficulties to a young man of the present time. There may be many difficulties now that did not fall to the lot of our fathers and grandfathers, but, on the other hand, they had many of which we know nothing. We do not now have to go and see our pastors burnt at the stake at Smithfield. But what if there are difficulties? It is by overcoming them that we may make our lives sublime. It is our part to swim, not with, but against the stream. We are not to be dismayed because of difficulties while we can go to God in prayer and receive from Him the power to overcome. What wonderful possibilities there are in such a gathering as this. Who shall say what uncrowned kings are here—what George Whitfields and William Careys—who shall do valiant things for God and for his cause.

SERVICE IN EGYPT.—Dear Sir,—Permit me to thank the donors of many parcels of tracts and periodicals which have reached me in answer to my appeal in The Christian of 24th ultimo, on behalf of Mr. Taylor, who "holds the fort" at Port Said. With many parcels I have received kind letters, and I am now in a position to send to Port Said two large boxes containing such a supply as will for many days to come help him greatly in his visits to the vessels touching there, and especially to those having emigrants on board. If the donors and others interested in such good work will follow it up with their prayers, it cannot fail to result in much blessing.—I remain, &c., R. Scott Moncrieff.

KING MWANGA, of Uganda, has been looked upon hitherto, and not without good reason, as an obstacle to the progress of mission work in Central Africa. It appears, however, that he has become more friendly. The reception he gave to Mr. Walker, an agent of the Church Missionary Society on his arrival at Uganda in April, was unprecedented in its magnificence and kindliness. Not only did he stand up and bow, a thing he has never done before to a guest, when the missionaries entered the audience chamber, where he sat enthroned among a large retinue, but he seemed pleased and satisfied on being assured that Mr. Walker was simply a teacher. This manifestation is regarded by Mr. Walker as a sort of apology for the king's past ill-treatment of missionaries and their converts.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.—One of our colporteurs was asked to conduct services in a village chapel, which had been given up in turn by several parties, apparently in despair. He says:—"I began in earnest, and, to be brief, the Sunday night congregations now fill every seat (it seats 180). We have a Sunday-school with forty scholars and five teachers. Some have been converted, and several restored. Others are waiting to be received." In addition to this, sales have been made to the value of £143 2s. 4d., besides constant visitation of the afflicted. Thus the double work of spreading the Gospel by the living voice and by the printed page has been abundantly blessed. The value of such an agency for spreading the truth in scattered country districts is immense, and its power of providing an antidote to the prevailing mass of injurious and immoral literature is very great. I should be glad to correspond with any friends wishing to establish colportage work in any district not at present occupied.

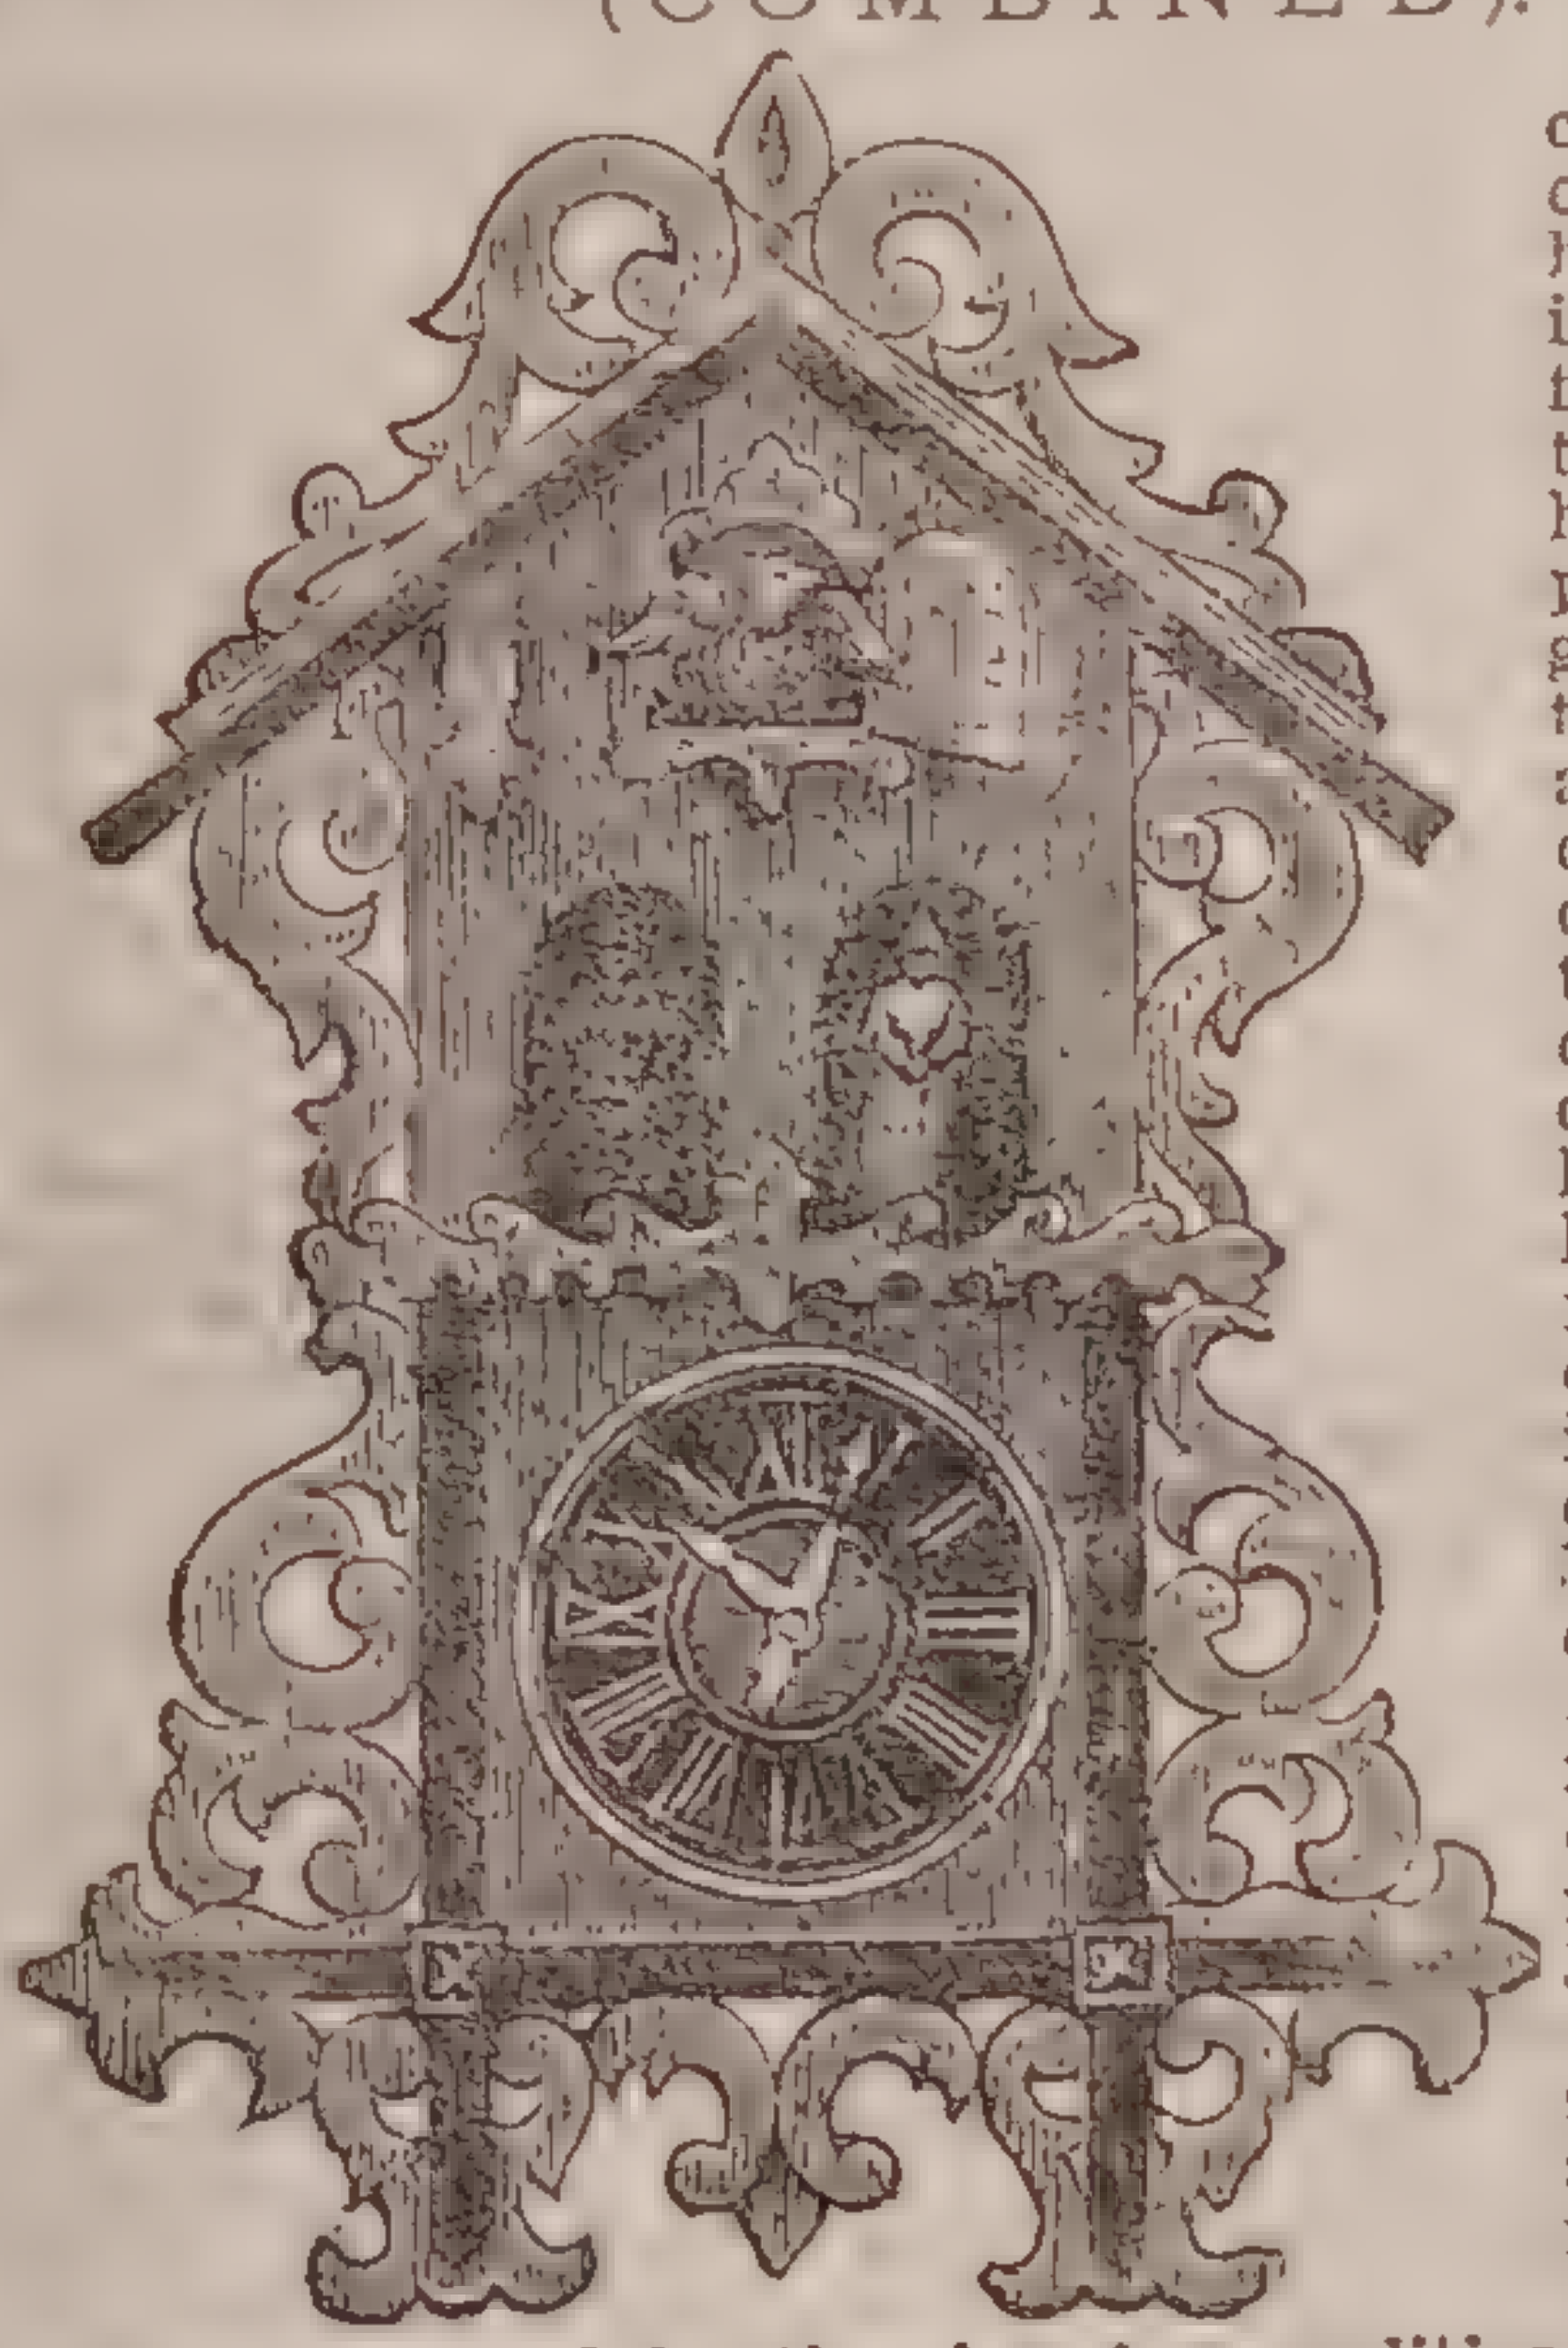
CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE

(COMBINED).



A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

REPORT OF A YOUNG MAN'S CASE at BRIDGWATER.

In November last I received a letter from a sister of the patient, containing a statement of his case, and requesting me to forward advice and medicine.

For twelve months he had had a violent cough—now becoming worse—a cough which terrified his friends, who thought he must die. There was a great amount of expectoration, phlegm mingled with blood, and extreme shortness of breath. "We have lost one dear sister in Consumption (she writes); we can see him losing flesh fast, and we are very anxious."

The result was, that he fully recovered before the Spring, and I received a letter dated May 25: "I cannot help writing to thank you for your kindness, and to speak of my dear brother's recovery. You will remember that I wrote to you from Rose Cottage, Moorland, near Bridgwater, at a time we all thought we should very soon have to part with him. His cough, expectoration, and spitting of blood, are all gone, and mother says he is the picture of health. Since writing you upon his case, we gave him nothing but your medicine, as advised, and asked God's blessing on the means.—Yours gratefully, DORCAS FEAR, Tyn-y-Ffywn, Barmouth, N. Wales."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"If you are not converted, then it is useless to think that you can win a soul for the Master."

"I remember, when a boy in New England, and just learning to swim, that there was a big rock, some distance out in the river under water, which we would swim out to and rest upon, and then swim back again.

"On one occasion a little crowd of us swam out towards the rock, stretching out our feet in order to try and touch it, but we failed to find it. There were some pale faces amongst us when we found the position in which we were placed, our strength being nearly exhausted. I remember taking a few strokes, when suddenly, my feet touched the rock, and I soon planted myself upon it. When I had done so I lifted up my voice to my comrades, and called out, "Here is the Rock!" and I was able to help them; but until my feet were placed on the rock I could do them no good.

AFRICAN MISSIONARY EXPLORATION.

In connection with the Conference of the Plymouth Brethren, held at the Waterloo-rooms, Leominster, last week, an address was given on Thursday afternoon by Mr. F. S. Arnot, the missionary explorer in Central Africa, when there was a large attendance.

Mr. Arnot said it was his privilege to attend a conference at Leominster in 1881, shortly after which he left for South Africa. It was his intention to reach, if possible, a part of the country at that time very little known, but believed to be high and healthy. With this object he crossed from Natal through the Transvaal and the Kalahari Desert to the Zambesi, intending, if practicable, to proceed from thence northward into the centre of Africa. Most of this part of the journey was performed in a waggon drawn by bullocks, and the chief difficulty was the extreme scarcity of water from the Transvaal frontier to Lake Ngami, stages of ten or fifteen days being performed without any water except what was carried by the party. Although the war with England was only recently concluded, Mr. Arnot did not find the Boers unfriendly to himself. He described them as an intensely religious people, high Calvinists, and convinced that they are the chosen people, the modern Israel, and that the natives are Philistines, with no rights which they are not at liberty to override. Mr. Arnot had provided himself with a good stock of Dutch Bibles, and the Boers, though ignorant and narrow, appear to have some good qualities, so that he had little difficulty in making his way with them.

In the neighbourhood of Lake Ngami, Mr. Arnot found a number of outcast natives, separated from their tribe owing to some quarrel, and in imminent danger of starvation. On reaching the Zambesi he appealed for them to the chief, and got them readmitted amongst their fellows of the Barotsé tribe. For similar acts of kindness he frequently was rewarded, when in difficulties, by the assistance of the benefited persons. Unable to proceed direct north from the Zambesi, Mr. Arnot joined himself to a Portuguese trader he came across, and reached Loando, on the West Coast, where, he stated, the British Consul keeps a distillery and employs slaves. From Loando, Mr. Arnot determined to make another search for a high and healthy country, where European missionaries could live. He started about due east, and, keeping nearly on the watershed between the Congo and Zambesi basins, he reached and crossed the Lualaba river.

Mr. Arnot's description of the journey, which he was the first white man to traverse, was most interesting. As a rule, he was kindly received by the native chiefs, though having to shake hands in one evening with all a chief's relations, including five hundred wives and other relatives in proportion, must have been a trying ordeal. It appears that women are allowed to become chiefs in Central Africa, and one female chief was most useful in checking the warlike propensities of a diminutive nephew, also a powerful chief, who seemed bent on becoming an African Napoleon. The Lualaba, which is really the upper stream of the Congo, was first discovered by Livingstone during his last and fatal journey, and on the east side of that river Mr. Arnot lived a considerable time, under the protection of a powerful chief interested in slave raiding, and founded a mission, which is still being actively prosecuted. His description of the abominations of the slave catchers and traders, and the sights the missionaries are constantly called upon to witness, was most affecting. The chief market for slaves now is the coast of Africa itself, so that the attempts to stop the transport of slaves at sea by British cruisers is very little use. Mr. Arnot considers the Africans are hospitable, though often very cunning in their devices to extort money; but in the native courts of justice he was never treated with anything but fairness. They are apt to be very suspicious of the motives of strangers; but, when friendly relations are once established, they are exceedingly faithful. Mr. Arnot intends returning to Central Africa early next year.—Leominster News.

THE NEW SURREY CHAPEL.

Sermons were preached for the last time in the old Surrey Chapel in Blackfriars-road (the scene of the labours for fifty-six years of Rowland Hill, for seventeen years of James Sharman, and for twenty-two years of Newman Hall) on Sunday week. The curiously shaped old building has now been abandoned, having been converted into a warehouse for machines, mangles, lawn mowers, &c., and has been replaced by a new chapel, erected within forty yards of old Surrey. The new structure is a model place of worship. It is spacious, and, without being ornamental, is handsome and substantial. It provides seating accommodation for about 700 people, in addition to a school-room, class-rooms and vestries; it is splendidly lighted and well ventilated. It is admirable for its neatness and convenience, and is excellently adapted in every way for its purpose. A great advantage is that it is situated in a prominent position in the main road, and in a populous neighbourhood, where there is large scope for aggressive Christian work. A provincial paper has described it as "the Cathedral of Primitive Methodism." During the ten years Rev. Benjamin Senior has been in charge of Surrey Chapel, his evangelistic labours have been greatly blessed, and seldom a service is held but what there are souls born again. There are now about 270 members of the church, and there are a number of agencies in action keeping spiritual work to the forefront. The new edifice has cost over £12,000, of which only about £9000 have been raised, thus leaving a debt of £3000.

The opening services in connection with the new chapel were held on Wednesday last week. In the afternoon Mr. C. H. Spurgeon preached from the words, "But we preach Christ crucified," the same text that Rowland Hill discoursed upon at the dedication of the old Surrey Chapel more than one hundred years ago. In concluding his sermon, which was a burning exhortation to preachers to preach nothing but "Christ crucified," Mr. Spurgeon said, "May God make this house a great soul-trap! May many be caught for Christ here! May a church be built up here in which every member is a worker!"

In the evening a public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. R. W. Perks. Addresses were given by Mr. Senior, Revs. G. W. M'Cree (Baptist), Hugh Price Hughes (Wesleyan), Joseph Toulson and T. Whitehead (Primitive Methodists). We would re-echo the words of Mr. Hughes, that this house may be a great "converting furnace."

THE MISSION HALL, Leipsic-road, Camberwell, is in the centre of a thickly-populated and poor part of Camberwell. A good work is being done by Mr. J. Coles, L.C.M., and his band of workers. Open-air meetings have been carried on during the summer months without interruption. God has greatly blessed the work during the past year.

MR. DAVID WALKER, OF SYDNEY.

Mr. David Walker, the general secretary of the Sydney (New South Wales) Young Men's Christian Association, has been spending several months in Europe, and leaves this week for America on his return journey to Australia. He presides over one of the largest and most aggressive Associations in the world; it is chiefly owing to his energy and pilotage that the Sydney Y.M.C.A. possess a magnificent stone building, which cost £36,000. Mr. Walker had been working incessantly for ten years, till, in June of this year, he left Sydney on six months' leave of absence. He attended the World's Conference at Stockholm, and has visited, or will visit, some of the leading Associations in England and America.

Last Thursday evening a social tea and meeting was held at Exeter Hall, to bid "God-speed to Mr. Walker and Mr. H. J. Fairfax." Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Kennedy, Hind-Smith, and Shipton. Mr. Walker's work in Sydney was very cordially spoken of. Mr. Walker spoke at a meeting at the Aldersgate-street Association on Sunday afternoon, specially addressing Christian workers. At night he spoke to a crowded audience at Exeter Hall. The address was most impressive, and at the close a number of those present besieged Mr. Walker, to inquire after their boys and friends in the colonies. Some whom he had helped whilst in Sydney came to thank him and shake him by the hand. On Monday evening Mr. Walker addressed the closing meeting of Mr. William Noble's Gospel Temperance Marquee Mission, at Dalston Junction. He is accompanied by Mr. H. J. Fairfax, a member of the Board of the Sydney Y.M.C.A.

TENT WORK.

Dear Sir,—Our friends will be glad to know of God's goodness to us in connection with our Gospel tent work this summer, which was closed yesterday by a praise-meeting of workers, converts, and friends, in our Institute Hall. Many striking personal testimonies were given by soldiers and civilians. (I propose to print a short account, and will gladly send a copy to anyone forwarding a stamp for postage.)

The tent was pitched upon a fine site in the busiest part of the town, close to the railway station and the People's Park. Meetings were held daily and nightly from June 23 to September 24. The conductors of the mission were Mr. Thomas Hogben, editor of our magazine, Ready, and Mr. Lancelot Middleton, the singing evangelist, aided by other earnest friends, among whom were deaconesses from Mr. Guinness's Missionary Training Institute.

The workers' note-books show 258 meetings held, 25,000 aggregate attendance, 560 lbs. weight Gospel literature circulated, 50,000 persons spoken with individually as to their eternal interests, in or around the tent, and from house to house; 496 names and addresses of persons professing to have been savingly converted during the mission, 102 of these being soldiers and sailors, and 84 children.

Messrs. Hogben and Middleton propose to visit Shorncliffe and Dover before the New Year. We ask the prayers of God's people for them, and especially that soldiers may be brought in.

The expense of the tent work has been £359, towards which I have received £121. Our special winter's work and wants will soon begin.—Faithfully yours, Sarah Robinson.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for October 10: Isaiah xxx. 18—"Therefore will the Lord wait, that He may be gracious unto you, and therefore will be exalted, that He may have mercy upon you: for the Lord is a God of judgment: blessed are all they that wait for Him."

SCOTTISH Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE.

The eighteenth annual Conference of the Scottish Y.M.C.A. was held this year at Paisley. On Tuesday evening in last week the proceedings began by a public meeting in the Town Hall, over which Mr. M'Gown presided. There were about 150 delegates present, and the attendance of the general public was large.

After heartily welcoming tbe Conference to Paisley, the Chairman remarked that in those days Young Men's Christian Associations acted a very important part in large centres of population. In these centres the temptations which beset young men are many and varied, and such Associations form a powerful counteractive to evil influences. In Paisley there are fourteen branches of Christian Associations, and over the whole of Scotland the Associations number 252, with a membership of fully 24,000.

Mr. M'Phail, of Greenock, said that while he did not undervalue denominationalism nor the church in which he was an office-bearer, yet the Y.M.C.A. had always seemed to him representative of the great principle that the Church of Christ is one. There is a tendency at times to one-sidedness in the development of Christian life; and the Y.M.C.A., in its operations and aims, seeks the development in the young men of their land, not of one-sidedness, but of all-roundness, which will give to their future life an impetus and power they could not otherwise possess.

In the name of the churches, Rev. T. Gentles, of Paisley Abbey, heartily welcomed the Conference to the borough. Speaking on behalf of the ministers, he expressed the high estimate in which the Y.M.C.A.'s were held as invaluable co-workers. It would be an unspeakable gain to the town, even in its commercial interest, if all the young men of Paisley could be enlisted in the Y.M.C.A.

Councillor Wilson, in the name of the Town Council, spoke a few words of welcome and encouragement to the delegates.

Rev. J. B. Sturrock, Free Church minister, said the meeting carried him back to the time when he received, in the Christian Association in Aberdeen, those impulses which explained his presence there. Many are unacquainted with the benefits to be derived from Christian Associations, simply because they have never been members of a Young Men's Association, such as he had been, in a strange city, far from home, where he had formed friendships and companionships, and received cautions, and guidance, and guardianship, from those older than himself. Ministers stand in their own light if they do not encourage the formation of similar Associations in connection with their congregations.

On Wednesday morning the Conference was opened by a discussion on "The importance of individual effort in winning young men to Christ, and interesting them in Y.M.C.A. work." Rev. J. Mills said he believed in personal contact with young men, and that there was much to be done in their churches. The speaking must not be ostentatious, but quiet and emphatic. Mr. Quarrier spoke strongly in favour of individual effort in the church, at home, and in the workshop, particularly the last; they must bring Christianity into their business, and if they could not they were better without the business. In the course of an interesting essay, Mr. J. C. Grant pointed to the necessity for exemplary lives on the part of Christians, which had more effect than speeches, however eloquent. He related an incident of personal experience, showing how by a young man speaking to him in church he was induced to attend a Y.M.C.A.

Another discussion took place the same morning on "Helps and hindrances in Association work." The subject was introduced by Mr. H. Bryce, of Paisley, who dealt with a large number of questions relating to the better conduct of the Associations, and urged the necessity of the establishment of central premises in towns.

At the close of the morning discussion, the delegates dined together in the Town Hall, under the presidency of Mr. John M'Callum. At the close of the dinner, the Chairman said that that Conference might suggest new forms of operation, and might lead to perfecting their organisations throughout the country. After all, methods and systems had their day; truth only abides, and the best witness-bearer of truth in all human institutions and associations must be in the life that is beautiful and noble in its character, in the life that is Christlike.

Mr. Macfarlane, president of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., said he wished to utter a worn of warning. They should be very careful to emphasise the word "Christian." There were so many associations that they required to be almost specialists nowadays to do any good. They were not merely a mutual improvement society, for if they only sought their own good they would not accomplish what they were sent there for. They had to work for the good and salvation of others, and, in order to carry out the idea of a Y.M.C.A., they must be out-and out-Christians.

Immediately after dinner a business meeting was held, at which the travelling secretary, Mr. R. Henderson Smith, presented his report. During the year he has visited all the districts in the country, except Aberdeen and Ayr, and his visits embraced 313 meetings. He referred in detail to the good results of the British Conference at Dundee, the increasing attendance at the district and smaller conferences, and the present-day interests of the subjects discussed. The report showed a great and gratifying increase in the number of buildings, and intimated that £500 had been bequeathed to the Stirling Building Fund by the late Henry Drummond. During the year Mr. Smith had assisted in forming four new Associations.

In the evening a largely attended public meeting took place in the Town Hall. Rev. Dr. Brown presided.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, said it was calculated there were 120,000 young men in Glasgow, two-thirds of whom did not attend church. That was a splendid field for the fishing of men, and the church looked to the Y.M.C.A.'s as a means by which the fishing might be done. Those Associations should be attractive, and everything should be so winning that a young man would feel after visiting them that he could go back again with pleasure. The church should, of course, in return, do something for the Associations. Other addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Hutton and J. Wells.

Thursday, the closing day of the Conference, was spent by the delegates at the Orphan Homes of Scotland. They were received by Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier, and heartily welcomed by the girls and boys of the Homes. After dinner had been served, Mr. Quarrier said he remembered very well, when he was a young man in a Glasgow branch of the Y.M.C.A. about forty years ago. He thought it was good for young men to have a tongue slow to speak, and ears swift to hear, and be close observers of things, whereby they could be useful to each other. They should remember, however, that they needed back as well as front men, and that the lower they made themselves the Lord took the greater delight to lift them up and favour them.

The various cottages and other parts of the Homes were inspected with evident interest. At half-past four o'clock a meeting was held in the church, under the presidency of Mr. William Crawford, of Paisley. During the meeting, Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, remarked that there were 700,000 young men in Scotland, and pleaded with the delegates before him to determine, when they went home, to double or quadruple their Associations. Mr. Quarrier said he had two motives in asking them to visit the Homes. First, that they might see what God did for those who trusted Him; and in answer to prayer; and, second, to teach them to love more and more the God that answered prayer. The delegates returned to Paisley by brakes, separating in County-square, at about half-past seven o'clock; and thus a useful Conference was brought to a close.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

It is almost impossible to work among these poor outcast women in Ratcliff-highway at the present time without a feeling of unutterable depression. While fear has brought several to our Refuge, and still many more to plead for a lodging in the Night Shelter, the hardened recklessness of far the larger proportion seems the saddest part of all. We are unwillingly convinced that the open sin in our streets is worse now than we have known it for several years, and this conviction has been confirmed by those occasionally visiting among this class in the Highway. This, however, only makes us feel the greater necessity for redoubled faithfulness in work, and renewed earnestness in prayer. The need for helping our poor miserable sisters is not diminished, but increased by these terrible events.

We are just entering with thankful hearts into our new Refuge and Night Shelter. We do not know what lies before us in our winter's work. The horrors which have so recently thrilled the whole country have occurred, the farthest within twenty, and the nearest within five minutes' walk from our doors, and we are to-day very specially needing the courage of strong faith.

Naturally there will be a shrinking on the part of many from coming into these districts, and it is laid upon us to send this little appeal, that those whose hearts beat in sympathy with ours may earnestly plead that, while we are holding the fort where sin is so flagrant and open, we may be kept faithful, and that our hands may be upheld by their effectual fervent prayers. God alone knows how great are the all-round needs of the work which are just now pressing upon us, and we believe He will lay it upon the hearts of his people to realise that this matter belongeth unto them, and that they also will arise and help us.

The opening meetings of our new Refuge and Night Shelter are fixed for October 30; detailed announcements will appear in future issues. We are hoping then to have large gatherings of friends, to unite with us in thanksgiving for the past and prayer for the future.

DINNERS FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Dear Sir,—On Tuesday, October 16, we purpose re-commencing our halfpenny dinners for poor children. Last winter, in three months we fed nearly 9000. If some of your readers knew what a boon this warm food is to these poor little people, they might be willing to help us by sending a sack of split peas, lentils, pearl barley, rice, or oatmeal, all of which will be required in order to vary the dinners.

Each child is allowed a large basin of soup and a slice of bread and jam, so that gifts of either money or jam will be thankfully received.

A MISSION TO THE JEWS has been carried on in Sydney by a Hebrew Christian since June 1. He appeals for tracts suitable for Jews, also for missionary periodicals, especially such as treat of the Jewish mission field. Address, Mr. L. Abramowitch, Y.M.C.A., Sydney, New South Wales.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, October 14.

Drunkenness.—Prov. xxiii. 29—35.

Every commandment of both the law and the Gospel is opposed to this terrible evil. Sixty thousand persons are said to go down to the drunkard's grave every year in England alone. Of twenty-eight cases of suicide in one month in London, twenty-one, Mr. Horsley tells us, were caused by drunkenness, and only three were not caused directly or indirectly by this awful curse. Young men are ruined by drink in every town and village in England. It is not, therefore, an unsuitable thing that our young men should be asked to consider what the Bible says of drunkenness. Our lesson relates to

(1) The Evils of Drunkenness.—Note here: (a) Sorrow (ver. 29).—Drink has probably broken more hearts than any other thing. It is taken to drown sorrow; but, alas! it creates it. God denounces woe against those who give it (Hab. ii. 19) and those who take it (Isa. xxviii. 1). (b) Folly.—"Babbling." The meaning of the Hebrew word is doubtful; it may signify the foolish talk of the drunkard. Babbling is a profanation of the sacred gift of speech—a prostitution of the tongue, and as such is to be avoided (1 Tim. vi. 20). (c) Disease.—"Wounds." Look in at the hospitals. Read the medical reports. Meditate upon the testimonies of medical men. (d) Disfigurement.—"Redness of the eyes." Drink mars the appearance of the drunkard—the comeliness of his features, the brightness of his eyes. The eye is needed for important service (Job xxix. 15). (e) Waste of time. "Tarry long." The hours of the drunkard pass quickly and are unimproved. Comp. Eph. v. 16. (f) Dissatisfaction (ver. 35).—"Yet again." Sin never satisfies, and this is specially true of drunkenness. Drink creates an appetite for itself. (g) Insensibility (ver. 35).—"Felt it not." The nerves of the drunkard are benumbed, and nature's monitors impaired. Physical insensibility is followed by moral insensibility, or the condition of those who are past feeling" (Eph. iv. 19). (h) Uncleanness.—Drink fires the passions, and gives the "strange women" (ver. 33) their best opportunities. (i) Exposure to danger (ver. 34).—The man who lies down in the midst of the sea is not far from eternity—the next wave may carry him away. Think of the awful eternity to which the drunkard is exposed (1 Cor. vi. 10).

(2) The Remedy for Drunkenness (ver. 31).—It is very simple. Abstain from strong drink—don't even look at it. Temptation sometimes enters through the eye. Comp. case of Eve (Gen. iii. 6); of Lot (Gen. xiii. 10), and of Achan (Josh. vii. 21). There is sometimes death in a look. David did well to pray, "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity." He couldn't do that in his own strength, so he looked to God to help him. Jesus will give power to the weak if they look to Him (Isa. xl. 29). If a pledge will help, sign it. If a blue-ribbon will help, wear it—these are helps to many—but beyond and above all, look to Jesus for deliverance from this and every other form of evil.

REV. J. MOUNTAIN, Congregational Mission Preacher, and Mrs. Mountain, who for nearly seven years have been making an evangelistic tour of the world, expect to arrive in Liverpool from Montreal about October 10, in the Ontario. Their postal address will be 267, Camden-road, London, N.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.—In connection with this institution a hospital-ship was launched at Great Yarmouth, on Saturday, from the yard of Messrs. Fellows & Son. She is 100 ft. in length and of 152 tons register. She is to be fitted up for the treatment of accident and illness among the fishermen of the North Sea. The vessel is named the Queen Victoria, and Her Majesty, who takes much interest in the Mission, subscribed £50 towards the cost of the vessel. The launch was witnessed by a large number of people. Mr. E. J. Mather, founder and director of the Mission, was present, and his daughter performed the christening ceremony. This is the first vessel of the kind that has been constructed, but it is hoped that others will follow. The Queen Victoria is the same type of vessel as those already in the Mission service.

Sunday Afternoon, October 14.

CROSSING THE JORDAN.

Josh. iii. 5—17; Golden Text, Isa. xliii. 2.

Introductory and Explanatory.—The people had now lain for some time encamped in Shittim, "the Acacia Groves," situated at the base of the Mountains of Moab, on the upper terrace of the Jordan valley, and about six miles from the river itself. Here they had mourned for Moses thirty days; here, too, Joshua was commissioned (i. 1—9), the spies sent out, and their report received (ii.), and the marching orders given to the leaders (i. 11; iii. 2). "The order of events was probably the following:—3rd Nisan, the spies are sent out (ii. 1); 6th Nisan, the spies return (ii. 23); 7th Nisan, the camp is removed from Shittim to the bank of Jordan (iii. 1), and the command (i. 11) is issued; 10th Nisan, the river is crossed (iv. 19)."—Speaker's Com. This day (10th Nisan) was the exact anniversary of the separation of the lamb for Israel's first Passover (Ex. xii. 3). The spies whom Joshua sent out were sent in a different spirit from those who were sent in unbelief thirty-nine years before. They went up to sit in judgment on God's word; there to find out how they could best fulfil that word.

Yet there shall be a space between you and it, about two thousand cubits (ver. 4).—"The ark, which was, since the making of the covenant, the special shrine and seat of God's presence, went before, to show the people that God, through its medium, was their leader. They were to follow at a distance (of nearly a mile) that the people might the better observe and mark how the miracle was accomplished. This they would do to the greatest advantage whilst coming down the heights, the ark going on before them into the ravine."—Speaker's Com.

Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest, i.e., barley harvest, not wheat harvest.—Dr. Thompson visited Jericho "early in April, and found the barley harvest already ended." He also found the river brimful, and saw abundant evidence of a recent overflow, great enough to widen the river from its usual breadth of about 100 ft. to that of 500 ft. Canon Tristram visited the Jordan just after its usual overflow. Though it was then quite full, they saw unmistakable evidence that it was 14 ft. higher a short time before. These "swellings of Jordan, due to the melting of the snows of Hermon, are a great point in our lesson. That vast host was called to cross the rushing flood when it was deepest and broadest. This made the miracle more glorious and encouraging to Israel, more appalling to the foe; it made the testimony to God's presence and power the more overwhelming. Further, such a crossing, being totally unexpected, was unopposed, while food was plentiful on account of the harvest just ripe. Very far from the city Adam, &c.—Rather, "Rose up in one heap, a great way off, at Adam, the city that is beside Zarethan" (R.V.). Seventeen miles above Jericho, at a place called the Horn of Sartabeh, "high rocks on either side contract the valley to its narrowest point; and here, in all likelihood, 'far off' from where Joshua and Israel were passing, were the waters held back by the hand of God." The passage would be quickly made. The people passed over right against Jericho.—Probably at Beth-abara, the house of passage, which is thought to have got its name from this event. Here John baptized; here Jesus, as well as Joshua, was magnified by God (John i. 28 and Matt. iii. 16, 17). See Bush.

LESSONS.

(1) Dedication.—"Sanctify yourselves," &c. (ver. 5). This was chiefly ceremonial cleansing, i.e., the washing of the body, clothes, &c., and the putting away of all unclean things. But all this signified moral and spiritual cleansing, the putting away of all known evil, confession and forgiveness, and a fresh dedication of all to God. The first step towards a new life should be a step towards God. To have God with them in power was everything to the Israelites; it is everything to us, whether boys or girls, or grown men and women, whether the heart is right with God, and God is with us in power. If we would have true victory in the life, we must have God in the heart. Press home the question, "Is you heart right with God, forgiven, cleansed, dedicated?"

(2) Decision.—Bold, decisive action follows swiftly upon lowly and earnest seeking of God. There is a Jordan before every great good—some tremendous difficulty to be bravely met in the courage of faith. Teachers should sketch the scene in a few simple words:—the broad, swift flow of the turbid river, the vast host descending from the high ground at the back, the priests bearing the ark nearly a mile ahead, the absence of all sign of the approaching wonder, and the glad decisiveness of the advancing multitude. What an illustration of the courage of faith!

In crossing the Jordan, the Israelites gave up all hope of escape in case of defeat. It was a decisive step that could not be recalled. So, in seeking the highest good, e.g., the Christian life, a higher Christian life, &c., it is well to be decisive, to put an impassable river between us and defeat. When a Christian boy in a new school takes his stand boldly for right, and for God, the battle is half won. Just so did Matthew, the publican, decide for Jesus: also Zacchæus.

(3) Deliverance.—Picture the miracle—the priests bearing the ark at the river's brink, while the countless host behind blackened all the slopes of the rising ground, the intense expectancy of the people, and the instantaneous staying of the waters from above; while those below glided swiftly away towards the Dead Sea. Then listen to the shouts of wild joy and ecstatic praise as that living stream, deep and broad, sweeps down the slopes, plunges into the river bed, and surges over the further bank. How majestic this deliverance, in its silence as in its power!

The secret of this deliverance is the presence of the Lord—"the Lord of the whole earth." The ark, the symbol of his presence, is there between the people below, and the heaped-up waters above—that and nothing more—God between them and the angry waters! How safe they are with such a shield—how blessed to have God as our shield!

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Decision.—(1) When Cortes landed in Mexico, he caused all his ships to be destroyed. There was then no choice for him and his men but to go forward and conquer, which they did, the bold decision of the General infusing itself through all the army.

(2) A hymn entitled "Will you Go?" fell into the hands of a soldier in the hospital. Twice he lifted it, and threw it aside; but took it up once more: this time to read and ponder. Then, taking his pencil, he wrote on the margin, "By the grace of God I will try to go. John Waugh, Company G. Tenth Regiment, P.R.V.C." That night he went to a prayer-meeting, read his resolution, requested prayers for his salvation, and said, "I am not ashamed of Christ now; but I am ashamed of myself for having been so long ashamed of Him." A few months later, and he lay dead on the battle-field. How timely his decision!

(3) Past Go-back Corner.—"I have got safe by de go-back corner," said a coloured freedman, "and I will go all de journey home."

(4) Said another, "When I left de rebel ranks, and crossed over to de Lord's army, I tore up de bridge behind me. Now I'm fightin' with de Captain dat's never lost a battle."

(5) When Alexander was asked how he had conquered the world, he said, "By not delaying."

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BERLIN.—In this capital, where the number of Christian churches is quite insufficient for the population, synagogue after synagogue is being built. At the close of 1887, the foundation of the tenth synagogue was laid. If this continues, there will shortly be as many synagogues as Christian churches.—Journal Religieux.

THE BERLIN STUDENTS' MISSIONARY SOCIETY has been in the habit of listening to a discourse by one of its members, on the difference between the methods of Catholic and those of Protestant missionaries. Now the rector of the university, Professor Schwendener, has requested the students, in the interests of religious peace, to depart from this rule. This is one out of a hundred symptoms of the present disposition of Prussian Administration. This is indeed a reaction from the former cramped condition of religious liberty.

SICK NURSING.—A committee has been formed in the city of Bâle which appeals to young men who, for the love of Christ and their fellows, would like to devote themselves to nursing the sick. A house, the gift of a friend, will shortly be opened, where these young men will be trained for work similar to that undertaken by deaconesses. They are to engage to serve the institution four years, when they will be free to remain affiliated, or to work independently. Such an enterprise of Christian love promises well. The Secretary is M. J Kägi, Chapelain de la Maison des Diaconesses, Riehen Bâle.—Journal Religieux.

Personalia.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, pastor of the Baptist Church, South-street, Greenwich, has during the past year baptized and admitted to the church over sixty persons.

Mr. Carnegie, the American millionaire, says that his wife and he are determined they will not die rich. They have concluded there is no way by which wealth can do so much genuine, permanent good as in aiding communities that show willingness to aid themselves.

Alderman Barrow, Mayor-elect for Birmingham, is a member of the Society of Friends, and a very energetic worker in the cause of the men's early morning Sunday-schools, as in every religious and philanthropic work, and a very firm adherent to the cause of temperance.

Rev. Evan Hopkins, Richmond, will conduct a series of conversational Bible-readings on October 4, 12, 18, 25, and November 1, at the Young Men's Christian Association, Exeter Hall. Opportunities for questions and conversation will be provided for.

Rev. F. Lawrence, hon. secretary of the Burial Reform Association, has returned from his mission to America. Both in Canada and the States he found the leading men ready to acknowledge the need of a thorough reform in the prevalent modes of burial on grounds religious, sanitary, economic, and æsthetic.

Rev. Griffith John, of China, as our readers know, lately declined the honour of acting as chairman for next year of the Congregational Union. His heart is set on the completion of the version of the Bible in "Easy Wenli." As this is near, his eagerness to give to all Chinese speaking populations a Bible easy to be comprehended, instead of that colossus of learning which has for so many years towered above all but scholars, must be indeed an all-absorbing pursuit.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein is engaged in a missionary pioneering expedition in Eastern South Africa. Letters have been received from him written partly at Gubuluwayo, and partly at Inyati (Matebeleland), dating from June 5 to 10. He was then in good health, and doing well. He speaks in high terms of the hospitality he received at the hands of Rev. C. D. and Mrs. Holm, the missionaries of the London Missionary Society at Hope Fountain (Matebeleland).

Mr. D. L. Moody is sketched as he appears 'at' home" by a correspondent of The Christian World. The writer says: "Much as he likes Northfield and the manner of life there, Mr. Moody readily admits that he prefers England and English life to everything, and that he would willingly live the rest of his days in the old country if he felt free to do so. When, however, we urged him to visit us soon, and backed up our request by influentially signed petitions from Oxford and Cambridge, he offered no ray of hope that he would come."

Dr. Harry G. Guinness conducted a most successful mission under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association in the city of Cork, from September 14 to 23. The Assembly Rooms, the largest public hall in Cork, was well filled each evening with a most attentive and earnest audience, at noon his talks to Christians were much appreciated, and on the missionary day deep interest was awakened in Africa, specially in the new mission to the Balolo tribe. A number of earnest workers in the Y.M.C.A. volunteered as missionaries to the Dark Continent.

"Old Cookie" was the familiar cognomen applied in Folkestone to Mr. William Cook, a well-known old salt, whose death from cancer we regret to record. In an interesting biographical notice The Folkestone News of Saturday last says:—"'Cookie' was one of nature's noblemen, equally liked by old and young, rich and poor, the circle of his acquaintance extending to all classes. He was ever ready with a helping hand to the young by offering plain words of earnest admonition; and as definite in administering an honest rebuke to the foolish and profligate, carrying himself with dignity and directness of purpose in the society of all. For half a century he had been identified with temperance work and the religious instruction of the seafarer. But the special work with which his name will be handed down to posterity was his regular attention to the wants of Sunday-school children, and the wonderful affection which existed between him and the last two or three generations of the little ones of the east part of Folkestone."

Miss Von Finkelstein has been lecturing to large and interested gatherings in Sydney.

Rev. George Muller has recently held a large number of meetings in Sydney. Mr. Muller is eighty-three years of age.

Chief Annosothkah, of the Mohawk tribe of North American Indians, has arrived in England, with a view of making a tour, and delivering addresses in support of the missions of the Colonial and Continental Church Society.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone describes the new Congregational Union Lecture, by the Rev. Principal Cave, B.A., on "The Inspiration of the Old Testament Inductively Considered,' as a "valuable work." He says he has read the first lecture, and means to go through the whole.

Rev. James Baillie, pastor of Bloomsbury Chapel, preaches a special sermon to young men and maidens on the first Sunday evening of every month, and so popular have these services become that the spacious chapel is often crowded in every part. The work of each department is carried on with vigour.

Col. Hatt Noble and Mrs. Noble, of Bray, Dublin, have been compelled, for reasons of health, to leave Ireland; they take up their residence this week at Redhill, Surrey. Many societies will miss their earnest Christian service; especially the Y.W.C.A., in which Mrs. Noble has taken a deep and practical interest.

Rev. F. J. Falding, M.A., D.D., President of the Yorkshire United Independent Colleges, has been asked to occupy the chair of the Congregational Union for 1889. He has already ably filled the office of Chairman of the Yorkshire Congregational Union, and it is believed that he will no less ably fill the presidential chair of the larger Union.

Professor Elmslie, in the opinion of The British Weekly, is the most popular Nonconformist preacher in the Metropolis, with the exception of Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Parker. Wherever he preaches and whatever the denomination, he secures a watchful crowd of listeners. Unpretentious, and even diffident in manner, he is master of a potent rhetoric, and has the accomplishments of a scholar and thinker. But his power in the pulpit is that of a comforter and reconciler.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer sailed from London for Bombay, in the s.s. Thames, on Thursday, last week, to resume his work there as editor of The Bombay Guardian, and to carry on the war against the social evils that prevail in our great dependency. He was accompanied by his niece, Miss Marion Dyer, and by Miss Margaret M. Rumsey. The latter will engage in rescue work in connection with Mr. Gladwin's Mission. Mr. Maurice Gregory, who ably conducted The Sentinel during Mr. Dyer's recent stay in India, has also gone out to Bombay to help in the work there. The Sentinel will now be edited by Mr. Jesse Herbert, barrister-at-law.

Messrs. Schemada and Nemura, two Christian gentlemen, have come from Japan to survey the state of things in London, which they regard as the Jerusalem of the Christian Church. They have come 13,000 miles to see for themselves the effect of Christianity on our domestic life, business enterprise, law courts, and government. Mr. Schemada is the pastor of a Christian church, Mr. Nemura, the editor of a Christian newspaper. Miss Maclean writes:—"Having come to our shores in order to mingle with Christians who represent Orthodox Christianity in spirit and practice, surely all will feel that they should be taken by the hand as Christian brethren and ministers of Christ. They have already spent two whole months in their lodgings, during which time they have had but little opportunity of furthering their noble mission. Who among your readers are able and willing to come to their assistance now, so that they may, in true apostolic fashion, be sped on their way, and be like oil to the conflict of opinion existing among thousands of their countrymen who are anxiously awaiting their return, so as to hear words of them." We shall be happy to send their address to interested friends.

MORMONITES IN SCOTLAND.—On Sept. 23, the dirty, dingy hall in the Gallowgate, Glasgow, was the scene of a conference on the present position of the Latter Day Saints in Scotland. The reports given from the various districts of the country show that at the present time "conversion" to Mormonism is "almost at a standstill" in the land, and that through emigration the number of members has greatly diminished throughout the country.—Christian World.

"FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS' SAKE."

Mr. Henry Hewett, who rented East Clandon Manor Farm, the property of the Earl of Lovelace, from 1875 to 1886, has been ruined through persecution on account of his faithfulness to Christ. While still in spiritual darkness or twilight he opened his barn for the preaching of the Gospel to the neglected villagers. Captain Smith, of the Evangelisation Society, arranged for fortnightly services, and before two days were over Mr. Hewett was won to the truth by the beautiful and Christlike life of the preacher. He then turned a cottage into a mission room, and a hundred people congregated there, while there were twenty in the church. This did not please the powers. Mr. Hewett was requested to close his mission-room, and on refusing to do so was turned out of his farm, for which he had paid £500, and which cannot now find a tenant at £250. He is, with his large family, endeavouring to emigrate to Canada, where (if enabled to go) he will not be ashamed of the Lord that bought him. His address is 4, Nelson-road, Merton, Wimbledon.

⁂ Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.

London Streets and Slums.

Rev. F. Hastings, the pastor of Tolmer-square Church, has gone a-slumming to some purpose. The collection of papers, written at various times, and published by the religious Tract Society entitled Back Streets and London Slums (1s.), gives a vivid glimpse into the daily lives of some sections of our city poor. Knowledge must awaken practical sympathy, and that is sorely needed; so we advise our readers to get Mr. Hastings' earnest little book.

A Book on Open-Air Preaching.

One of the most interesting works that have come from the practised pen of Mr. Holden Pike is Beneath the Blue Sky (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), which admirably tells the story of Gospel work in the open air, mainly in connection with the Open-Air Mission. Two of the leading spirits of that Society, Mr. Macgregor and Mr. Kirkham, contribute to the work. It is somewhat remarkable that the oldest form of Gospel preaching should never before have found a historian. Mr. Pike has filled the hiatus in our religious literature well, and told us many interesting and encouraging facts bearing on this branch of Christian effort. When a new edition is called for, he might add an appendix describing the position that open-air preaching holds in lands not European.

Facts for Mothers.

Mrs. Dyer has done good service to her generation by a little pamphlet she has written, Facts and Thoughts for Mothers (just issued by Dyer Bros., 1d.; 6s. per 100). Who can tell how many of those who are turned aside from the paths of virtue would have been proof against temptation if they had been faithfully warned of the perils that await them in the world? Who so qualified to give the needed warning and counsel as the mother? To do so, she must herself know something as to the existence of these perils, and of the way of escape. Such information Mrs. Dyer has furnished in earnest and impressive words. Visitors among the mothers of working-class families will do well to distribute the brochure very freely.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The annual volume of the Child's Pictorial (2s. S.P.C.K.) is a very entertaining and informing storehouse of reading for the very young, finely illustrated.

Having said his say in favour of Free Libraries, Mr. Thomas Greenwood goes on in another volume to tell the story of Museums and Art Galleries. 5s. Simpkin Marshall & Co. The book seems pretty complete, as a historical record of the rise, the extension, and the contents of public and private museums in this country, and on the Continent. "Art Galleries" do not receive so much attention, and we suppose it was beyond the scope of the author's design to deal with the question of objectionable art. Mr. Greenwood devotes a chapter to the Sunday opening of these places of public resort, and, while stating the arguments pro and con, he gives his own vote in favour of throwing them open.

St. Augustine's, Canterbury, its Rise, Ruin, and Restoration. By Rev. G. F. McLear, Warden. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. A scholarly and interesting history of this ancient College. While chiefly interesting to Churchmen, there is much in these pages to instruct and stimulate all propagators of the Gospel.

In Some Risks of Attention to Health and Sanitation, a paper read before the Public Medicine Section of the British Medical Association, at Glasgow, in August last, Dr. Norman Kerr shows how easy it is for very particular people to swallow the camel while straining out the gnat. He inculcates the useful lesson that we are not to worry ourselves and others into an asylum, or the grave, by "constant fear as to the possible consequence of everything we eat, drink, or do: but to apply hygienic and dietetic scientific teaching with an average amount of common sense."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A steam yacht has just been placed on the Mersey for work in connection with the Liverpool station of the Waterside Mission.

The Bishop of North Queensland is making an appeal for a number of clergy to undertake Christian work in his diocese. They must be godly men and well fitted for the work of the ministry.

The Church of England Funeral and Burial Reform Association propose memorialising the Government to institute a Royal Commission to inquire into the conditions of cemeteries and modes of burial, with a view to legislation.

The Queen has replied to an address of the Bishops who attended the recent Lambeth Conference, assuring them that it will ever be her anxious desire to promote all measures which may tend to maintain and extend the spirit of true religion.

On Wednesday, Sept. 19, two interesting meetings on behalf of the C.M.S. were held in the Public-room, Newchapel, Surrey. Sir Rivers Thompson, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, presided in the afternoon, and spoke encouragingly of the progress Christianity is making in India from his own observation during the past thirty years. Mr. James Hannington gave an address on the work in East and Eastern Equatorial Africa, and exhibited many curiosities brought from that part of Africa. Archdeacon Hamilton described the work of the Society in Sierra Leone, Yoruba, and the Niger. He, too, showed articles of interest from the West Coast. Ernest appeals were made by both speakers for more prayer, more liberal gifts, and more self-sacrifice on behalf of the work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Free Church of Scotland College at Madras has commenced a new year with a large increase of students.

Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh, while on his way to Free St. George's Church to preach, stopped at an open-air meeting on Calton-hill and delivered an address on the Simplicity of the Gospel.

The Cumberland Presbyterians in America set apart the first week in September as a season of self-denial, devoting to the Church all that they would otherwise have expended, beyond what will provide absolute necessaries.

Rev. D. Doig Young, of Main, South Africa, preached in the Free Church, at Shotts, N.B., on a recent Sunday; and the people contributed £10 to aid in procuring a punt and windlass to enable him to cross a river which separates him from a large section of his flock in Kaffir[illegible].

Trinity Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, have given a hearty welcome to their new minister, Rev. Dr. Ross. In answer to the oft-repeated question what he thought of Newcastle, Dr. Ross replied that he considered it a splendid sphere for Christian work, and he was prepared to enter its depths if Christian men and women would "hold the rope."

Mr. Stark, organising agent for evangelistic work in London, has been very busy since his appointment in March last, and has already secured a list of 114 names of "members of churches other than ministers and missionaries" who are willing to assist in evangelistic work. He has provided speakers for 124 meetings. A week of special evangelistic services is now being conducted at Aldershot, and services have also been arranged to take place at Edenbridge, St. Leonard's, and Alderney. Encouraging proofs have been received, from time to time, that the meetings have not been without good results.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

William Hobson has held a series of meetings, and lectures, on the History and Teachings of Friends, in Mosedale and Gilfoot. He recently re-opened meetings in Cumberland, and also in Edinburgh—where there seems an open door for earnest Gospel and educational work.

Western Quarterly Meeting, held at Leominster on the 18th and 19th ulto., had the subjects of Foreign Missions and Peace specially before it, and appointed committees to promote them, by public and drawing-room meetings, in the various congregations within its limits, and by the circulation of needed literature.

At Cumberland quarterly meeting, besides J. T. Dorland, there were present, with minutes for service, Frances C. Jenkins, U.S.A.; Alfred Wright, Leeds; Anne Warner Marsh, Dorking; and William Hobson, Cardiff; all of whom had a cordial welcome, and were engaged in proclaiming the Gospel or building up believers.

After leaving Scotland, John T. Dorland, of Canada, held a successful series of meetings in Sunderland, going thence to Leeds for a few days. He has since been engaged in the limits of Lancashire and Cheshire; quarterly meeting at Liverpool and Manchester. He also had large and acceptable service at Cumberland, quarterly meetings held in Cockermouth on the 26th and 27th ulto. He has Westmoreland in prospect.

METHODIST.

The autumnal meetings of the Methodist New Connexion Evangelistic Union, the primary object of which is to "pray for a revival of the teaching and experience of Scriptural holiness," have been held at Sheffield. The design of the meetings was the deepening of the spiritual life, and many persons received great blessing through attending them.

Rev. W. Lewin has during the last year and a half been doing the work of an evangelist at West Ham-park. He rented a chapel or tabernacle which had been closed for a long time. By the blessing of God upon his labours, Mr. Lewin has now gathered a church of over eighty members, and established a flourishing Sunday-school. The neighbourhood affords ample field for Christian work.

The workers of the new branch of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission have commenced a determined attack on drinkdom. The district swarms with artisans who spend their earnings in the public-houses; and on Saturday night nearly a score of these were persuaded to go to the Gospel Temperance meeting, where a number of them signed the pledge. God's blessing continues to rest upon the evangelistic services, and there are constantly "grand cases of conversion."

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Missionary Society of Queensland has decided to co-operate with New South Wales in mission work in Tipperah.

Rev. T. R. Stevenson, of Derby, has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pastorate of Union Church, Shanghai. He sails for China on Thursday next.

In 381 churches ministered to by Mr. Spurgeon's students, 5014 have been baptized during the year. The clear increase in the membership of these churches is 4040.

Services in connection with the Pastor's settlement were held at the Tabernacle, Nottingham, on Sunday week. At the annual tea and public meeting, on Monday, Revs. G. Edgcombe (vicar of St. Peter's), Lea Wilson (vicar of Christ Church), C. B. Sawday (Leicester), and others, were the speakers. It is noteworthy that at every anniversary of the Pastor's some Church of England ministers have been present, thus testifying to the "tie which binds."

A valedictory service was held at Buckingham Chapel, Clifton, last week, to take leave of Miss Florence E. Leonard, who is about to leave as a missionary for India, under the auspices of the Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East. Miss Leonard goes to Ludhiana, in the Punjaub: her particular work will be itinerating in the villages, of which there are 421 within a radius of twenty miles of Ludhiana. There are already seven ladies at work in connection with the same mission in and around the town.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded a mission at Swansea. There have been good results.

At the Victoria Dock's Union Church, London, eight days' special services have been held by Rev. E. T. Egg. The seed sown has already brought forth good fruit.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson has announced his intention of delivering a Bible Lecture on the International Sunday-school Lesson each Thursday evening, in Latimer Chapel, Bow.

Mr. C. G. Marshall has been ordained as a missionary of the London Missionary Society to Tripatoor, Madras. He has just left for India.—Mr. Henry Kingman, of Boston, U.S., a grandson of Dr. Rufus Anderson, one of the secretaries of the American Board, has been ordained as a missionary to China.

A fifteen-days' mission has been held at the Old Meeting Church, Bedworth. The missioner was Mr. G. A. Weller (of the Evangelisation Society), whose earnestness and striking yet simple manner of presenting the Gospel appealed powerfully to the hearts and consciences of his hearers, with the result that a large number have been led to decision for Christ.

A propos of the forthcoming visit of the Congregational Union to Nottingham, it may be noted that the secretaries of the local reception committee have received a note from Rev. J. Richardson, vicar of the parish church and rural dean, intimating that the clergy of the town will do all in their power to render the visit of the Union a pleasure and a success. Most of the clergy have also spontaneously offered the hospitality of their houses.

SALVATION ARMY.

The parades of the Army in Neuchatel have been prohibited, owing to the repeated disturbances to which they have given rise.

During last week three candidates holding University degrees volunteered at head-quarters for service in connection with the Army.

Two large buildings have been purchased at Port Elizabeth, and will be adapted as a Training Home, so that there will soon be a large increase in the 180 officers which is all the Army have at present in South Africa.

Mrs. Booth having been asked to prepare and publish some recollections of her public life, she will be glad if any friends who have received letters from her containing references to personal experience, or public questions, will forward them, in order that extracts may be made where thought desirable.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Scroggie, evangelist, is conducting a series of special meetings at Rose-street Free Church, Glasgow.

The good work carried on at Keppochhill Gospel Temperance Hall, Glasgow, by working men belonging to the district, is one that must commend itself to all interested in Gospel work. Much lasting good has been done by this mission; many of the most careless and indifferent have come under the transforming power of the Gospel.

New mission premises in connection with Carlton Parish Church, Glasgow, were opened on Wednesday night, Sept. 26. The halls, three in number, and accommodating between 400 and 500, cost in all £550.

Rev. Dr. Kay, minister of Argyle-place U.P. Church Edinburgh, died suddenly on Thursday, last week. He had been in delicate health for some time, and had obtained leave of absence for six months from the Presbytery.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Belfast presents a fine field for earnest evangelistic work. The Methodists, recognising this, have organised a town mission, and have employed two lay evangelists and a colporteur, who have already entered on their work with heart and hope.

The first anniversary of the Dublin District Local Preachers' Association has just been held. The report stated that out of forty-nine local preachers on the district, twenty-seven were members of the Association. A resolution discouraging Sunday travelling was passed.

Successful evangelistic meetings have been held during the past three weeks in the Methodist mission tent at Tandragee. The tent is now laid aside for the winter, and the missionaries will be employed in conducting Gospel services in halls, school-houses, and churches through the country until spring.

The Belfast workshops for the blind, which were built a few years since by public subscription, at a cost of over £4000, are doing a noble work. Since their establishment 1[illegible]1 blind and five deaf and dumb persons have been employed in them, and have earned over £12,500 in wages. The institution, which is quite undenominational, is now in need of enlargement.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Francis Barker, for fifty-five years a minister in the Wesleyan Connexion.—Rev. T. Adamson, missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, at Bangalore, India.—Rev. Samuel Flood, D.D., vicar of Dinton, Aylesbury.—Rev. D. J. Mackimm, vicar of Rashcliffe, Huddersfield, since 1854.—Mrs. Pike, wife of Rev. G. H. Pike, General Baptist missionary in Orissa, India.—At Cookstown, Rev. William Craig, an ex president of the late Primitive Wesleyan Conference.—At Redhill House, co. Cavan, suddenly, Rev. William Richey Bailey, D.D., rector of Killesher, Florence-court.

MR. NOBLE'S TENT MISSION.

The Gospel Temperance Mission, in a large marquee near Dalston Junction, conducted for some weeks past by Mr. William Noble, was concluded on Monday evening. The meetings have been most successful throughout, and have resulted in nearly two thousand pledges. It was stated at the closing gathering that there had been not a few real conversions; and fervent thanksgiving to God was expressed for the changed hearts, happy homes, and holy lives that would be the outcome.

A social tea for the pledge-takers and their friends preceded the more public assembly of Monday evening; for the latter the tent was packed to repletion. There were plenty brief, bright, convincing speeches, and excellent singing; under the genial presidency of Mr. J. Rae (secretary) and Mr. William Noble in succession, an altogether delightful evening was passed, and the enthusiasm on behalf of total abstinence ran high. Mr. Noble and his fellow workers must feel well repaid for the unremitting toil of the bygone weeks. The good cause has got a decided lift in the Dalston district, and it is proposed, if possible, to erect a hall where such unsectarian efforts for the evangelisation of the masses can be carried on.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. G. J. Copping has conducted a three-months' mission at Hastings with much blessing.

Mr. George Clarke, at the close of his Melbourne mission, is to conduct Gospel services for three weeks in the City of Sydney.

Mr. George King, evangelist, has recently been bearing testimony at Penge, Shirley, Forest Hill, Ratcliff Highway, and other places.

Plymouth.—Mr. R. H. M. Jackman conducted the services at St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, on Sept. 23. At the after-meeting a great many decided for the Lord. Mr. J. C. Rainey is giving special addresses to young men only until Oct. 11.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting mission services in Panmure-street Church, Dundee (Rev. W. J. Cox, Pastor). Services were also held in Princess-street Church, and Russell Church. A large number of anxious inquirers came forward, who subsequently were invited by their pastors to a united meeting for prayer and counsel.

Mr. G. D. Shipley, of the Evangelistic Village Mission, Breachwood-green, Welwyn, Herts, has concluded a mission in the colliery district of Alfreton, Derbyshire. His Bible-readings and Gospel addresses have been listened to nightly for three weeks with deep interest and profit; a good number have professed decision for Christ. He was accompanied by his daughter and another lady helper, whose sweet hymns and songs were a great attraction.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Under the auspices of the Young Men's Temperance Association, Mr. William Forbes began a mission on Monday in Liverpool.

Fifteen thousand copies of a trenchant pamphlet setting forth the evils of the liquor traffic have been sent by post to the bishops and clergy of the Established Church. Prayer is desired that God's blessing may rest on the effort.

A series of proclamations have been published with reference to the future government of New Guinea. They prohibit the supplying of natives with firearms, intoxicating liquors, or opium, and forbid all attempts to remove natives from their homes.

The result of the polls of Northampton on the question of Sunday closing shows that 7935 voting papers were filled up; of these 3677 were in favour of Sunday closing, and 3450 against it, showing a majority in favour of shutting up licensed premises on Sunday of 227.

In the October number of The Young Man, in answering the question, "Shall we smoke?" Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes replies, "Certainly not. Smoking is liable to injure the sight, to render the nerves unsteady, to enfeeble the will, and enslave the nature to an imperious habit, likely to stand in the way of duty to be performed."

A fête and demonstration of the Phœnix Temperance Society was held at the Irish Exhibition, Olympia, on Monday week. A mass meeting was held in the great hall, Mr. W. F. Palmer, of Reading, presiding. Dr. Dawson Burns, Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, and Superintendent Foster, of the City of London Police, were the speakers. The numbers present at the demonstration were estimated at about 6000.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THE NEW LAUNCH FUND.

Only £150 still required.

THE Committee of the Thames Church Mission make an earnest and pressing appeal to their friends for Funds to supply the Gravesend staff with the New Steam Launch. Our present one—the Swan—is quite worn out with sheer hard work, and unless we are able to provide a new one very shortly, the staff will have to take to rowing-boats. This must necessarily diminish the work at Gravesend by at least one-half, on account of the time that will be lost in rowing from ship to ship. The vessels at Gravesend are so wide apart that steam is absolutely necessary to enable the Chaplain and his helpers to visit all the ships in the Reach. We require the sum of £750, towards which we have £600. If every reader of "THE CHRISTIAN" will give or collect the small sum of Five Shillings, the balance will soon be raised. It is of very great importance that this need should be supplied at once.

Contributions should be remitted to the Secretary, the Rev. HENRY BLOOMER, Thames Church Mission Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, London, E.C., from whom all information may be obtained.

THE LATE REV. ROBERT MILLIGAN,

Chalmers Free Church, Dundee.

MOST mysterious are the ways of God, but the faith that cannot fully trace them will yet trust, and believe that He doeth all things well. Great and widespread sorrow was caused in many parts of Scotland when the news was made known that the subject of this sketch had lost his life while bathing at Montrose. The following particulars of a most useful and devoted life, prepared by one who knew him well as a fellow-minister of the Gospel of Christ, will, we trust, help to perpetuate the memory and influence of that life.

Mr. MILLIGAN was privileged to have a godly father, who occupied an honoured place in his native Dumfries. He was a man of singular mould, having something of a poetic nature, but of straightforward, high principle. His religion was of a very definite, earnest sort. After he had arrived at a great age he was often heard to say that for seventy years he never had had a doubt of his salvation. The same decision was characteristic of his son, both as to himself and all his efforts for the personal spiritual welfare of others.

Nurtured under the influence of such parentage, Robert Milligan was seriously impressed from boyhood. He has said that he could not tell when these impressions were first made. He yielded himself to them and was known in early life to be one who feared and loved the Lord. When still in his youth he gave himself to the work of the ministry of Jesus Christ, and all his education at school and college was carried on with that view. At Edinburgh University he took a good place in his classes, and a very high place in the esteem and affection of his fellow-students.

He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dumfries in 1861. On the same day, in the evening, he preached in the square of his native town. Thus early he showed his bent for the kind of Christian work which afterwards so distinguished him.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Lowden & Son, Dundee.)

There had been a great revival of religion in Dumfries, Annan, and the whole county, in the year 1861, through the instrumentality of Rev. E. Payson Hammond, of America, and others. Into this work most of the ministers of Dumfries threw their whole hearts and efforts. One of the results of this was the formation of a mission, which eventually issued in a new mission church. Immediately after receiving licence, Mr. Milligan was appointed to take charge of this effort, which he did for more than a year very successfully. Many in the town still remember his loving, active efforts for the salvation of the careless, and the good success that was given to him. These were days of buoyant youth, and they were given unreservedly to this good but difficult work.

In 1863 he was ordained, and settled over the congregation of Wolflee, in a sequestered pastoral district near the Cheviots in the neighbourhood of Hawick. There till 1871 he laboured among the farms and sheepwalks of a very extensive region. The principal thing which distinguished that period of his ministry was a very blessed revival in 1867. This was promoted and, indeed, led by him. For four months services were held in the Free Church every evening, and the people came from great distances. Enemies tried by open hostilities and by secret tricks to stop the progress of the work, in vain. Some young men notorious for wildness were brought to the Lord, and began a life of faith and prayer. A gamekeeper, who had four miles to walk to the church, said, "I came again to-night because I can't come to-morrow night"; but next night he was still present, saying, "I can't stay away." He would sit up most of the night to clean his guns that he might be free for the meetings. On a memorable night, when the inquiry meeting had been protracted, a man who had a great distance to walk home said, "We've walked many a weary mile for the devil, now we may well walk for Jesus."

Those who knew Mr. Milligan can understand how congenial it must have been to him to be the centre of such a movement. Many ministers and others came to help, and the manse and church were scenes of continual busy effort, earnest prayer, and great cheerfulness. The work spread into other parishes, and the young minister became like the Apostle of the whole district. In Ashkirk, where a like-minded brother was minister, in Hawick, and notably in its Free Church Mission, he did good work, which led to a new congregation. It is told of Ashkirk that in the year 1869 he went to the place and found the minister absent. Nothing daunted, he began work, so that when the minister returned he found, to his great delight, the church filled with people and a revival begun.

In June, 1871, Mr. Milligan was inducted to the church in Dundee, where he laboured till the end of his life. What he was during those seventeen years as a minister and as a citizen is well known to the residents of that town. Perhaps his most outstanding feature was his affectionateness. Not only his own family, but his ministerial brethren and other friends shared it in a high degree. What he did was done with all his heart, and those who came within his orbit knew it unmistakably. There was also a transparency about his character which attracted many to him. Of his religion it can truly be said, that his love to the Lord Himself and his cause was very ardent, and his devotion very true. In his own soul he often enjoyed seasons of spiritual joy in communion with the Lord far deeper and higher than usual. His hopefulness was also very marked. Nothing could be harder than to convince him that an effort, seemingly only partially successful, should be abandoned, or that a case of interest had by any way become hopeless. He was known in meetings, in family devotions, and in his closet, to keep on praying for individuals long after most persons would have given them up.

His preaching was sound, clear, distinct, and highly evangelical. As a pastor he was careful, and it has been often remarked since his death that he was specially mindful of the poorest in his congregation and district. He was always fighting against sin in the various forms it met him, and he loved to meet it with the overpowering love and grace of the Gospel of Christ. This was his main mode of aggression. Whether in the church or in the homes of the people, he strove to overcome evil with good.

As a citizen he was always on the side of God and righteousness. His presence and speech were ever ready to the best of his ability to help the right. At such work as Christian conferences, female rescue, temperance agitation, and street preaching, none were more active and earnest than he. His fellow workers will miss him much in all such walks of public usefulness.

But he was pre-eminently an evangelist. He had the gifts both of mind and heart which fitted him for this most important part of Christian service; it was also his great pleasure. In addition to his clear statements of Gospel truth he had a very happy way of dealing with inquirers, and in bringing them by the Spirit's grace to the point of decision. The writer has traced this work in many quarters. It has often been said it would have been a gain to the Church if he had been set apart to do the work of an evangelist, and this there is no doubt would have been a great joy to himself.

In proof of his happy art of dealing with individuals, and his success in it, one case may be mentioned of a young gentleman, whom he was the means of bringing to the Lord some years ago, and it has been brought to light since his death by a letter from the gentleman himself. Travelling in a train in Ayrshire, Mr. Milligan had spoken to his companion lovingly and earnestly as to his soul's needs, and gave him a little book. He tells he was brought under conviction then, and obtained peace soon after. Through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN, he found out Mr. Milligan, who visited the place where he lived, soon after, and held meetings, which resulted in the conversion of several relatives, besides others in the neighbourhood. The gentleman himself is now studying for the ministry. All this issued from one conversation with a stranger in a train, skilfully and lovingly conducted, and with earnest prayer doubtless for the blessing on it from above.

Mr. Milligan's ministry and life have come to a close all too soon according to human judgment, but we cannot fully read our Master's wise and loving purposes. The end was like the beginning. The writer heard him for the last time in a tent shortly before his lamented death. The last year of his labours was happier than some others, owing to the additional, and by him much valued, help he had in the mission work of the district. Before going to Montrose, where he was drowned, he was in Strathbraan, where he preached a very solemn sermon on the occasion of the death by drowning at Inverness of a young man, a native of the place, and impressively addressed the people present at the funeral in the churchyard of Little Dunkeld. He went to Montrose with happy anticipations of benefit and enjoyment. The sea and his bathing, for which he had great fondness, were great sources of pleasure to him. He was very hopeful of a useful, happy winter's work, with his missionary for a help, and the probability of better means being provided for carrying it on in the new hall. The fatal morning dawned brightly on him. He was very particular in family prayer for the safety of the visitors who were at that time in the town—one of the strange things of which so many happen in this strange world. When he left the house for his bath, the last words he was heard to say were, "Come on, Willie; it is a glorious day." Soon thereafter he was buffeting with the waves, from the force of which his son was saved well-nigh miraculously, and in answer to his father's prayers for him, which the dear boy heard him utter above the sound of the breakers. The young was thus spared, we trust for great usefulness; and the ripened one showing to the last, in his desire for the safety of the rescued man, his unselfish longing for the safety of others. He was taken through deep waters to the golden shore, to find a day for him far more "glorious" than he had anticipated in the morning—a day which will never close, under a sun which will never set, and in a land where "there shall be no more sea."

THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE.

"Alexander, too, a robber! Let me reflect."

SCRATCH the Chinaman, and you find the Tartar. Scratch Alexander the Great, and you find the Thracian robber. Scratch the West-end masher, and you find the East-end rough. Scratch the woman of fashion, and you find the woman of the street. Scratch the feline Carker, and you find the ruffianly Bill Sykes. Scratch the cultured seducer, and you find the murderer and desecrator of the unfortunate women of Whitechapel.

Some of the Corinthian converts carried the coarse habits of their heathen festivals to the table of the Lord, and made it not a Lord's Supper, but their own supper; and while one was hungry, another was surfeited with wine. One of the marvels of Scripture is that a letter written rebuking these half-heathen saints is read with perfect fitness when the most refined and cultured products of Christian civilisation are gathered to show the Lord's death till He come.

It not seldom happens that persons sit down at the same table of the Lord who have grudges against each other, who even hate one another. They have communion with demons, and not with God; "for ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons; ye cannot partake of the table of the Lord and of the table of demons." Others come full of selfish desires and purposes. They eat not the Lord's Supper, but each one before the other his own supper. Some "communicate" who luxuriate in all this world's enjoyments, while behind them sit those who need the common comforts, or even necessaries, of life. These are hungry, while those are drunken.

God seeth the heart. In the eyes of Him with whom we have to do, the "civilised heathenism" of modern Christianity is worse than the coarse heathenism of ancient civilisation, and the polished vice of Society is more devilish than the violent crime of the guilt-gardens.

Mr. HENRY THORNE at CASTLEFORD.

THIS busy and increasing Yorkshire town has been much blessed by a ten days' united Gospel mission conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. His ministry has been greatly blessed, the companies increasing from day to day; and towards the end of the mission the public hall had to be vacated and the various chapels and church school-rooms visited in turn. On each of the two Sunday evenings, over one thousand persons assembled in the theatre. To these the Gospel was preached with power, and great solemnity overspread the gatherings.

A goodly number professed to find salvation during the mission, some of the cases being very marked and promising. Not only have sinners been awakened to conviction and repentance; the workers testify of blessing in the strengthening and building up of believers. The choir and workers, who have been drawn together for the first time by this united mission, rejoiced also in devout Christian fellowship. The rectors and ministers of all denominations added their influence to the movement and appeared to appreciate the vigorous and pointed public addresses as well as the very helpful Bible-readings.

PEMBROKE HOUSE, FOLKESTONE.—We learn that the committee have decided to close this Y.M.C.A. Seaside Home. Mr. H. J. Allen, the manager, will devote his attention during the winter to his Orphan Home.

Points for Preachers.

THE DISPENSATIONAL AND THE INDIVIDUAL.

TRUTH can never contradict itself; but it is important to distinguish between what is true dispensationally and what is true individually. It is truly said that the probation of the human race is over. The depraved condition of man, Jew and Gentile, has been definitely proved by the crucifixion of the incarnate God. But each individual is under probation still, and will be judged every man according to his works.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

The judgment is called eternal (Heb. vi. 2), for the word "judgment" (krima) means not the act or process of judgment (which is krisis, ix. 27, x. 27), but its result, or judicial sentence, which is final and irrevocable. For nowhere does Scripture hold out the prospect of that sentence, "Depart from Me," being changed. It is the uniform doctrine of Scripture that the gulf between the saved, "the blessed of my Father," and the lost, is fixed, and that the life of glory as well as the death of anguish is everlasting.—Dr. Adolph Saphir.

"BE PERFECT."

My faith in perfection is very weak when I look at others; it is extinguished altogether when I look at myself. But when I look at Jesus I can believe in nothing else. He is perfect in all his works, and no other aim than this can ever satisfy Him. The work which He has undertaken to do for us would not bear his stamp if it stopped anywhere short of perfection; and for such a vast expenditure and cost I dare not think of anything less than this. Be perfect. Here it is that my faith in holiness and my hope for it begin to live, as I see Him, as I linger in his presence, and sit at his feet. When He cometh, what limit shall I set to his grace? What failing shall He tolerate? What sin shall baffle his skill? So, as I stand looking up that slippery height, wondering how its summit is to be reached, He cometh with gracious words: "My child, fear not! That which thou seekest is not in thy climbing up; it is in my coming down. Be perfect." —Rev. M. Guy Pearse.

GOD'S PROMISES.

A promise from God may very instructively be compared to a cheque payable to order. It is given to the believer with the view of bestowing upon him some good thing. It is not meant that he should read it over comfortably, and then have done with it. No, he is to treat the promise as a reality, as a man treats a cheque. He is to take the promise, and endorse it with his own name by personally receiving it as true. He is by faith to accept it as his own. He sets to his seal that God is true, and true as to this particular word of promise. He goes further, and believes that he has the blessing in having the sure promise of it, and, therefore, he puts his name to it to testify to the receipt of the blessing. This done, he must believingly present the promise to the Lord, as a man presents a cheque at the counter of the bank. He must plead it by prayer, expecting to have it fulfilled. If he have come to heaven's bank at the right date, he will receive the promised amount at once. If the date should happen to be further on, he must patiently wait till its arrival; but meanwhile he may count the promise as money, for the bank is sure to pay when the due time arrives.—C. H. Spurgeon.

THE VERY DEEDS OF JESUS.

I ASK attention to this theme, for the "very deeds" of Jesus, like his "very words," concern the manifestation of Godhead in the flesh. Whether we consider his works or his words, the marks of Divinity are equally conclusive. No man spake as He did; no man acted as He did.

The first thing I would specially emphasise has respect to the entire absence of process in his miracles or mighty deeds. This point is seldom elucidated as it deserves; but, if I mistake not, it concerns the very essence of Deity. A strictly creational act is not spread out in time. It takes place in absolutely no time. When we reduce the moment to the millionth part of a second, we are no nearer that absolute least involved in a creational deed. Now it is this feature which we find inseparable from Christ's mighty works everywhere. Christ's miracles are not processes; they are fiats. "He speaks, and it is done; He commands, and it stands fast."

Trench somewhat fails, it seems to me, in his exposition of the first miracle, through not seeing this point. He thinks that the water is changed into wine by a process; that it is a miracle of becoming, and that "in truth it is in no way stranger, save in the rapidity with which it is effected, than that which is every day going forward among us." But thus to reason is to miss the key to the significance of Christ's mighty deeds. His deeds are purposely meant to stand altogether apart from natural processes however accelerated. Even when time is covered in connection with a miracle of Jesus, it is not that the miracle takes time, or that there is anything after the manner of a natural process going on. The miracle is a fiat, and time is obliterated before it.

As an illustration, the ninth chapter of John's Gospel may be read, where the story is given of the man born blind, to whom our Lord gave sight, thereby manifesting in him "the works of God." No doubt it took time to spit on the ground, and make clay of the spittle, and to spread this upon the eyes of the man born blind. It took still more time for him to go to the pool of Siloam and wash. But it is manifest enough that the time occupied is no part of a process; nor is the miracle itself other than an instantaneous forthputting of Divine energy.

This, I believe, is the distinctive feature of Christ's mighty deeds. It appears to me a mistake to think that the water gradually turned into wine. The change took place so quickly that time, however subdivided into fractions of a second, could not possibly define it. For the like reason, Christ's works of healing are not mere cures. "Cure has to do with recovery to health by means of care." In a cure nature is assisted, and there is a gradual leading back and up to health again. But in all cases of disease Christ's healing power went immediately forth, and took immediate effect. The thing is done instantaneously. There was no time occupied in the healing given. The absolute least in duration is the general feature in the work.

Such action is the sole prerogative of Divinity. "He speaks, and it is done," and He alone does this. Creature energy requires to be spread out in time; and the feebler the energy the greater the time required to overtake the work. But Divinity acts in absolutely no time. Christ said to the winds and waves, "Peace, be still," and instantly there was a great calm. So, with the poor woman who touched the hem of his garment; her issue of blood is stanched.

Though there are one or two cases which apparently run counter to this principle, they are not real exceptions. We cannot, for example, justly allege that the miracle wrought on the man to whom our Lord gave sight bit by bit was really one of becoming. The steps in the miracle are instantaneous. First from stony blindness in an instant he sees men as trees walking; the eyes being touched a second time, perfect sight follows. There can be no doubt that the twofoldness of the step had regard to the moral need of the subject; for to stir up expectation in his soul was even more important than to confer vision on his sightless orbs.

I do not, therefore, fall in with the current wish to explain Christ's miracles as much as possible on natural principles. Nay, in his mighty deeds we see the glory of the only begotten Son of the Father. His works are wrought in God in a sense that immediately forthtell God. As when Jehovah said, "Let light be, and light was," so was it with the deeds of the God-Man. They tell of Divinely Sovereign action, and while we must needs think of them as taking place in time, they are, paradoxical though it may sound, themselves timeless.

Without touching on other aspects of "the very deeds of Jesus" now, it is befitting to observe that the timelessness of Christ's acts well illustrates the work of Divine grace in the regeneration of man. No human soul passes from death unto life in more time than we designate by the least conceivable. The quickening of the soul that was "dead in trespasses and sins" is not a process, but answers to a fiat. Even so shall it be when "the body of our humiliation shall be changed into the body of his glory, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself." No one shall be able to discern the thing taking place, as if it were a miracle of becoming. Christ's appropriate action is Divine. As Divine, it is absolutely instantaneous. It was so in the days of his flesh; it will be so no less in his coming glory. "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Lord, let that day come, and let all other days pass away.

THE DUBLIN MISSION.

IN a circular letter, Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, writes:—On returning home, after some weeks' absence, I find the good work of the Dublin Mission going on with increasing vigour. It is very pleasing to see how the poor people appreciate the Gospel meetings now reopened at all the Mission stations through the city. The Boys' Home has been kept fully occupied all the year until now, and works most harmoniously. Our eighty-six beds are full, and we are very happy to be able to have so many poor boys under prayerful, Christian guidance, who would otherwise be subjects of the pernicious influences of street life.

The Girls' Home does not seem to have suffered any loss on account of its disturbance from Luke-street, but rather the reverse. The temporary premises in North Great George's-street are equally commodious, and in a pleasanter street, while it does not lose the advantage of the poor neighbourhood for the ragged-schools which were always attached to it. The schools are much better attended now than previously. Much is required to meet the expenses which go on week by week.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

The proceedings of the Congress held last week in Manchester were full of interest; the addresses were marked, with the exception of the last day, by an amicable tone of debate, and the absence of the polemical and heated conflicts of former years. Problems of great difficulty and importance were presented and discussed in a very able and admirable manner. The attendance was unusually large, and more than 20,000 tickets were issued for working men's meetings in Manchester and neighbouring towns. The absence of mere sectarianism at these meetings was a pleasant feature of them.

It was wisely said by the Bishop of the diocese in his opening address, that our modern danger is in going to the Bible to learn the specific age of a document, or to see whether science is supported, instead of first studying the Book to learn its main intention, which is to tell us the nature of God, and his relation to us in Creation, Providence, and Redemption. Mr. A. J. Balfour's paper on "The Religion of Humanity" was a masterly and eloquent argument in defence of Christianity as the only system that can meet the every-day needs of men. Equally just was Dr. Wace's view of Agnosticism. An Agnostic may wish to rest in the name he has chosen. But his proper name is that of an infidel. Christ, in the Lord's Prayer and the Sermon on the Mount, has revealed an unseen world and the Divine Father in his personal relation to his creatures. If a man should say, therefore, he knows nothing of God and a future life, he, in effect, declares that he does not believe Jesus Christ.

On the general subject of Christian Evidence, the Bishop of Peterborough warned Christians against the modern attempt to make Christianity conspicuously visible to man's intellect and senses. Our religion is a faith, an evidence of things not seen, and to reduce it to a mathematical demonstration is to turn it from a faith into a science. It solves dark enigmas more than any system of philosophy, and in this respect the evidence for it is perpetually being strengthened.

On social questions some of the utterances were noteworthy. "Gambling and Betting" was the topic of a sectional meeting. There was but one opinion of men from all parts of the land, who knew the people, that the gambling mania was, as a wide-spread power, pervading all classes of the community, and had become associated with sensuality, idleness, which recoiled from the plodding industry of our fathers, and intemperance. A weighty testimony was borne by the Chaplain of Stafford Prison. Gambling, he declared, was eating into the vitals of the nation, and far more deeply than the general public at all realise: it has been running a race with drunkenness, and he believed it had now distanced that vice. The outcome of the discussion was that the Church ought to create a healthy opinion on the matter; innocent games were in danger of contamination, and the clergy ought to discountenance horse-racing, raffles at bazaars, and sweepstakes at boat-races. During other debates, modern bazaars, as a method of raising money for God's cause, came in for severe animadversion. On social questions, that of Purity was very firmly spoken about. It has become imperative that the standard of purity demanded from women in society should be equally demanded from men; concerning which we remark that in no one thing is so-called society more criminally and mischievously guilty than in this. Against the plea that sins of impurity were natural, and that health required them, a medical doctor uttered a strong protest. There could not, he said, be a greater fallacy. To be natural, a thing must have the sanction of man's higher nature, and not merely of the grosser.

There were other excellent discussions, which must have been useful in an eminent degree to the clergy present. We regret that on the last day utterances were made on "Eschatology," which undid much that was valuable in earlier meetings. One clergyman—Rev. Sir George W. Cox—put aside what he called "the eschatological matter in the Epistles bearing the name of Jude and Peter, as being obtained from the Book of Enoch," and went so far as to say that all the imagery on the last things in the Book of Revelation, and even in the discourses of our Lord in Matt. xxiv. and xxv., were obtained from the same source. If every man who has a new notion, or old heresy, is to set aside the parts of the New Testament that do not adapt themselves to his theory, how much of the New Testament will be left? The method is convenient, but it is so unscholarly and outrageous as to awaken deep regret that the indignation it awoke in the Congress has not been adequately reported. Notwithstanding, the Manchester meetings, as a whole, must be held to have been singularly successful.

"THE UNION" or DEATH—WHICH?

"Old Mr. B—— has been and hanged hisself," were the words which greeted us some days ago in making our rounds amongst the poor in one of the dirtiest, nastiest little streets branching off the Mile End-road. He was a man nearing seventy, and had once been a fine man, tall, strong, and hearty; but now age and poverty, and two broken ankles from a bad fall through a fit, which had kept him some months in the Union Infirmary, had evidently driven him to the consideration of that problematic question, "To be? or not to be?" He was not a drunkard; in fact, had been a total abstainer for years. He was neither godless nor immoral, but poverty, nigh unto starvation, had turned his brain. The horror of once more abandoning the little corner called home, poor and empty though it was, and returning to that dreaded "Union," was too much for him. Even the longed-for "cup o' tea" could not be procured that day, up to 2 p.m., when he committed the awful deed, and he had had only a very scanty meal the day before. The agonised struggle which rent his poor weakened mind could only be judged by the fatal result, his having contrived to strangle himself with his neckerchief, attaching it to the bed-post, during the short absence of his wife.

Another victim of want and neglect! Yet there are unused millions banked up by the wealthy, and used millions squandered by the selfish. Who will send us the means for the speedy relief of such cases of misery, which are, alas! our daily experience in our mission amongst the poor? These things are almost beyond our strength to bear, when we have to visit them empty-handed. This poor old man and his wife had no bed-clothes. She used to try to cover his poor aching feet with her own scanty garments. Rose Benn.

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

Being extracts, hitherto unpublished, from personal narratives of James and Elizabeth Nimmo.

[INTRODUCTORY.]

In the year 1588, the Lord of Hosts with a strong hand and stretched out arm, delivered our forefathers, by the destruction of the Spanish Armada, from a foreign yoke which would have robbed them of the Word of God, and quenched throughout the land the pure light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the year 1688, by God's help, they won by the Revolution, after many years of resistance to tyranny, at the cost of rivers of blood in many parts of the island, civil and religious liberty, which had been wholly crushed in France, Spain, Italy, and other countries.

In the year 1788, still by the good hand of God upon them, they found themselves in peaceful enjoyment of these, when a revolution commenced in France, culminating in horrors unutterable, the outcome of that gross darkness which had spread over the land, when "freedom to worship God" was abolished in 1685, by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

And if now, in this year 1888, we, their children, find ourselves still in a possession of these which had been uninterrupted for 200 years, and see them established on a basis broader and firmer than ever, shall we not recognise this as indeed a year of grace, and say, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us; but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake"?

In the hope that a consideration of the sufferings at the cost of which our fathers purchased religious freedom, and a study of the spirit in which they met persecution, and came off more than conquerors, may lead us to a higher appreciation and more thankful enjoyment of liberties so dearly purchased, attention is invited to certain extracts from narratives, hitherto unpublished, by James and Elizabeth Nimmo, sufferers for conscience' sake during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. The narrative of James Nimmo, in his own handwriting, still exists, and is in fair preservation, considering its age; but it is not known that the original of Mrs. Nimmo's narrative is extant. Copies of both, however, taken from the originals, are in the hands of the writer, from which he has selected the extracts referred to, which he gives in the very words of the writers, though their sentences are abbreviated where waht of space requires it. Here and there a Scotch word is followed, in parenthesis, by its equivalent in English, to serve in case of need.

James Nimmo was born in 1654. His father, the son of a laird, was a farmer and land agent in Stirlingshire, and seems to have been a man of substance, and of good social status. Of his mother the narrative makes no mention, save to tell her name and that of her father. After four years spent by him at a boarding-school n Stirling, we find Nimmo, at the age of seventeen, living at home, and assisting his father with such service as he was capable of rendering, but finding him an exacting master, whom it was very difficult to please.

Though his parents do not appear to have been godly, the family was not without some outward form of religion, as Nimmo tells us how he was led to conduct family worship when his father was away from home, and that it was when thus engaged that his mind received its first serious impressions. These returned from time to time, bringing with them more or less anxiety of soul, until, in January 1676, he was laid aside with fever, his father lying on a sick-bed likewise, when they were visited by one whom Nimmo calls "Mr. William Crichton, our 'outed' minister." In all likelihood he had been minister of the parish, when, in 1662, the Prelatic form of Church government was established in Scotland, and nearly four hundred Presbyterian ministers were turned out of their homes and parishes because of their refusal to accept it at the sacrifice of liberty of conscience. Year after year had brought on them, and on their devoted adherents, increased persecutions, until, in 1675, the Privy Council of Scotland, in the hope of utterly exterminating the people "of this way," issued their

INFAMOUS "LETTERS OF INTERCOMMUNING."

In these letters certain persons, "outed" ministers and others, were named, as to whom it was forbidden to "supply or intercommune with them, to furnish them with meat, drink, house, harbour, victual, nor no other thing useful or comfortable to them, nor have any intelligence with them by word, writ, or message, or any other manner of way, under the pain to be repute and esteemed art and part with them in the crimes aforesaid, and pursued, therefore, with all rigour to the terror of others."

Nor were the servants of a Government capable of issuing such letters unworthy of their masters. They showed themselves only too eager to put them in force in the most literal manner, and with a malignity so fiendish in very many cases that the details would be incredible, were they not supported by an overwhelming mass of evidence.

In the south and west of Scotland, more especially, the enemies of the gospel ran riot in the plunder, persecution, and slaughter of its followers, of whom it may be most truly stated that, whilst many "were tortured not accepting deliverance," others "had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment." Many were drowned, many were suffered to die of sickness and hunger in dungeons, many "were slain with the sword"; very many "wandered about, being destitute, afflicted, tormented (of whom the world was not worthy). They wandered in deserts and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."

The religion of the elder Nimmo had probably been of an accommodating kind to have admitted of his dwelling in his own house and prospering, during the long years of tyranny under which he had seen

HIS COUNTRY LYING CRUSHED AND BLEEDING.

But he must have been in serious anxiety for his soul to have sent, in his sickness, for an "outed" minister, in view of the very great risk to which the visit of such a man would certainly expose him. What effect it had upon the father we are not told; but to the younger Nimmo it brought the dawn before the rising of the Sun of Righteousness upon his soul. We now find him thoroughly in earnest in seeking peace with God. He sees one of his father's servants weeping bitterly under conviction of sin, and is filled with alarm. "Considering" (he writes), "and in part convinced, that I was one of the chieftest of sinners, and yet I had never wan (i.e., attained) to weep so for sin. I could pray none. I fell into such dreadful terrors."

During many days he goes "in sorrow and tears," as to which time he writes, "My life was sometimes even bitter, which made by-standers to admire (i.e., wonder) what it was that troubled me (for I had not one that I could be free with, or impart my case to), and friends and relations, considering they had heard of my father's tartness to me (though at this time his way to me was become some more pleasant), thought it was the whole cause of my trouble. So being sorely exercised in this wise, about a year and more, though albeit I sometimes attained more comfort and peace than at others, few or none discerned anything of my trouble, and I had none to impart my grief unto, but the servant."

At this time nothing on the part of the Covenanters was more offensive to the authorities than the field preachings, which continued to be held, and to be largely attended, in spite of the most strenuous efforts made to suppress them. Though held under great difficulties, and with much secresy, they were frequently broken up by parties of soldiers or militia, and unarmed men and women attacked, to be hurried off to prison and the scaffold, if not slain on the spot. Nimmo knew very well the risk he ran, but he was not to be deterred thereby from attending one of these meetings, of which he writes as follows:—

"Now about the month of June, 1677, there was to be a rendezvous of our militia troop, and upon the same day some ministers had appointed whereat I was desirous to be; but, being formerly the rider of the militia horse kept by my father (as baillie, and factor of Boghall), he was against my going to the said fast. I, meeting with an old servant of my father's who offered for some consideration to go for me, consented, but my father was displeased, fearing the other man would spoil the horse, but I was intent and went to the fast. Mr. William Gilchrist, one of the ministers, did preface upon the forty-third chapter of Genesis, anent Joseph and his brethren, how his brothers were pressing their father Jacob to send Benjamin their youngest brother to Joseph, because he had said ye shall not see my face except ye bring your brother with you. And so, said the minister, if we did desire to see the Lord's face that day, we behoved to bring Christ our brother with us, for the Lord was saying no less to us this day, than Joseph did to his brethren—ye shall not see my face this day except ye bring your brother Jesus with you. The which did stick to me, but word of the enemies coming, the meeting was dissolved (though it was a mistake).

"So, being dismissed, and I coming home, the next day being in the fields alone, and my Bible with me, my heart being affected with the preface of the former day, I was reading that Scripture again, at which time, in the reading thereof,

THE LORD BROKE INTO MY SOUL

with such light, life, and joy in the discovery of Christ, the God-man, and Mediator, in whom the Father was well pleased, and no acceptance without Him! Now here I must observe that in all my former outgate and trouble, I still wanted (i.e., was without) that free and full discovery of Christ in his nature and offices, particularly as our Brother and only Mediator. Upon this sweet discovery of Christ, more tenderly affected to his than Joseph was to his brethren—oh, how sweet was this comfortable type, and Christ therein, with respect to my case, so that all my former griefs, sorrows, and discouragements were now removed. He brought me, as it were, out of a fearful pit, and from the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, so that now I was made exceedingly to rejoice, and to weep and rejoice, and weep and rejoice again."

Had this taken place some years earlier, and in Bedford, it would be thought that Bunyan must have been in that field, with Nimmo, and must have had him in his thoughts when writing how "just as Christian came up with the cross, his burden loosed from off his shoulders, and fell from off his back. Then was Christian glad and lighthearted. Then he stood still awhile to look and wonder. He looked, therefore, and looked again, even till the springs that were in his head sent the waters down his cheeks (Zech. xii. 10); he stood looking and weeping. Then Christian gave three leaps for joy, and went on singing."

THE "CARTER" BOYS' HOME.

IT is a great joy to me to see that this useful institution continues to advance. It is founded on sound economic, industrial, and religious principles, and bravely sets itself to cope with a crying need. The object is to save boys from the streets; to help them so that they may support themselves; to attend to their education, and studiously, in a non-sectarian spirit, to impart to them religious truth, and effect through the Holy Ghost their conversion to God.

The "Carter" Home is an all-alive place. Knowing it intimately, I can bear testimony to the able manner in which it is conducted, and the good it is the means of accomplishing. The boys seem happy, and are technically trained in various ways to fulfil a useful and honourable vocation. To a certain extent this institution is self-supporting. Thus, out of a total income last year of £2152 4s. 1d., the boys' earnings realised the important sum of £712 1s. 1d. The idea instilled into the minds of the boys is that they must help themselves, and as soon as possible win an independent livelihood. The "Carter" Home may therefore be regarded as applied Christianity. It is the good Samaritan at work to save destitute boys temporally and spiritually.

During the past year, the Committee, feeling the call, in the providence of God, to attempt greater things for Him, have purchased the extensive buildings known as St. Joseph's College, High-street, Clapham, where they intend helping many more boys, and also opening up other new industries. These buildings can easily be adapted for all the requirements of this busy hive of industry, and will admit of a much greater reach of operation than was possible in the former quarters. The total cost is £6000, of which £1500 is already paid. It is hoped that by the co-operation of all friends interested the remaining £4500 may be speedily cleared off. I need but add that the treasurer of this Home is Dr. Eugene F. Cronin, Old Manor House, Clapham; and the master and matron, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Gray.

XXVIII.—"THAT BIG BEN."

We were just about to begin an evangelistic sermon, when one of our helpers, as he was called, came in to the vestry and said, "I say, I have brought seven fellows out of a public-house."

"How did you get them?" I inquired.

"Oh! I went into the public after them."

"And how did you get them, then?"

"Why," he said, "I asked them to come along with me to the service. They laughed at first, and then one of them, that big Ben, you know, said, 'We'll come, master, if you'll treat us to a half a pint each.' 'All right,' I replied. So I ordered them a couple of quarts of beer, and, when they had been served, they came along as quietly as possible."

Peeping out at the vestry door, he said, "Look, there they are, all sitting as proper as their betters."

The means our helper had used to bring these men in seem questionable; but there they were, and now the next thing was to pray for and expect a blessing upon them.

In the course of my address, I spoke of the various hindrances there were to the Gospel; and among others I mentioned drink, and the love of it, as one of the greatest. I went on to say that the poor drunkard was a loser every way. He received very little enjoyment; he soon lost his right senses, lost his money, and injured his wife and children.

I continued, "Once I heard it said that the very mice in the drunkard's house could find nothing. The poor little things went about with tears in their eyes looking for crumbs in the cupboard, and all in vain!"

The seven men were sober enough to give attention to the sermon, embellished as it was with the tale of the drunkard's mice. After the sermon they all knelt down at the time of prayer, and when others rose up to go, they rose to depart also, thinking, I have no doubt, that they had done enough for their half-pint.

Our young helper asked them to stay a little longer.

"No," said Big Ben, "we have had enough. I'm a-going. That's a fine man, though, to see tears in the mouse's eyes. I wonder how he did that!"

"Stay a little," said our friend, "and we will go and ask him."

No, they would not be persuaded to do that; but about an hour afterwards, who should come back to the church but Ben.

He said, "I've been in bed, but I can't get any sleep. I want to know how the man that preached got to know about me! I declare I never set eyes on him in all my life till to-night. The chaps all say he meant me in his sermon. How did he know about me? that's what I want to know."

"Come along," said our helper, "and we will ask him about it."

So saying, my friend led Big Ben up to me.

"Do you know me at all?" said Ben, looking me straight in the face.

"Why do you want to know?" I inquired.

"'Cause you told 'em about me in your sarmon. All the mates said that you meant me. I've been a-bed and couldn't sleep for a-thinkin' how you knew about me, and who told you."

Perceiving that God had been speaking to this man, I said, "God knows all about you, and He told me to say those words. You had better give up to Him. Come, let us kneel down."

The man did so, and began speaking in prayer as if mechanically, uttering words after me. It was not long, however, before he put in some ejaculations for himself. It was surprising to witness, though I have seen it often, how the use of the tongue or voice stirs the heart. Now it was as though the man could not stop praying and pleading for mercy for his soul.

As the prayer waxed warmer and warmer his convictions deepened, and he acknowledged what a sinner he was. This thought only added greater earnestness to his prayers. After pleading in this way for more than half an hour, he stopped, as if in despair.

"Is there no mercy for me?" he said; "I know I am a proper bad un. O God, have mercy on me, a sinner. I will give up drink, bad words, everything. Oh, do have mercy on me."

It was evident he was trying to buy his forgiveness with his sacrifices, in the same way that mariners throw overboard their lading to save the ship; but that is not the way of God's salvation.

I said, "God can save you, and He is willing to do so, but only for Christ's sake. You owed a debt, and Christ has paid it. Come and acknowledge God's love in sending his Son, and thank Him for it. 'Take salvation, take it now, and happy be.'"

This was like a new idea to him.

"I've been sinning a lot of years," he said, "and will the Almighty pardon me right off like that all at once?"

"Yes," I replied, "He will do so for the sake of the finished work of Christ. God is able to forgive the vilest sinner through the death of Christ upon the cross. Let us praise Him; say, 'Glory be to God, Jesus Christ died for me.' None but sinners can use these words. Christ did not die for angels, therefore, angels cannot sing this song, only sinners; and you are a great sinner; say, 'Glory be to God, Jesus Christ died for me.'"

It was a long time before I could get him to utter these words; but, when once he began to do it, it was astonishing to see the light breaking into his soul. He was perhaps less conscious of the change which was coming over him than we who were observing him.

That face that had been dull and stupid was now lighted up with an intelligence and an energy which were wonderful. He rose from his knees, and, standing up, said, "Glory be to God, Jesus Christ died for me. He did. I can see it plainly enough. Why, it is as plain as knowing I am a sinner, and there's no mistake about that!"

We united together in singing a verse and chorus of praise, and then sent the man on his way rejoicing.

The next day he came back, bringing some of his mates with him. He was most intent, and earnest in his endeavour to show them the way of salvation, and appeared greatly surprised that they could not see it. "It's all so plain," he said.

His labour of love, however, was not without success among his companions; and, besides this, I rejoice to add that Big Ben's conversion was the means of bringing to Jesus the "helper" who first bought Ben with the half-pint.

CHARITY VOTING.—The Charity Voting Reform Association is endeavouring to abolish the present system of voting, canvassing, long lists of candidates, and public polling days, adopted by so many charities. This system inflicts great hardships on the suffering and the poorer of the candidates, and in many instances has the effect of securing the election of those who have the most means, and the most influence, instead of those who are most needy and most friendless. The Reform Association has effected much good in educating public opinion, and drawing attention to the vices of the present system, and it hopes, in course of time, to bring about a better state of things. Full particulars as to the work of the Charity Voting Reform Association can be obtained at the Offices, 30, Charing-cross, S.W., between 2 and 4.30 p.m. daily, and the secretary will be happy to forward reports and pamphlets to any person interested in the question.

AMERICAN NOTES.

Jacksonville, Florida, has been visited with that dread scourge, yellow fever. Notwithstanding due precautions of quarantine, the fell disease has broken out elsewhere, and large portions of the southern country are panic-stricken. The sudden death of Mr. R. A. Proctor on his arrival in New York, having been inoculated by the germs before leaving his home in Florida, has spread alarm in our northern cities. It is known that many refugees have fled from the fever centre, and are likely to carry the infection into other localities. Several prominent persons have died in Jacksonville, hundreds are dangerously sick, nor is the condition of the weather at all reassuring. Until frost comes, no one can calculate on the results. New Orleans is now quarantined.

At the present writing the discouragement is great at Jacksonville. More than 1200 cases of yellow fever have been reported, nearly 160 of whom have already died. Large gifts of money are pouring in from every quarter, and acclimated physicians with nurses who had previously rallied from the dread sickness have gone to the rescue. There is much prayer to the God of healing that He would graciously withdraw the terrible scourge.

The British American is a new paper of great power and promise. It is the organ of the British American Association, an organisation of former British subjects determinedly opposed to Roman Catholic influence in American politics. They already number about 12,000, and are growing in political importance already. Their journal has one characteristic: it speaks out plainly and vigorously against that large class of statesmen who are ever ready to sell their honour, manhood, and constituents for a mess of pottage.

Mr. H. L. Hastings has a decidedly practical scheme of emigration on hand. We hope it may receive due encouragement on both sides of the water. There are twenty thousand farms now lying idle in New England. Their former owners have emigrated to the cities or to the great West. These farms can be had on reasonable terms. An influx of Protestant families, who would find church and school privileges in the neighbourhood of these lands, is a great desideratum. The Jesuits have captured the manufacturing towns: they now seek to capture the country. A new class of industrious Protestants would not only checkmate this move, but would open a wide door for needy families in Ireland and England. There ought to be formed immediately a philanthropic committee of Britishers and Americans who would conjointly assist worthy persons to these homes.

Mr. Hastings has given much attention to the scheme. It looks promising. There are hundreds of willing hands and strong arms belonging to honest, intelligent men on your side the ocean which could work a living out of these idle lands. For a few years there would be a call for much self-denial, but there could be no suffering comparable with that of our Western pioneers. A young man hiring himself for a year to a farmer would soon learn our plans of agriculture. A little money advanced for stock, in addition to the purchase or rent of the farm, would afterwards give him a good start. The money could be advanced at a reasonable interest, and paid back to a sinking fund thereafter.

AUSTRALIAN MISSION to S. AFRICA.

Some of the Christian friends in Australia, particularly in Melbourne, have lately taken a deep interest in the spiritual needs of South Africa, through a visit paid to them by Mr. Joseph Hannington, brother of the late Bishop Hannington. Having himself laboured for eighteen months in South Africa, and seen the spiritual destitution of the up-country districts, especially of the vast tracts of country in the Transvaal and Transkee, he felt it laid on his heart to try and form a colportage mission for these neglected parts.

Trade is in a great state of depression in South Africa; while, on the other hand, there has been a good deal of commercial prosperity in Melbourne lately, through good sales of land. Christians in Melbourne warmly responded to the plea for South Africa, and they subscribed over £600 towards this colportage effort. The money is to be used for building and furnishing two or three Bible waggons, and for other expenses in connection with the colporteur. Also two Christian workers returned with Mr. Hannington from Melbourne and Cape Town.

Three earnest Christian soldiers of the British army are ready to go with three waggons as colporteurs. They are fine fellows, and earnest Christian workers. It is proposed that one of the waggons starts from Cape Town, and travels up to Kimberley, over 600 miles. They will have Bibles, tracts, &c., in English, Dutch, and several of the native languages. They will sell and distribute these, hold cottage meetings, preach the Gospel, visit, &c. The need is so great in some of these districts, that one lady reported that in a whole year that she had lived in one place, no religious service of any kind had been held in the neighbourhood. Another waggon will probably have its centre from King Williamstown, working for many miles from there. This is entirely an undenominational Mission. The Australian friends who have helped in it belonging to all the Christian churches, and those who sympathise with the work here, in Cape Town, are on the same unsectarian ground.

Kimberley, the great centre of the diamond mines, is a wicked place; and there is a great desire to have a medical mission established there. This would take about £2000; the Australian friends have promised to do what they can towards raising this sum within the next few months. A Christian medical man in Melbourne has also some thoughts of coming over here to work the medical mission at Kimberley.

Among other great needs in Cape Town itself is that of Protestant day-schools, as those already here are so expensive that many Protestant parents send their children to the convent schools, where they can get each child taught French, English, and music for twelve pounds per annum. We all know the sad consequences that must follow this, in many instances. If some English Christians were led to come out here and establish English Protestant day schools, based on evangelical principles, it would be a great boon to Cape Town, and they would be warmly welcomed by many Protestant parents.

We have come over here with the Australian Christian workers to help in mission work in South Africa for a time, partly in sending back reports to the friends in Australia, and in other ways as doors may open. We will be most thankful to receive tracts and religious books, Testaments, &c., for the South Africa Colportage Mission, in English, German, and Dutch, but particularly in Dutch, as that language is much spoken in South Africa. They could be sent to our address, care of Miss Hilder, Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, South Africa.

AN APPEAL from NEW ZEALAND.

Mrs. G. Packe, of Upper Riccarton, near Christchurch, New Zealand, writes:—

This district of Riccarton is the largest racing centre in New Zealand. There are many training stables, employing perhaps a couple of hundred men and jockeys, besides the trainers and their families. Though there are two Wesleyan Chapels and a Church of England within a mile or so, these people are rarely seen in either, and no man cares for their souls. They are taken into the stables as picked steady, smart lads, and I have had the pain of seeing generations of them turned out when grown too heavy for jockeys, smoking, drinking, demoralised beings, sources of corruption wherever they go.

I have built a small hall on the racecourse reserve, to gather them for teaching, recreation, and, above all, for spiritual influence; but it is lying idle for want of some devoted young workman to fill the gap. We need someone with private means; if in delicate health and in need of a change of climate, this is one of the best and sunniest climates in the world. He could be assured of a comfortable home with private sitting-room and bed-room for 25s. per week, and plenty of congenial society in the neighbourhood. The racecourse is five miles from Christchurch, and in easy communication with all parts of the South Island. There is a branch of the Y.M.C.A. in town. The jockeys could well afford to pay for their classes, and music is a great delight to them. Though so exposed to vice, they are by no means rough. What we want is a winning all-round man, good at, or at least in sympathy with, cricket and football, as well as wise to win and help others out of darkness into light. There are ministers of various denominatians ready to give regular help especially on Sunday afternoons. I also prepared to mother the whole undertaking, but the volunteer for this service should be left free to organise it in any way he thinks fit. He need not bind himself, and it matters not to what branch of the Church he belongs; English Church, if evangelical, preferred, and would have most weight in the neighbourhood. Neither does it matter to what profession he may have belonged or may intend to belong, if he is an out-and-out Christian. For all further particulars an applicant can refer to Rev. T. Chaffers Welsh, care of Rev. R. Kyrke, Croxton Rectory, Ulceby, Lincolnshire.

COLLEGES IN ASIA MINOR.

Schools, in the early stages of missionary work, are an evangelising agency. As the work attains success, a desire and demand for better education is developed; high schools and colleges are established; youth are willing to pay for their educational privileges, and more manly Christian character is produced. This is not theory: it is fact. There are now three Christian colleges in Asia Minor, founded and fostered by American missionaries. Their influence is already very great. The problem is to render them permanent, on a high plane of efficiency. They are powerful bulwarks against Jesuitism on the one hand, and infidelity on the other. Of hopeful factors in the permanent solution of the Eastern Question they are the most potent.

Two of these colleges have endowments; the third (Anatolia College, at Marsovan, ancient Fasimone, in Pontus) has as yet no permanent endowment fund. It has pupils; it has the confidence of the people; it has a noble site; it has no debt; it has no lack of those, native and American, who are struggling and sacrificing to sustain it; and it appeals for the aid of British Christians who love to see God's kingdom gaining ground in Asia. A leaflet, giving more specific information, will be furnished by Rev. George F. Herrick, D.D., 11, Queen-square, London, W.C.

WAITING.

"Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."
1 Cor. i. 7.

Jesus, Thou art waiting, waiting,
Waiting for thy blood-bought Bride,
Waiting for thy heart's deep longing
To be satisfied.
Waiting for the joyous moment,
Watching us with tender care;
Till at Thy command upspringing,
We Thy glory share.
Chorus—Jesus, Thou art waiting, waiting,
Waiting for Thy blood-bought Bride,
Waiting for Thy heart's deep longing
To be satisfied.

Jesus we are waiting, waiting,
Waiting, blessed Lord, for Thee,
Waiting for the calling upward
With our Lord to be.
Long and lone has been the pathway,
Oft our hearts have failed with fear,
But the guiding star of morning
Tells us Thou art near.

They are waiting, waiting, waiting,
Loved ones who have gone before,
Waiting for the sweet home-bringing;
Parting nevermore.
Oh, the joy, the bliss, the rapture!
All our tears and sorrows past,
Singing with triumphant praises,
"Safely Home at last."

Keep us, blessed Jesus, waiting,
Clinging to thy precious word;
Every footstep of the journey,
Waiting for our Lord.
Waiting till within the mansions,
We behold thy glorious face;
Singing all the wondrous story
Of Thy matchless grace.

CHRISTIAN COLONISATION.

Sir,—Arrangements are being made to assist a party of Christian workers about to emigrate to Australia with the object of settling in the irrigation lands on the banks of the Murray.

They are members of the church meeting at the Shoreditch Tabernacle under the pastoral care of Rev. W. Cuff, who takes a personal interest in the movement. It is intended that they leave England by the royal mail steamer Orient on October 26. A meeting will be held in the Shoreditch Tabernacle on October 18, when an address will be given descriptive of the country to which the emigrants are going, followed by words of counsel from Mr. W. T. Rees, of New Zealand, who will preside. It is hoped that the present party will form the pioneers of a movement which may be extended from time to time in connection with other churches.

Your readers will recognise the importance of the introduction of Christian influence and example, combined with the inculcation of total abstinence principles, into newly settled districts. Mr. Cuff will receive any contributions forwarded to assist this new enterprise. Information of the arrival of the emigrants, and of the work undertaken by them among their fellow-colonists in Australia, will be communicated to subscribers through the press.

Yours truly, J. E. Cracknell.

TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—A Sabbath-school Peace Association has been founded, composed of five schools in Wisbech, and several in the neighbouring villages. We cordially invite all Sabbath-school teachers to unite with us in educating our juvenile population to uplift the Banner of Peace.—Yours very truly,

AMONG BELGIAN CHILDREN.

I wonder whether many English boys and girls realise how near their shores ignorant children live and grow up. If they were to cross the Channel, to land in Belgium, and visit the mining and manufacturing districts of that country, they would meet hundreds of children who have never heard the name of Jesus. Scattered far apart, there are missionary churches whose pastors and members preach the Gospel to the ignorant and superstitious people.

Work among the children is an important feature of this mission. The children of the church members, who are all converts from Romanism or unbelief, gather in the church for their Sunday-school before the morning service. The school is carried on very much in the same way as in England. There is always a great clatter when the children disperse into their classes, as many of them wear wooden shoes, which make a great noise on the stone pavement.

One Sunday I was in a large town. We wished to attend the Protestant Mission Church of the place. As we came up to the building the children were pouring out of the Sunday-school. I noticed one little maid whose anxious face showed that she was in trouble. I saw her difficulty; she carried a big Bible, a hymn-book, a parcel of tracts, and a very large umbrella. She was trying to disengage one of her hands so as to hold a little baby brother, who had a propensity to trot off after the other boys. "Well, little girl," said I, "let me hold your umbrella and your brother, while you stow away your books and your tracts in those big pockets in your jacket." "Oh, thank you," she said, looking up to me with a beaming smile, quite relieved from her responsibility. "What are those tracts for?" I asked. "Well, miss, I go in there; they teach us the Gospel, and we sing hymns, and it is so nice. But in the day-school I am the only little girl that knows about all that, and I want to get the other little girls to come too; so I give them tracts, and tell them stories about Jesus. Some have persuaded their mothers to let them come in with me sometimes. Now I am ready, and must be off. Good-bye." And away the little missionary went, holding her umbrella and her brother, her two pockets very bumpy and heavy, but her heart very light and glad, because she was a little worker in the Lord's vineyard.

There is a little girl in one Sunday-school, with a sweet loving face, but there is always a shade of sadness on it. Her mother has become a Christian lately, but her father is a dreadful drunkard. He allows his wife to take her little daughter with her to church and Sunday-school; but he insists on his little boy going to the Roman Catholic catechism and mass. Sunday is a sad day in that home. In the morning the little boy often begs hard to be allowed to go with his mother and sister, and the children separate in tears, and go on their ways with a sad heart. In the evening the father comes home drunk, and beats his wife and children. As we were staying a few weeks at the place, we started a children's meeting on Thursday afternoon. We were very glad and much surprised to see our little friend leading in her brother; she looked so triumphant and happy. "I got father to let him come, as it is not Sunday," she exclaimed.

We began our meeting by reviewing the texts learnt during the last two months at the Sunday-school. When it came to the little boy's turn to recite, we I said were glad to have him but that we must pass him over in the questioning as he had never attended the Sunday-school. He looked shy and remained silent. His sister, blushing very much, was pushing him gently from her seat behind. "Please Miss," she said at last, "I teach him all the texts and tell him all the stories when I go home. Now, Henri, show how well you can answer and recite. The little fellow took courage, stood up and put all the other boys to shame by the way he repeated the texts and the lessons his sister had taught him in their private little Sunday-school at home. We are praying for the conversion of the father, and hoping that very soon they will all come to church happily together.

Besides the work among the children of the church members, some earnest young men gather the Roman Catholic children playing in the streets into the kitchen of a Protestant collier, and teach those little dirty-faced and bare.footed boys and girls about Jesus. If you were to ask them who God is, many of them would answer that it is what the Priest carries in a box to people who are dying. They know the sound of the word "Virgin Mary," and they can gabble through a short Lain prayer to her, but they have not the slightest notion who she is. As to Jesus, they know the look of a crucifix, but nothing more about the Redeemer.

One little girl went home after attending the Mission Sunday-school. Her grandfather was sitting alone in the kitchen. "Mary," he said, "I do not like you going to hear the Protestants. If you will leave off attending the school I will get you a nice pair of leather boots." The child looked down at her wooden sabots; she thought how very uncomfortable they were, they got so hard after a long walk, and bruised her feet. But when she thought of the price of the bargain she soon made up her mind. "Grandfather, I would rather go to the Sunday-school in my sabots than go to Mass with nice leather boots." "Well, child, there will be a fair in the village next week, so if you will give up your school and your Protestant notions, I will take you to the fair, and besides the boots you can choose a pretty bead necklace."

This time the little girl did not hesitate. She threw her arms round her grandfather's neck and said, "Grandpapa, I wish you would come to hear the Gospel; you would see, then, that one cannot give it up. Do come with me to the next meeting." "You are a wilful little girl," answered the old man, pushing her off; "go away." A few minutes later you would have seen in a neighbouring cottage our little friend seated on a high chair, her feet in her wooden sabots resting on the bars, and on her knees a big Bible, out of which she was reading to an old woman confined to bed with rheumatism. Her face looked so happy, that one could see she had chosen that good part which shall not be taken away.

Among the higher class of children it is very difficult to do any work. An incident that will show how strict the parents are about keeping their children away from Gospel teaching: In a village in Belgium a very bigoted mother engaged as a daily governess to her little daughter, the daughter of the missionary church pastor of the place, as she could not get a Roman Catholic teacher. The governess had to promise not to try to bring up the little girl to her religion. Very soon the two were great friends; the little girl admired and loved her teacher, and began to wish she could be so happy in her religion as she seemed to be. The teacher pitied and prayed for her pupil, hoping God would show her the truth, as she could not do it herself. One day, the little girl ran after the governess with a book in her hand, begging her to take the book away, saying she had found it in the library and read some of it, but her mother said she was never to open it again; it was the Bible of the Protestants, and would do her harm. The teacher answered, she would not take a book out of the house that did not belong to her, and persuaded the child to put it back where she had found it, praying silently that the little girl might find it a light on her path. Three months later, the teacher discovered the Bible had been put away in a store-room at her home. Her mother had found the book in the bag she took with her to her pupil's house, and, thinking it was not used, had put it by. The teacher understood that her pupil had put it into her bag unawares, so as to get rid of so dangerous a poison. Next day she took it back. When the little girl saw the book on the table, she rushed into her teacher's arms sobbing and thanking her for having returned it. What she had read had done its work in her heart, and she had been longing for the Bible these three months, wishing she had never tried to get rid of it.

Some weeks later the little girl told her mother she had been reading the forbidden book, that she had found peace and joy, and that she could not go to mass any more. The mother was very angry, and dismissed the Christian governess; but her little girl's faith was not destroyed. She was sent to a convent, where she was very unhappy, but that did not shake her belief. She was taken to town, to theatres, and children's balls, and still she remained faithful. At last she was brought back home, and strictly forbidden ever to visit her former governess. She was obliged to go to the Roman Catholic church with her mother; then she would kneel quietly and pray to God, while her mother repeated Latin prayers to the Virgin.

One day the child was walking alone in a lane when she met her old governess. She kissed her and sobbed in her arms. "Oh, dear Mademoiselle, I cannot do without a Testament. I have written out all that I learnt by heart, and I read it every day; but I do so want something more." The governess always carries in her pocket a leaf taken out of a Testament, and when she meets her former pupil slips it into her hand. These leaves are treasured by the little girl, who keeps them crumpled in her purse, and reads them when she can escape notice. I wish English childsren would pray for this poor child, so that soon she may be free to read her Bible and profess her faith openly.

EDUCATION OF LIBERIAN GIRLS.—A well-attended meeting was recently held at Finsbury-park Hall, Dr. Kirton in the chair, to hear an address by Mrs. Garnet Barboza, a coloured lady, who is seeking the aid of English sympathisers in her efforts to promote the education of native girls in the Republic of Liberia. The audience was much interested in the account given of the history, constitution, natural features, &c., of this little-known, but interesting country, whose dusky-sons, though generally intelligent, do not favour the education of the female population, probably having the fear of the "woman's rights" movement before their eyes; hence the need for the work in which Mrs. Barboza is engaged.

Y.W.C.A. TRAVELLING SECRETARIES.—Two ladies of independent means are needed who will offer their services as travelling secretaries for the "Factory Helpers' Union" and Convalescent Sick Aid and Holiday Department, to organise and further the work in London and country places. Any lady willing to undertake this post should communicate at once, if in London or the South of England, with Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow-gardens, London, S.W.; or, if in the North of England, with Mrs. Stephen Menzies, 10, Croxteth-road, Liverpool. No lady could be accepted unless able to defray entire expenses of her visits, &c. Thirty pounds a year might be offered towards travelling expenses.

THE BELFAST CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

The second Belfast Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held last week. Convened in the Exhibition Hall, Royal Botanic Gardens, the meetings were well attended throughout, and there is reason to believe that many derived distinct spiritual profit from the proceedings. Mr. H. F. Bowker, of London, presided. The seasons for prayer were highly prized by many Christian residents and visitors, and the addresses by well-known speakers were replete with instruction, and calculated to prove helpful in the Christian life.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2.

After some preliminary meetings which excited much interest, the Convention proper opened on Tuesday morning, with a prayer-meeting, at which Rev. J. Sloan, of Glasgow, spoke a few words on Psalm xxiii. At the general meeting at noon, addresses were delivered by Revs. G. C. Grubb, of Cahir, and J. G. Gregson, late of India.

"THE LIGHT OF THY COUNTENANCE" was the subject of Mr. Grubb's remarks. This expression is enshrined in Psalm lxxx. 3, translated in the Authorised Version, "cause thy face to shine."

Having enlarged upon the need of a sense of the great sinfulness of sin, Mr. Grubb called attention to a number of passages defining the "light of God's countenance," and concluded by saying that those who are not gaining victories over self every day are certainly not living in the light of God's countenance. Anyone who is walking in this light, will find the Bible a delightful book, setting forth the word of light, and will pursue a path of perpetual victory.

"THE STRONGER THAN THE STRONG MAN."

Mr. Gregson spoke of failures and defeats in spiritual life, with a view to showing their cause and cure. Referring to Luke xi. 14—26, he showed that Satan cannot cast out Satan; self never casts out self. Many people act as if they could relieve themselves of sin and wickedness, their course showing that they have not realised the principle laid down by the Lord. Some time ago a gentleman who wanted ease of mind said, "I have been to so-and-so, and also to so-and-so, but they can tell me nothing; rather, they say they are in precisely a similar position." Never go to anybody with a bad temper to get a bad temper cast out; do not go to an avaricious man to get avarice cast out. When the Stronger than the strong man comes in, and wants to give them resurrection life, some people say: "Do not disturb me; I want to be at peace." Christ wants to take full possession of us, and to break up the old armour wherein we have trusted. Never attempt to fight evil yourself, for you will always be worsted in the conflict. Let the Stronger than the strong man (otherwise strong self or strong will) come in, and take possession. Some who empty themselves remain so a long time, and then begin furnishing the house with ecclesiastical and natural things, until "the last state is worse than the first." This will not do. God is willing to give, and we must be ready to receive. He will cast out the evil spirit, and He will give his own Spirit—He will both redeem and sanctify. Let the Stronger than the strong come in, and take possession.

"WHERE IS THY GOD?"

In the afternoon, Mr. Grubb gave a Bible-reading, founding his remarks on the expression, "Where is thy God?" as found in Psalm xlii. 3, and several other places in Holy Scripture. Though they are sadly mixed up with the world, believers should properly be separate and holy. Israel, when corrupt and desolate, was reproached by the nations, who inquired, "Where is their God?" The Church to-day is largely open to similar reproach, for in many assemblies the unconverted outnumber those who are true believers. If money is wanted, raffles, concerts, and other such devices and plans are resorted to; God's work is done in a worldly way. The atmosphere of the Church should be such that unconverted men cannot help feeling uncomfortable. Of old, the heathen took their idols of silver and gold into God's inheritance (Psalm cxv.). To-day the same things are worshipped, and it is necessary for the words of the Apostle to be repeated, in which he enjoins a willingness to communicate, "Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life"—upon the life that is life indeed, the true life.

The first remedy for the state of things which is so deeply regretted is a second conversion. If we say, "The people of the Lord, the people of the Lord, are we," let us show it. Let us turn to the Lord with all our heart, with fasting, and weeping, and mourning; let us rend our hearts and not our garments, as the exhortation is expressed in Joel ii. 13, 14: "For God is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth Him of the evil. Who knoweth if He will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind Him?" Secondly, we need to "gather the people, and sanctify the congregation," as the prophet Joel was instructed. In the third place, submission is necessary; we must allow the Lord to tell us our faults. Lastly, still following the passage in Joel (ver. 21—27), we must lay hold of God's promises, and ask for the reception of the power and baptism of the Holy Ghost.

THE TEMPLE OF THE HOLY GHOST.

In the evening, addresses were delivered by Revs. J. G. Gregson and W. Haslam. Referring to the lowness of the level of the spiritual life of many who trust to Christ for salvation, Mr. Gregson directed attention to the need of an abiding sense of nearness to God. If there is one truth in Revelation which fills my soul with wonder and amazement, it is this: "With that man will I dwell who is of a humble and a contrite heart, and who trembleth at my word." I want a power for ever going onwards as eternity becomes nearer to me. In no stage of the Christian life can there be stagnation. Everything that is human attains its zenith in time; but in things pertaining to God, eternity is required for the attainment of the zenith. The speaker directed attention to 1 Cor. vi. 19, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" A temple is a place separated for divine service. We have the sure word of God as to what the believer should be; and, mind, that word tells us what the normal condition of the believer should be in the sight of God—a temple separated unto God, in which the Holy Ghost will dwell. It is not a mode, but a spiritual condition. It is not a higher life nor a lower life; but the condition revealed of God to the soul. Purity will abide with the Holy Ghost; love to God and man will abide with the Holy Ghost; holiness will abide with the Holy Ghost. Every question man can ask, every thought conscience can suggest, and every doubt that can come from the fogs of human intelligence, will be answered by the statment, "I believe in the Holy Ghost."

PROGRESS INTO LIBERTY.

Rev. W. Haslam based his address on the imprisonment of Peter, as recorded in Acts xii. There are three words which believers ought ever to bear in mind. The first is, "come"—come unto Me; the second, "follow"—follow Me; and the third, "go"—go and live for the glory of God, and the good of others, not for yourself. When God sends messengers, He always sends light. The light in Peter's prison discovered chains, a girdle, shoes, and a garment. As Peter was in bonds, so many believers are in spiritual bondage, and lacking of spiritual attire. They rejoice in liberty from the penalty of sin, rejoice that their sins are pardoned; but somehow their joy and peace are not what they once were, in brightness and constancy. There is a promise left for us, that we are to be delivered from all our enemies, not that we are to deliver ourselves, and to serve God without fear in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life. Some people do not know who and what their enemies are. They think of some human creatures. But our enemies are greater far than any such, and God undertakes, from the devil, the world, and the flesh, all put together, to deliver us. If God has set you free from your sins, He can, by the exercise of faith on your part, set you free from every other bondage. We need not be in chains, for the risen Saviour can break every chain. When the angel said, "Arise," the chains fell off. "Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals," says Christ to us, and remember that I am with you. What is the use of having the girdle of power and strength, if we do not wear it? The way to be set free is by simple obedience, by girding yourself in the power of the present Saviour. Let us "put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof."

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3.

CLEANSING AND COMMUNION.

Rev. J. G. Gregson, at the morning prayer-meeting, delivered an address on the words in 1 John i. 7: "And the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin"; and Luke xxiv. 29—32: "But they constrained Him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And He went in to tarry with them....And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures?" Some would like to know how we can tell when we are walking in the Spirit, and how we can be certain that we are having fellowship with God. We may affirm that we are walking in the Spirit when we see the things which are revealed to us by God. When walking with a friend we are conscious of his arm being withdrawn; we are out of touch with him. So, also, we easily become aware of the unlinking of the hand that was resting upon the hand of God; and then we realise the need for confession, and acknowledgment, and restoration; for "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." Christ "talked" and "walked" with his disciples. Talking with God! When Israel took the evidence of the spies, they were deceived. We can only be helpful to one another up to a certain point; beyond that, we cannot help one another at all. "Learn of Me" is the teaching we must follow, if we are ever to know the blessedness of walking with God. We cannot get it from the experience of our fellow-creatures; we cannot receive it from the most spiritually minded earthly teachers. We are not walking with teachers; we are not having fellowship with believers; we are having fellowship with God. This is, to my mind, the surest evidence you can have that you are in the Spirit, the Word of God having become to you a positively new book by the truths there assuming living forms.

SALVATION IN PROCESS.

At the noon meeting, Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on "Salvation." He began by pointing out the greatness of the word, as it spans the whole chasm between where Adam fell, and whereunto Jesus Christ, the second Adam, restores us to more than our father lost. Confining his attention to that salvation which is now in process, the speaker said: If there is one thing that the Church needs to understand more than another, it is the true nature of sin.

Small thoughts of sin have brought about paltry views of the death of our Lord, and insignificant thoughts of hell with its future terror. But, if once we can understand for ourselves and teach to men what sin is in the sight of God, methinks men would have new and enlarged conceptions of the death of the cross, and a new and awful terror of the powers of the world to come. There are four definitions of sin given in the New Testament, and five pictures of it in the Old. In 1 John v. 17, we read, "All unrighteousness is sin"; every offence against God's perfect law of right is sin. In 1 John iii. 4, it is said: "Sin is the transgression of the law." Many a man comforts himself that he has never broken one of the ten commandments given from Sinai; but on the Mount of Beatitudes Jesus gave a new edition of that law, after a more spiritual sort, when He said that man sins against purity equally in the heart as in the act; that man sins against his brother not only by the act of murder, but by a single unkind thought; that everything that is deficient in perfect love to God and man is equally an infraction of the perfect law of Sinai. As I hold up the standard of Matt. v., vi., and vii., is there a single person who is not compelled, with bowed head and broken heart, to confess, "I have sinned and perverted that which was right; I have transgressed the law, the eternal spiritual law of God"? The third definition is given in Rom. xiv. 23, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Everything which will not stand the searching test of prayer and faith is sin in the sight of God. The fourth use of the word is found in Rom. iii. 23, "All have sinned and fall short of the glory of God." Even our tears need to be washed in the blood of Christ; our prayers need to be presented by the hand of Christ; our holy service, by reason of its very imperfection of motive, needs the atonement and propitiation of Christ to make it fit for God's acceptance. Turning to the Old Testament, Mr. Meyer commented on the fivefold delineation of sin as typified in the Levitical offerings. Touching on the lessons of the sin-offering, he applied it to the case of sins of ignorance. Even if one should affirm that he had, say, for the past five years, lived without conscious sin, how can he declare that he has lived sinlessly? Is there not in the hearts of all of us sin of which we know nothing? No people who know anything of the inner life, or of God's dealings with their souls, can hold the doctrine of sinless perfection, because experience shows that the nearer we get to Christ the more we see sin where formerly we saw it not.

Passing on to notice what God has done in Christ, that all the sins of his children may be forgiven—the sins committed this side of conversion — the speaker called attention to Heb. ix. 26, x. 12, and Acts xiii. 39: "By Him all that believe are justified from all things." There are some who say they work up through sin toward Christ as well as they can. We say, "Stand, by faith, where Christ is standing, at the right hand of God, and look down on sin." Do not work up from sin to Christ, but stand on a level with the risen Son of God, and look down on sin: that is the teaching of the Bible. In the mind and thought and intention of the Eternal God you and I have already taken our seat in heaven. Below us are the principalities and the powers, and above us is the canopy of our Father's love. Having pointed out the significance of Col. ii. 20, and iii. 2—5, where the death of the believer with Christ is spoken of, and there is an exhortation to set the affection on things above, Mr. Meyer remarked upon the difference between standing and experience; between what we are in God's thought, and what we are in our own thought. Must Christians bring down their standing in Christ to the level of their miserable experience? Rather, on the contrary, they must level up their experience to the height of their standing. We ought not to go through the world constantly feeling overmastered by the flesh, the world, and the devil; but, realising our true position as a risen and ascended people, one with the Lord Jesus by faith.

Answering the question: "How can I do this?" Mr. Meyer referred to Rom. vi. 10, 11: "For in that He (Christ) died, He died unto sin once: but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Having called attention to "the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe," as set forth in Eph. i. 18–20, he asked his hearers to live the resurrection life in the Holy Ghost.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS LOVE."

Rev. W. Haslam spoke on 1 Cor. xiii. 13. The "charity" in question is our love toward God, not God's love toward us. How are we to love God? I met a person not long ago, said the speaker, who was leading a very devoted, earnest, self-denying religious life. She told me how much she loved God, and it was very real and very true, so far as she knew. But I said to her, "Does God love you?" She rejoined, "How may I know that?" Ah! you see she was living and working in order to procure God's love. It is our privilege, however, to believe that God loves us: and when this love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, it will kindle a love in us towards Him. The love which is greater than faith and hope is not something you can kindle for yourselves; we need the love of Christ in our hearts. The Son of God, who showed us the love of God, not only gave his blood to save us from the penalty of sin, but provided for our purification from ourselves. We must look to Him for an out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, that we may be filled with the love of God, to constrain us, and restrain us, to take full possession of us. Let us rise above the mists, and sit in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus, to the enjoyment of all that which Jesus has secured for us. He will purify us from day to day, and from hour to hour. Until we trust Him for this and for every grace, we shall have no real rest.

THE TEACHING AND WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

In the afternoon, Mr. Meyer conducted a Bible-study on the teaching and work of the Holy Spirit in people's lives. At the outset he founded an argument on four passages of Scripture. In Luke iii. 22, we read that the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape, like a dove upon Christ. Jesus was then sealed by the forthcoming of the Spirit from the Father. In chap. iv. 1, we are further told that, "being full of (or filled with) the Holy Ghost," Jesus returned from Jordan. Was He not full before then? Certainly; but yet there was a definite point at which the Spirit descended upon Him and filled Him without measure. The second passage cited was Acts ii. 4, "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Who were filled? A hundred and twenty disciples; many of them obscure and uneducated people, women as well as men. Had they not received the Spirit before? Yes, certainly; for, in John xx. 20, the Lord is said to have breathed on them, and to have said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." At Pentecost, however, they were "filled." Turn to Acts viii. 15, 17. Peter and John, when they were come down, "prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. . . and they received the Holy Ghost." Earlier on in the chapter we read that these people "believed," which they could not have done without the grace of the Holy Ghost. Having received the Spirit in the ordinary way, they afterwards came to receive Him in a special way. As a fourth passage, Acts xix. 2—6 was referred to, where some who had previously "believed," were so filled with the Spirit that they prophesied and spake with tongues. It is not needful to pass through some special experience to enjoy this, for the light may steal over the soul as the dawn over the sky. There are five tests by which believers may answer the question, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" First, Are you constantly overcome by besetting sins? A man can never jump away from himself; but, if filled with the Spirit, he will b victorious over the flesh, and sin, and the devil. Secondly, Is the Lord Jesus so precious to you that your heart sings to Him continually? You may know that you have the Spirit when your heart is absorbed with the Saviour, whom the Spirit specially rejoices to reveal. In the third place, Have you power in service—are you winning souls? Fourthly, Have you the assurance of childship? If you are filled with the Holy Spirit, a voice that is not your own will ever be speaking within your heart, and saying, not that thou art a child of God, but rather that God is thy Father. The fifth test is found in the constancy and permanency of experience—an abiding and ever-progressive work.

One of the signs of the filling of the Holy Spirit is that He pursues his operations to a blessed issue. Rom. vii. sets forth the life of those who have had the spirit only in a limited sense; the chapter following is a picture of what, by the grace of God, the Christian life may be. The eighth is, in fact, the Holy Ghost chapter, teaching us that when the Spirit enters, He brings into the man a new law, in and through which we are made free from the law of sin and death—free from both the penalty and power of sin.

How may we receive the Holy Spirit? First we must desire Him only for the glory of God secondly, there must not be in our life anything which we are conscious that the Spirit would not abide with. Further, it is through the Scriptures that the Spirit must be received. Take the Book into the heart, for it is the Spirit's chart. In conclusion, the speaker remarked that his own intense longing to be led by the Spirit enabled him to realise the needs of others, and to speak with earnestnes on this great subject.

"ALL THINGS ARE YOURS."

At the evening meeting, Mr. Meyer delivered another brief address. He quoted 2 Peter i. 3: "According as his divine powe hath given unto us all things that pertain unt life and godliness"; 1 Cor. i. 30: "Chris Jesus...is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;" an John i. 14, 16: "The Word...dwelt among u ...full of grace...and of his fulness have al we received." In some words of exhortation founded upon these passages, he said: God ou Father has put Jesus Christ and all that H is to our credit in his bank. All that Jesu is in his resurrection glory has been put to ou credit, and we have only to go to the bank at an moment, and what we want is secured to us.

Why do we not appropriate these riches c Christ? When the devil tempts you, turn instantly to the Lord, and claim the very grac the lack of which is hurrying you into sir When the devil tempts you to impurity, clain the purity of Jesus. When the devil tempt you to ill-temper, appropriate the meeknes and gentleness of Christ. When, again, th temptation is to a perturbed and trouble heart, which of all hearts is the least able t receive the presence of the Spirit, turn t Jesus and appropriate his still serenity an peace. And, whatever you need most, clain the precious fulness of Jesus, and you will receive all you want. Let us live as those wh in themselves are nothing, but who hav learned to keep taking of the fulness c Christ.

ASSURANCE OF VICTORY.

Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow, spoke som words of warning and exhortation, based o Exod. xvii. 9 to end. The children of Israe were brought out of Egypt by the hand of Go alone. Those who have been led out of spiritua bondage should therefore remember to ascrib all praise to God, and to trust Him for deliverance from every evil. It is the Christian privilege to be as firmly assured of victory as h is assured of pardon. In the contest wit Amalek, Moses's hands grew weary; we are n told that Joshua's did. You and I are muc more prone to grow weary of praying than of working. Let us be jealous about our communion with God.

It was after Israel murmured that Amalek came; so it is after censoriousness, irritability, and fits of ill-nature, that temptations to other sins, and wickedness often came. Amalek smote those who were hindmost, feeble, faint-hearted, and weary. It is to such that our Joshua offers succour to-day, and for them our Moses, who ever liveth and is never weary, intercedes.

The confidence of pardon lies in realising the fact that Christ has died in our place, and his precious blood cleanses from all sin; the confidence of victory lies in receiving Jesus to dwell within us, according to his promise: "I will dwell in you and walk in you." The very moment we cease to abide in Him, and He ceases to abide in us, we begin to sin. He took our place, and died on the cross; now we must take our place in Him, and, rising from the dead, we must walk in newness of life, ever going where He leads, doing what He bids, finding our life in Him. If we obey Him, He will not lead us about for forty years in the wilderness, but conduct us straight into the Canaan of rest.

"WILT THOU BE MADE WHOLE?"

Mr. GRUBB delivered a vigorous address on John v. 6, "Wilt thou be made whole?" The poor man mentioned in the narrative did not want life, but health. In a similar case are many Christian people; they have life, but not health. Many who have been converted have no power to witness for God. Such people must be willing to part with their sin, and to renounce everything which is doubtful in its character; and they must also submit themselves without reserve to the great Physician, who will prove Himself a perfect Saviour within and a perfect Saviour without.

(To be concluded.)

VOYAGING SOUTHWARDS.

IT may interest some of your readers to learn how God has answered prayer in giving his blessing on board the ss. Britannia, which sailed from the Royal Albert Docks on Sept. 21. Mr. Charles Cook and Miss Herdman left us at Gibraltar, on Tuesday, 24 inst., the former to visit the prisons of Morocco, the latter to return to her consecrated mission field. The interest that followed addresses from these friends in the saloon on Sunday led to a liberal response, following Miss Herdman's account of how prisoners are left, as also sick ones, to starve to death, unless food is brought by outsiders; and how four shillings on one occasion fed 200. It was proposed to raise enough to repeat the miracle of feeding the 5000; £6 was at once contributed, and thus more than enough was provided. So great was the interest manifested that Miss Herdman was unanimously invited to continue her interesting missionary experiences on Monday, which she did, to the delight of many. There is no doubt that, as we journey to Australia, many prayers will ascend for this dear and valued servant of God.

Our twenty-four hours' stay at Malta gave us abundant opportunity of being impressed, as the Apostle Paul was more than 1800 years ago, with the idolatrous character of the people of this island. Last night the usual weekly Gospel temperance meeting was held in the hall connected with the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home. Rev. J. Laverack, Wesleyan minister, and Mr. Pearce, a civilian, are being used of God to the bodies and souls of many of the English soldiers and sailors who visit Malta. After speaking personally with a number of out-and-out Christian soldiers, I was privileged to tell the glad message to about 100 who were present. Will your readers pray for much blessing on Christian testimony during the remaining portion of our journey?

Brindisi, September 31.

THE EAST-END TRAGEDIES.

AT the close of his Thursday morning service in the City Temple, last week, Dr. PARKER referred at length to the East-end murders. Replying to the question how far the pulpit was responsible for such crimes, the rev. gentleman said that the pulpit had lost its hold on the tragic and impetuous life of the world. The outcasts of society turned away from the preacher as from a man who talked in an unknown tongue, and troubled himself about antiquities and metaphysics, for which the sad and maddened heart of the world cared nothing. If they looked into most of the theological colleges at that moment, their hearts would ache with pity, because of the kind of education which is being given to young men—an education relating largely to ancient controversies, pedantic differences amongst men not worth remembering, grammatical niceties which affect neither the providence of God nor the duty of man; an education, falsely so-called, which is rearing a race of little priests, who, having forgotten their mother tongue, have imperfectly acquired a professional jargon. Away with such machines and such machinery! What is wanted are men who know the country they live in, the sorrows which surge in billows around their very homes, the poverty that is completed by hopelessness, and the mental unrest which cannot be touched by dead Fathers or living pedagogues. Badly-conducted theological colleges are the curse of Christianity.

Every pulpit in the world should denounce the crimes which London mourns, but denunciation is a poor part of pulpit duty. Every Christian congregation should offer a reward for the discovery of the criminal. What the Home Secretary was doing or thinking of doing passed his comprehension. If offering a reward for the discovery of the criminal will not detect the perpetrator of the crime, what harm can be done? But if offering a reward should end in the detection of the criminal, great good will be effected. This quick murder of women is nothing compared to the slow murder that is going on every day. Compared with many who are cruel deliberately, the perpetration of these East-end crimes is gentleness, mercy itself. The magistrates should be armed with greater powers. Nothing will really make a certain class of criminals feel their crime but bodily chastisement. It is no use trying moral suasion upon garotters, violent robbers, cruel husbands and fathers; they must be flogged. A creature in Wiltshire recently felled his helpless wife, kicked her, used her infamously; she fled for refuge under the bed; he dragged her out, tore every rag from her body, made her walk in nakedness before her children for two hours, dragged her round the room by the hair of her head, until the poor maddened creature flew through the window, and the husband was sentenced to three months' imprisonment! ("Shame!")

Church congresses and Nonconformist assemblies should suspend their sittings that these tremendous grievances may be attended to. We have had papers enough upon distant subjects, addresses enough upon things that are only in the air. What are we to do with the real, concrete, intolerable life immediately around us? It is in vain to meet as quiet, respectable, gospel-imbibing congregations, drinking orthodoxy to the full and setting down the empty goblet with a sigh of impious satisfaction. The devil laughs at the sacrifice, and bids the feast of wind to go on and prosper. As to denouncing the criminal, better ask how far we are responsible for his creation, by making labour a disappointment, by running profits down so small as to turn young men to gambling, by surrounding men with drunkenness and then fining them for drinking.

LONDON SOLDIERS' HOME.

DEAR SIR,—A most excellent site has been secured for the new building for the London Soldiers' Home, close to the Wellington Barracks, within easy distance of Chelsea and Knightsbridge, the Tower also being readily accessible by Underground Railway. We begin to build immediately. We have been earnest in prayer that the funds might be given in large sums, so as to save the time and labour involved in collection. In one day I received cheques for £500 and £200, and within three days the kind giver of the £500 sent me a second cheque—this time for £1000. It is owing to some temporary arrangements made by this same generous friend that I have been enabled to secure the land, a site upon which our eyes had long been fixed, and which has proved, much to our surprise, to be the property of the Mildmay Institutions; so that in undertaking its purchase I have at least the pleasure of feeling that the money goes to one of the most blessed and important works of the present day.

The price of the site is £3700. Although I have cut down the plans in every possible way, I fear that I shall not get the building and furnishing completed under between £4000 and £5000. All who have seen the plans are delighted with them. I entreat the prayers of your readers that this great work may soon be brought to a successful issue, and that in the house, built and dedicated to His service, hundreds of souls may inherit the blessing, even life for evermore.

Until its completion I am under the necessity of carrying on the work which I undertook so many months ago in the very inadequate little quarters from which I now write. However, I can thankfully tell of a steady though slow progress in point of numbers, and of very evident signs of the Lord's blessing in the conversion of souls and strengthening of his people.—Yours,
G. F. S. DANIELL.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

THERE was a good attendance of workers at the meeting held on Friday last, presided over by Mr. Grellier. Mr. Isaacs gave an account of a young man who recently entered the Rest in a casual manner, but there found the Saviour, personal dealing being instrumental in his enlightenment.

The address was given by Mr. Stanley, who based words of encouragement and instruction on 2 Kings vi. 1: "The sons of the prophets." Two missionaries about to leave for China told the meeting how God had led them to Him, and constrained them to volunteer for foreign service. Both acknowledged that they owed the deepening of their spiritual life to the Y.M.C.A. Mr. R. C. Morgan having spoken briefly on Heb. iv. 16, there was a season of prayer, in which the missionaries were commended to God, and his blessing was asked on the operations of the Rest.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY (21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.).—A Vicar writes to The Record:—I thank God that the Evangelisation Society send their evangelists into parishes, even in opposition to the wishes of the incumbent. These are the very parishes which need the light. Had they waited for clerical sanction where I was living, they would never have obtained an entrance; I should not have heard their clear Gospel sound, and been brought to a knowledge of Christ as my Saviour. Whether the preacher was a Dissenter or not, I do not know, or care; but the result of my own conversion was a decision to enter the ministry. Having passed my University course, I am ordained, and have now been working for nine years on the grand old lines of the Evangelisation Society.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh.

Under the title of "The Great Missionary Failure," Canon Taylor has contributed a startling article to the present Fortnightly Review. He emphasises the fact so often alluded to by our friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, that the heathen, by the mere increase of their birth-rate, are outnumbering all the converts of all our societies, so that there are millions more of heathen to-day than a century ago. He calculates that, owing to this cause alone, it would take the Church Missionary Society 27,000 years to overtake the gain to heathenism in a single year in China. How desperate must be the disappointment of those who have no hope for the world but such as is supplied by the development of existing agencies; and who look for its conversion before the return of the Lord. It must sometimes seem to them an impossible dream. But when once we have truly conceived of the present Age, that it is one of witnessing to the world and for the gathering out of the Church; and that the next Age, which shall be inaugurated by his coming, shall witness the ingathering of the heathen: then we can consider the present state of the world without losing our faith in the Gospel, only hastening more eagerly by prayer and effort the coming of the Lord.

If the article had done justice to missions, while it called attention to mistakes, it would have been valuable. But it is supported by unfairness of argument, by a disparagement of converts in Africa, which is altogether partial in its field of observation, and by reflections on habits of missionaries, which do them great injustice, and unpleasantly suggest an animus on the part of the Canon. To call them a "class of professional missionaries, and a mercenary army" is to say what is less true of them than of ministers at home. It ought never to be forgotten that missions in India and China are sowing the seeds for a great future, and very terrible is the responsibility of a writer who, instead of amending missionary methods and subscriptions, pens undiscriminating statements which will go far to arrest them.

We refer again to the catholic-spirited speech of the Bishop of Exeter at the recent Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, in order to emphasise its leading idea. Without relinquishing his belief in the doctrines and discipline of his own Church, he gave his Nonconformist brethren credit for the same sincerity, the same honesty of conviction, the same tenacity of affection for the associations of past years. One of his closing sentences was especially noteworthy:—

> It is better for the ultimate triumph of love that we should work separately on our own lines in Christian generosity, not interfering with another's work, but endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

This is the unity for which our Lord prayed—not uniformity, which is the law of dead substances, such as bricks, and manufactured duplicates; but unity, which is the law of life. The Divine Being is a Unity, though consisting of different Persons. The body is a unity, though comprising various parts. A life may be a unity, because an infinite number of varying details may combine under one all-mastering purpose. And the one Church of Christ is a unity in the thought of God; because, beneath all its varieties of order and manifestation, it is gathered around the same Redeemer, it worships in almost identical words of praise, and it breathes one intense and passionate yearning for the Second Advent.

The improvement observed in Mr. Denham Smith's condition last week has been maintained; although, on inquiry, we learn that he is still prostrate, weak, and unable to quit his bed. Whilst leaving his mind still clear, and filled with a holy calm and peaceful waiting on God's will, this fresh outburst of disease has reduced him physically to the condition in which he lay previous to the recent wonderful rally of the summer months—a rally which those who watched him closely knew, but too well, was not to be relied upon.

A correspondent draws attention to the cruelties practised by their drivers on draught horses and mules in Rome, and calls for the institution of a society that will take vigorous and effective steps to deal with the evil. The writer says that upper-class Italians will not interpose for fear of incurring unpopularity, and the matter will have to be taken in hand by English and American visitors combining with middle-class residents in the city. It appears that in a recent report of the International Society for the Protection of Animals, as to statistics of cruelty, Rome ranks higher than almost any other city in Europe.

In a recent letter to The Times, Mr. Tallack, secretary of the Howard Association, whose opinions on social questions are always worth recording, comments upon the present condition of the East-end. He aptly points out that the reason why the "years of legislation and miles of paper discussion" upon the overcrowded, unhealthy, and dangerous "rookeries" which are the breeding-places of crime, have not been attended with more success, is that the carrying out of the legalised measures of reform has been too much entrusted to the permissive action of officers subjected to and hindered by the mischievous operation of private interests, vestry cliques, and local partisanship. He pleads for the establishment of a trained body of men, appointed by the Crown or its chief agents, who shall be independent of all such influences, and shall be irremovable during good behaviour. It is, we fear, too true that one of the greatest hindrances to reform in this and other respects is to be found in the apathy and selfishness of property owners who are often members of vestries and other bodies, whose duty it is to carry out the legal provisions for diminishing the evils complained of.

Mr. Tallack deprecates the pessimist conclusions which have been drawn from the recent terrible crimes. He believes that the amount of moral scum rising to the surface is very limited in comparison with the pure depths below, and urges that the repetition of the murders in countless newspapers tends to convey an exaggerated idea of public insecurity. Whilst agreeing with Mr. Tallack that the interests of public order and security demand some improvement in the civil administration, yet it cannot be too strongly urged that it is the individual that must be reached, and reached by individuals in his or her own home. For this an army of trained men and women, full of Christian love and sympathy, is needed, in addition to the devoted band already in the field.

An International Congress is to be held next year in Switzerland for the purpose of deliberating on the means of preventing the sale and circulation of indecent publications of all kinds.

The Conference, at Brixton, of Congregational ministers on the "Indifference to Religion" in South London, was well attended, timely, earnest, and valuable in its results. The hostility to churches on the part of intelligent artisans must be taken account of. Their infidelity may be decreasing, but it cannot be well with them while they cherish, and have too much ground to cherish, very low views of the reality of Christian profession. Happy will it be when the Church begins to reckon with itself in this matter, and wise was it for the Conference to resolve to enter into closer contact with the working men of South London.

A new "International," it is said, has been formed to replace the old one which awoke the fears of European Governments. The Times' Paris correspondent says its adherents are numbered by millions. The managing committee has its seat in New York; sub-committees are in every capital. These give the watch-word of action. Revolutionary clubs, destructive Socialists, trade unions, knights of labour, form its rank and file. Its methods of correspondence are subtle and most ingenious. Its funds already amount to millions of dollars. Delegates speaking several languages go forth to every country bearing money to replenish the treasuries of European revolutionists. The new organisation is vast, is extending, and fashioned to elude the vigilance of Governments. Such facts are serious, and no wise man will treat them with unconcern. A later communication from the above correspondent speaks of secret orders being arranged to effect explosions in London.

It is stated that, under the operation of the law for their expulsion passed in the spring, nearly two thousand Jews have left Odessa during the last three months, and that the exodus is still continuing. In consequence, also, of the limit of exemption from military service having been extended from the seventeenth to the twentieth year, a large number of young Russian Jews are leaving the country. The greater portion of these emigrants, who are of the poor artisan class, are said to go to America or England, and not more than two per cent. have any capital wherewith to commence business. But for the check recently placed by the Sultan upon immigration into Palestine, it is more than probable that many of these exiles would have made for the land of their fathers. Apart, however, from the interest which, in the eyes of those who trace the finger of God in history, attaches to the movements of this persecuted race, the influx into this country of these almost destitute people must still further increase the difficulty of finding work for the unemployed amongst our own East-end toilers. It may be well, therefore, that the attention of the Jewish Board of Guardians and of our own parochial and other authorities should be drawn to this aspect of the question.

Speaking of the Jews, it may not be generally known that of the seven millions of this people at present in the world, nearly one-half live in Russia. From an elaborate report on this subject furnished last year to his Government by the American Consul at St. Petersburg it is gathered that there are two divisions of the Russian Empire, one in which the Jews may live, and one in which they may not; but that the regulations affecting their rights and privileges vary in the different provinces. In some parts, e.g., in Odessa, only those Jews are allowed to live who were settled there before 1859, and still carry on some trade or industry; in others they must have been on the records of population prior to 1835, in others, again, before 1861. The laws upon the subject, however, are apparently so vague that, practically speaking, their stay in the country depends upon their conduct, and they can be arbitrarily dismissed at any time by the provincial authorities. The Russian Government in 1886 appointed a Commission to inquire into the whole question, but their labours have as yet borne no practical fruit.

The interests of a most deserving but often neglected class of men, to whose constant skill, endurance, and sobriety travellers are so largely indebted, have again been brought before the public by the meeting of the Railway Servants' Congress last week. In his opening address the Chairman alluded to the excessive hours of labour often imposed upon the men, and to the fearful loss of life and injury to limb in the working of railway traffic—a side of the picture not presented to the shareholders at half-yearly meetings. For instance, during the year 1887, it is stated, more than six thousand railway servants were injured, and four hundred and seventy were killed; and, from a return made to the House of Lords last year, it is gathered that, upon five of the English railways, during two months of 1887, there were more than 400,000 cases, in which the hours of employment ranged from thirteen to eighteen per day. Dividends ought not to be earned by the blood of railway servants, and the interests of humanity alone demand that the companies should be compelled, if necessary, to make such reforms as will obviate this preventible slaughter and overwork; but it is to be regretted that the discussion on the subject in the House of Commons last session did not warrant great hope of an early remedy.

> Her usual occupation was that of a charwoman, and it was only when driven to extremities that she walked the streets. While narrating these facts the watchman was affected, and wound up his statement by exclaiming, "When she could get no work, she had to do the best she could for a living!"

There is in this little bit of the evidence given on the body of one of the unfortunate creatures recently murdered in the East-end of London much to cause some of our political economists to doubt if, after all, the constitution of society is exactly what it might be, and should be. If those thoughtless writers who, in some daily papers, glibly advocate the licensing and legalising of vice would only look behind the scenes and recognise the fact that many of the unhappy women who haunt the midnight streets are there because of starvation wages, or of their inability to obtain employment, it might strike them that it would be more advantageous to deal with the cause than the effect. In this terrible matter the responsibility is wider than we are apt to think; and, while it is impossible that we should attempt to justify a vicious life, there is yet plenty of room for the exercise of pity, like the Divine Master's.

The Rector of Church Stanton, Rev. Arnold D. Taylor, seems to find cause and effect, in regard to some of our social evils, not far apart, when, in a recent utterance with regard to city and country life, he says:—

> Here (in the city) you have vice and disease, extreme poverty and misery, premature death, all the terrible evils which afflict an overcrowded centre of human life, and disgrace our boasted civilisation and Christianity; there you see the cause of this overcrowding with its attendant miseries in half-tilled fields, huge parks and stretches of pasture, and grand game preserves. You see thousands of acres of fertile land crying out for the labourer's skill; thousands of labourers leaving that land to increase the competition in cities, and lower the wages of the workers there, to bring up families of sickly children stunted in body, instead of rearing strong and healthy children in the fresh and wholesome air, and among the sweet sights of nature which the Father of all has provided for all.

It may be that we have a nearer and cheaper remedy for the overcrowding of our large cities than State colonisation, if we only look around us.

It is a gratifying circumstance that Rarotonga, in the Pacific Ocean, has, with the consent of the Christian natives, been annexed to Great Britain; and Savage Island, as Captain Cook called it, will shortly receive our protection. Instead of the old hostility of the natives, the present generation has requested our protectorate. "This state of things," says The Times, "is to a great extent due to the missionaries who have reduced a ferocious race of men into a hard-working, kindly disposed people." It is the more gratifying that these annexations have taken place so amicably as that no protest has been raised by either France or Germany. We congratulate the London Missionary Society on the result.

We have nothing to do in these columns with Mr. Balfour's political sentiments; but we were arrested by the tone of the paper which he read before the Church Congress on the failure of Positivism to elevate or save mankind. "What has it to say to the obscure multitudes who are absorbed and well-nigh overwhelmed in the constant struggle with daily needs and narrow cares? Can it assure them that there is no being so insignificant as not to be of infinite worth in the eyes of Him who created the heavens? Does it offer consolation, hope, strength, forgiveness, and rest? If not; then, whatever be its merits, it is no rival to Christianity. It cannot penetrate and vivify the inmost life of ordinary humanity. There is in it no nourishment, no comfort, no help for ordinary human souls." These are wise and true words, and indicate the one fatal defect of the Religion of Humanity, which is offered as a modern substitute for Christ. It may do for the eclectic prosperous few, but it cannot touch the mass. And to fail there is to fail utterly. It is one "note" of the Divine origin of Christianity that it is free for all mankind, as the heather on the hills, and the bread on which prince and peasant alike depend.

☞ Our issue of next week will contain the Illustrated "Christian Almanac" for 1889; the price of the number will be twopence.

A recent book, which has attracted more attention as an attack on Christianity than the nature of its argument deserves, states the case of Christianity as if it rested entirely on the historical grounds, and the witness given by the early Church. For our part we should be quite prepared to argue the whole case on these grounds; but we would advise those who may be concerned in combating the doubts of others in these and kindred matters to turn their attention to the inner evidence of the Bible, and especially of the Gospels, which can be appreciated apart from minute historical research. The Bible, carefully read, is its own best and sufficient witness. It casts a spell over the intellect, compelling its assent to its authority and sublime origin. And the impression of the character of Christ grows upon us as we consider it; so simply described and yet so complete; so sustained and yet so symmetrical; so original in the annals of man, so inimitable, so worthy of God.

"A Reader of The Christian" is troubled by a tractate entitled "Sunday: the Mark of the Beast," and asks, "On what authority was the day changed from the seventh to the first?" The legal dispensation came to an end in Christ, and his death and resurrection formed the basis of the new age. The earliest Christians met on the first day of the week to show forth in the Lord's Supper the Lord's death until He come. At first both days were observed, but gradually the first or eighth day, the first day of a new week, was exclusively observed. Old Testament typical Scripture foreshadows this change in its frequent mention of the eighth day. The Day of Pentecost was the first day of an eighth week, the fiftieth day from the resurrection day, which was itself the first day of the week. The Jubilee Year was a Sabbatical year, but not a seventh, but an eighth, or first. It was a year outside the seven times seven, and was typical of the new and better age. That the transition by the Church of Christ, guided by the Holy Spirit, from the seventh day of the first creation, and of the old and worn-out covenant, to the first day of the new creation and the new covenant, could be "the mark of the beast" is one of those blasphemous absurdities of which the present day is but too prolific.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—On Thursday evening, Oct. 11, Mr. D. Spencer, secretary of this Mission, gives an address at 186, Aldersgate-street, on his recent visit to Canada and the United States, where he has been endeavouring to extend Christian work on the railways.

AT SAINT LOUP, at the foot of the Jura Mountains, private charity has erected a group of Homes where the sick are nursed by deaconesses. Sixty Christian women are in full activity nursing, and training other deaconesses. They also send twenty-four nurses to the large hospital in Lausanne. The expenses of the last year amounted to about £1600, met by voluntary gifts.—Evangéliste.

NORTH FRANCE.—M. Bertrand has been making an evangelistic tour in the North of France in connection with the Mission Intérieure. Everywhere he found an open door, the inhabitants of the North hold atheism in horror, and the religious miners are sick of Romanism; as soon as an evangelist or a comrade can make them understand the Gospel, they are easily won, and soon become workers themselves. More labourers are much needed to sow and reap.—Le Signal.

DR. CLIFFORD'S ADDRESS.

Dr. Clifford's address at the Baptist Union meetings at Huddersfield was, for brilliance and sparkle and epigrammatic force, all that his most ardent admirers could have wished. It received a running comment on the part of his audience of laughter, cheers, and enthusiastic applause And it dealt with a subject which, beyond doubt, is the pressing problem of our times: the manner in which the Church is to deal with the Social Questions that are pressing for answer on every hand.

With many things in it we cordially agree. "The only place of the Church of the Lord Jesus is first in all self-denying reforms, first in all unselfish service, first in everything that prevents the waste of manhood, diminishes vice, promotes national well-being, and saves the souls of men." "It is at the cross that we find the chief working force in human redemption, the creature energy of that love that saves at once the soul and the world." "The key to all our social problems lies in the Christian conception of man." "Justice, trusteeship, and love, determine to an unspeakable degree the relations of men to each other, and constitute the three supreme virtues and graces of the social order."

But, whilst we are in accord with much that is contained in this brilliant and powerful address, we turn from it with a sense of deficiency. Its weakness appears to us to lie in what it does not say. It certainly mentions the cross, but it deals with men as if the incarnation were the mightiest weapon in the Gospel armoury. It is the Gospel of the Incarnation of the Son of Man, which Dr. Clifford offers as a panacea for the evils of our time. He seems to say: "Get near to men, understand them, sympathise with their sorrows, share their burdens, and you will effect the cure for the disorders of our age. Repeat the mystery of the Incarnation, so far as you may. And by your deeds of loving ministry, bring Christ and souls together." Very different was the treatment of the Apostles of the sore evils of their time. Their one argument, their only weapon was the blood of the Cross. They seemed to feel that, according to Christ's own words, nothing short of an uplifted Saviour could open or draw the hearts of men. The incarnation is only a stepping-stone to the substitutionary death; Bethlehem is incomplete without Calvary; the cradle must lead to the Cross. If He had not died, the life and miracles and character of Jesus would have been powerless to lift or save our world.

A SHELTER, capable of accommodating three hundred homeless waifs, has been opened at 39, Mile End-road, Whitechapel. This is an important addition to the vast system of charitable relief in the East-end of London. Information may be obtained of Mr. S. Hayward, C.E., 212, Devonshire-road, Forest-hill, S.E.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at Chelston Mission Hall, Torquay, conducted by Mr. Henry Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, from Oct. 21 to Nov. 4.——For blessing upon the Word at a series of monthly services, to be held at Cumberland Hall, Hotwells, Bristol, by Mr. J. Jones, of Wolverhampton.——For a mission now being held at Plymouth, by Mr. J. C. Rainey, and for similar work at Callington, Cornwall, on Oct. 14 and 15.——For a mission in the Parish Church of the village of Bodicote, to be held in November.——For blessing on a week of prayer to be held at Kingswood, Warwickshire.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Mr. W. H. Williamson presided at a meeting in connection with the Billingsgate Christian Mission on Tuesday last, and gave some encouraging facts as to the new building. Altogether upwards of £1000 has been received and promised, and plans for the structure are in course of preparation. In all probability the foundation-stone will be laid in about a month's time. Premises suited to the needs of the Mission will certainly conduce much to the success of the efforts of Mr. A. Walter and his friends.

The assemblage of men from the market was unusually large, and after some cordial words by Mr. Williamson, a powerful Gospel address was delivered by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, based on Rom. v. 11. By telling illustration and simple argument, the teaching of the passage was enforced, and the men were lovingly appealed to as to their attitude to the Reconciliation.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Biddestone, Wilts.—The tent services conducted here by Mr. John Elliott have proved a means of blessing. Several profess to have passed from death to life; believers have been greatly refreshed and blessed, and backsliders restored.

Hawick, N.B.—Miss Lizzie Johnstone has concluded a very successful three weeks' mission here. The hall was filled at the farewell meeting with an attentive audience, and a number stood up and testified to having received blessing.

J. H. H.

East Clandon.—A correspondent writing with reference to the mission-room at East Clandon (which is mentioned under the heading "For Righteousness' Sake" in our last issue), states that as soon as Mr. Hewett left, the room was taken over by the Primitive Methodists, who are doing a good work among the villagers.

Hamilton, N.B.—Mr. J. W. Moodie has concluded a successful mission in the Baptist Church here. The last three evenings the evangelist's recent "Thirty-five Days' March in Palestine," &c., formed the subject of the addresses, which were rendered interesting by the speaker's vivacity, and were illustrated by an excellent new bird's-eye map.

A very interesting work is being done among the gipsies of Essex by Gipsy Buckley. He is an earnest but quiet worker. Some years ago he was brought to the Lord. Many other gipsies date their conversion to his earnest pleadings. He is now building a van, and purposes taking a tour through the gipsy encampments of Essex, telling them of the love of Jesus. His present halting-place is Meredith-street, Plaistow, Essex.

J. Waite.

Rev. R. Balgarnie commenced a week's mission in Charlotte-street Church, Carlisle, on Sunday, September 30. The meetings were well attended, and a large number, chiefly senior scholars, consecrated themselves to the service of Christ. A social gathering was held on Friday evening, when Mr. Balgarnie gave some words of counsel to all who had entered the inquiry-rooms during the mission. Thanksgiving services were held on Sunday last, and meetings for mutual help and prayer are being arranged.

Rev. W. Haslam's engagements for October are as follow:—Oct. 6, Witherby; Oct. 20, All Saints', Derby; Oct. 27, St. George's, Tufnell-park, Holloway, N.

CHINAMEN IN CALCUTTA.—In the notes from the Foreign Mission Field, in our issue of Sept. 14, work among Chinamen in Calcutta, is mentioned as being done by Dr. E. S. Wenger. Rev. J. Wenger, D.D., Baptist missionary, died in August 1880; his only surviving son, Edward S. Wenger, is carrying on this little Mission, assisted by the contributions of friends. Mr. Wenger is not working in connection with any society, but devotes his leisure, before and after office hours, to this work, which grows in interest every month.

SONNET.

O God, Thou sendest gifts; and we—we take,
With passionate and eager hands of hope,
And narrow to our selfish smaller scope
Thy gift; as if that solely for our sake [hear
The longing hands were filled; the yearnin
Taught to throb quicker with a deeper joy!
As if that love and its entire employ
Were only for our ends, and not a part
Of a diviner, deeper, larger grace.
O most mistaken! Ye who love, look higher
Than the light on your Beloved's face;
Look to God's light of love! And so aspire
To hold but to bestow. Oh, let no trace
Of Self's dead darkness dull thy sacred fire!

SALISBURY CONFERENCE.—On the closin day of the Salisbury Conference a praise meeting wa held, and was, says a correspondent, a glorious tim There were four or five hundred persons presen Some forty people gave testimony that the meeting had been blessed to their own souls. Many spo of definite blessing received during the Conferenc and five offered themselves to go anywhere, and a any time for the Lord, as He may open doors fo them. The thank-offerings during the Conferen amounted to upwards of £100, with a watch, loc brooch, and box of jewellery. One praised God f learning to seek "popularity up there." In th afternoon a children's meeting was held, when M Martin J. Hall spoke to about seven hundre young people. The evangelistic service in th evening was grand also; full two hundred remaine to the after-meeting, and several professed to hav found peace.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

The annual Conference occupied three days of last week, in the Victoria Rooms. Rev. James Ormiston, the convener, was again congratulated upon both the timeliness and solemnity of the subject he had selected for consideration. It was "the Word of God" looked at under three aspects: "Written, Incarnate, and Indwelling." In opening the first meeting on Tuesday morning, Mr. Ormiston, with great feeling, referred to the decease of various friends who, since the last Conference, had been removed from the Church militant to the Church triumphant.

THE WORD OF GOD—WRITTEN.

This, the first topic, was introduced by Rev. Talbot Greaves, vicar of Clifton, who expressed his preference for the old version of the text, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," to the reading of the new version, which turns the passage into, "Every inspired Scripture is profitable." As the best definition of the Word of God which he knew, he gave this: The Word of God first spoken and then written, and as such claiming our profoundest reverence, our strict obedience, and our most entire confidence. In support of this, he referred at length to the examples of our Lord and of his Apostles. We never find an Apostle quibbling about Scripture, or raising a question as to the comparative degree of inspiration to be found in one part of the Bible or another. They always treated the entire Scripture as given by inspiration of God. It is enough to make one shudder to see the manner in which the Bible is being torn to pieces in the presence of young men who ere long will be teachers and preachers in the Church of the Lord.

Mr. Joseph Stancombe, of Yeovil, directed attention to Rom. i., as most solemnly illustrating the condition of those who were either without a revelation, or who set aside that which had been given them. "They were given over to strong delusions," they believed a lie, and sank into the lower depths of infamy.

In the afternoon there were some excellent meetings. The Aged Pilgrim's Friend Society and the good work it is doing among poor aged members of "the household of faith" were well represented by Mr. J. Inskip, who presided, Mr. J. E. Hazleton, the secretary, and other sympathetic friends. Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Mildmay, told again the interesting story of modern work amongst God's ancient people; and Mr. D. C. Joseph spoke of efforts in Jerusalem itself, where, among the Pharisees and others are to be found men exactly of the same type as in the days of our Lord.

In the evening Mr. Elliott, of Plymouth, spoke upon the assaults now being made upon the Gospel by the "modern thought" school, upon marriage, the Lord's Day, the inspiration and authority of "the Word of God—Written," and, indeed, upon everything which had long been held sacred.

Mr. Thomas Newbery, whose work in connection with the Holy Scriptures was highly eulogised by Mr. Ormiston, spoke forcibly upon the words, "My doctrine is not mine." If any man will do his will, He shall know of the doctrine. The old hiss of the serpent with his "Yea, hath God said?"—Are you quite sure of it?—was now being heard all over the world. Mr. Inskip, after challenging all the scholars of the day to produce another Bible, said that many of the sceptics of the time might be compared to a man admiring a splendid rainbow with his back to the sun, and saying, "I like those tints and gorgeous colours a great deal better than the sun!" When the sun disappears where are the tints? This was a good word for those who said they liked the Bible well enough for its practical teaching, but who did not feel bound to accept its doctrines generally. He closed by quoting the words of Sir J. Dawson, at the British Association: "After digging in caverns, it is a relief to come with Adam once more into the garden of the Lord."

Mr. James Wright was unusually telling in answering the objection that believers in the Bible reason in a circle when they prove the authority of Scripture from Scripture itself. "Though I bear witness of Myself," said the Faithful and True Witness, "yet is my witness true." And may we not say the same of the Written Word when we call it into court to give evidence of itself? We know whence it came. In the law, God may be said to have given his autograph, for the Ten Commandments were written with his finger.

On Wednesday, a post-card which Mr. Ormiston received, in which the writer asked a question relative to a remark of Archdeacon Farrar in his "Life of Christ," gave rise to some vigorous speaking on the part of Mr. Ormiston and Mr. B. Thomas. Rev. W. D. Austin, of Castelcomer, gave an address on the Word of God, Christ, meeting all our needs. It is in Christ, he said, that all is to be found that the sinner needs. We never hear of the Apostles preaching this doctrine and the other to please men; their language always was, "We preach Christ and Him crucified."

In the afternoon there were two largely attended meetings, the first being on "The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland." Rev. W. D. Austin brought the condition of Ireland vividly before the meeting. Mr. E. J. Mather gave an interesting account of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. In the good work it was instrumental in doing, he thought the Society might be said to carry a Gospel of splints and bandages to the fishermen, as well as the word of life. While they were meeting at Clifton, another Congress had been in session, and some sharp strictures had been passed on this Mission, because it was not entirely in the hands of the clergy. Those who indulged in passing strictures of this kind were of the class who desired "altars" and "confessionals." At present there are nineteen fleets at sea, and he believed there was no better bond of brotherhood, no greater lever by which to gain these men than by taking to them the Gospel.

In the evening, at a large meeting, Rev. H. E. Brooke, among other things, spoke forcibly of the throne of grace as the true confessional. It is not enough in these days to denounce the false confessional of Rome or Ritualism; we must set up in its place the alone authorised confessional of Christ. Rev. W. Elliott spoke upon Bethlehem, "the house of bread," and showed how Jesus is the Bread of Life, without which we must perish of hunger. Mr. Penstow, of London, also spoke, and Colonel Molesworth upon the great fact of the Incarnation and its object—that "He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest."

On the following morning the Conference was closed by Rev. Isaac Hawker (Plymouth), and Rev. H. G. Thwaites (Newport, I.W.), Rev. J. G. Rainsford, of Dundalk, speaking upon the Word of God—Indwelling. In the evening there was a sermon by Rev. T. Dickenson (Manchester) on John x. 16, in the Memorial Church, Victoria-square, followed by the communion of the Lord's Supper.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE-BOAT CREW.—On Tuesday last week a hallowed season was spent in the fo'c's'le of Miss Child's Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, at the monthly muster of the "crew." Mr. Blaauw explained the objects of the "crew." One is to encourage the seafaring members to engage in active service for the Master both on land and sea. Captain Elvy referred to the branch of the "crew" in Rochester, where they hold meetings on board one of the vessels. To attract the people, they go round the town ringing a huge fog-bell. Mr. Hill, from the Seamen's Bethel, gave a graphic account of his mission on the south coast of Devon, and addressed the "crew" from Luke viii. 22.

LODGING-HOUSE CHILDREN.

Sir, — Stimulated by the recently revealed Whitechapel horrors, many voices are daily heard suggesting as many different schemes to remedy degraded social conditions, all of which doubtless contain some practical elements. I trust you will allow one other voice to be raised on behalf of the children. For the saddest feature of the common lodging-houses in Whitechapel and other parts of London is that so many of their inmates are children. Indeed, it is impossible to describe the state in which myriads of young people live who are brought up in those abodes of poverty, and of crime.

I and others are at work almost day and night rescuing boys and girls from the foul contamination of these human sewers; but, while the law permits children to herd in these places, there is little that can be done except to snatch a few here and there from ruin, and await patiently those slower changes which many have advocated. Meanwhile, a new generation is actually now growing up in them. We want to make it illegal for the keepers of licensed lodging-houses to which adults resort, to admit young children upon any pretext whatever. It is also desirable that the existing laws relating to the custody and companionship of children should be more rigidly enforced. At the same time, some provision is urgently required for the shelter of young children of the casual or tramp class—something between the casual wards of the workhouse and the lodging-house itself; places where only young people under sixteen would be admitted; where they would be free to enter, and as free to depart, and which could be made self-supporting, or nearly so. A few enterprising efforts to open lodging-houses of this class, for the young only, would do immense good.

Only four days before the recent murders, I visited No. 32, Flower-and-Dean-street, the house in which the unhappy woman Stride occasionally lodged. I had been examining many of the common lodging-houses in Bethnal-green that night, endeavouring to elicit from the inmates their opinions upon a certain aspect of the subject. In the kitchen of No. 32 there were many persons, some of them being girls and women of the same unhappy class as that to which poor Elizabeth Stride belonged. The company soon recognised me, and the conversation turned upon the previous murders. The female inmates of the kitchen seemed thoroughly frightened at the dangers to which they were presumably exposed. In an explanatory fashion I put before them the scheme which had suggested itself to my mind, by which children, at all events, could be saved from the contamination of the common lodging-houses and the streets, and so, to some extent, the supply cut off which feeds the vast ocean of misery in this great city.

The pathetic part of my story is that my remarks were manifestly followed with deep interest by all the women. Not a single scoffing voice was raised in ridicule or opposition. One poor creature, who had evidently been drinking, exclaimed somewhat bitterly to the following effect: "We're all up to no good, and no one cares what becomes of us. Perhaps some of us will be killed next!" And then she added, "If anybody had helped the likes of us long ago, we would never have come to this."

Impressed by the unusual manner of the people, I could not help noticing their appearance somewhat closely, and I saw how evidently some of them were moved. I have since visited the mortuary, in which were lying the remains of the poor woman Stride, and I at once recognised her as one of those who stood around me in the kitchen of the common lodging-house on the occasion of my visit last Wednesday week.

In all the wretched dens where such unhappy creatures live are to be found hundreds, if not thousands, of poor children, who breathe from their very birth an atmosphere fatal to all goodness. They are so heavily handicapped at the start in the race of life that the future is, to most of them, absolutely hopeless. They are continually surrounded by influences so vile that decency is outraged and virtue becomes impossible.

Surely the awful revelations consequent upon the recent tragedies should stir the whole community up to action, and to the resolve to deliver the children of to-day, who will be the men and women of to-morrow, from so evil an environment.

Your obedient servant,
Thos. J. Barnardo.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

MAJOR WHITTLE has been holding very successful meetings in various parts of Ireland. Five years ago he did work which is still testifying to God's grace and power, and he has now accepted another invitation to address meetings in some of the larger towns of the island.

At Cork, on Sunday week, two very encouraging meetings were held, the needful arrangements having been made by the Y.M.C.A., the members of which are just now showing themselves "strong in the Lord, and the power of his might." This revived state of faith, hope, and love has in great measure supervened upon the recent visit of Dr. Guinness. Ministers of all denominations supported Major Whittle in his endeavour to arouse the people to a sense of their duty and privileges in Christ, and some seventeen young men found peace in believing.

On the following Tuesday and Wednesday, meetings were held at Mallow and Dublin, while on Friday night a mission was commenced at Belfast. Major Whittle has been asked to visit Limerick and other cities and towns of Ireland, where his former labours are still held in blessed remembrance. He also expects to conduct missions in Edinburgh and other places in Scotland.

LADIES' WORK AT JERUSALEM.

THE principle on which the Ladies' Preparation House is founded is that of sending women to the foreign mission field in companies. This is the plan adopted with such remarkable success by American missions, Moravian missions, and the Kaiserwerth deaconesses. Ladies of education, trained in centres of spiritual work, accustomed to the life of faith, prayer, and co-operative service, have gone all over the world, and carry on schools and hospitals with blessing and permanent results that cannot be obtained by individuals, however eminent for piety and zeal.

Mrs. Meredith is now extending her work in this manner. A contingent of her associates is about to start for Jerusalem. They are all experienced, practical women. Some are trained for high-class teaching, and some are nurses and midwives. All are workers whose spiritual power has been tested in the missions of the Association, embracing a wide field and various classes of people.

Miss Lloyd, who is the organiser and hon. sec. of the movement, gave an account of it at the Salisbury Conference, and introduced Miss Ede, who is to be the head of the Jerusalem house. She desires to provide a preparation place where women can acquire the knowledge needful for Eastern service, and be ready to be sent from it to different stations in companies ready for action. Such a step is full of promise for the Bible lands, which specially need more of these works of love and mercy which only women can do.

Miss Lloyd will be glad of help in this undertaking; and more workers also are wanted to fill up the gaps which will be left in the lines at home. The Medical Mission House of the Association will have vacancies that should be quickly applied for. The party leaving on the 20th will make room for several to enter. On the 16th instant, at three o'clock, there will be a special service in Christ Church, Brixton, to set these ladies apart for their work. A public meeting will be held in the Clapham Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road, S.W., at 7 p.m.

MR. C. E. FAITHFULL writes from Marseilles that the temperance coffee-room, formerly a low public-house, is taken, and he has received sufficient for the first year's rental (£40). He is now endeavouring to secure funds to stock and start it.

REAPING AT PONTYMOILE.

IN following up the anniversary meetings recently held at this village (near Pontypool), Mr. T. M. Wintle, the superintendent of the Mission, has met with some very interesting cases of conversion.

One is that of a fortune-teller's son, whose uncle and grandfather were Wesleyan ministers, but his mother made an unhappy marriage, and then gave herself to fortune-telling for twenty-six years. But she is now a new creature in Christ Jesus, and it was a happy sight to see her embrace her son, when he accepted Christ as his Saviour.

Another case is that of a young woman brought up in Winchester, and confirmed in the Cathedral. She was full of "ceremonials," but was led to seek salvation in Christ alone, and has now returned to Winchester to work for God.

Nor are these all the indications of God's presence and blessing. Other cases equally precious in the Father's sight were recorded. Mr. Wintle asks prayer for the work which the Lord has given him to do, and which continues to be attended with good result year after year, and all the year round.

ON THE MANITOBA PRAIRIE.

THIS is the limit of our summer's roaming. Our object has been to comfort and strengthen our fellow workers here, whilst they are toiling to put into shape another outlet for these orphaned children, whom our loving Father has chosen us to care for and start in a life of honest industry. My heart thrilled with a new-found joy when I looked on the Home Farm. Only in April last the deeds of transfer were executed, and the first ploughing and seed sowing commenced. Now (Sept. 17) we are in the midst of harvesting, eighty acres of wheat, barley, oats, and garden stuff in abundance. Moreover, a house is built and is already adorned with a home-like touch throughout.

The live stock also have their quarters built; horses, cows, pigs, hens, &c., I found in capital condition.

Our two young men who had been on farms in Ontario, and have served here all summer, are ready to start for themselves after a winter's experience. In this lovely climate and pure air, may many a lone orphan recover renewed constitution, and our tired out workers rested nerves. Wheat and vegetables of all kinds grow easily in this rich soil. At very little cost pigs, chickens, cows, &c., are fed, so that there will be abundance of food provided.

Meanwhile, our steps are again being directed homewards. In the teeming city we hope again to gather into our Training Homes those whom our tender Father sees to be waiting for our love and sheltering care. We ask prayer that we may be shielded in our travels by sea and land, over three thousand miles, alone, and yet not alone. Ask for blessing to rest upon the ladies' meetings being held in the cities by the way. Also that we may be enabled to cheer up many a noble, quiet worker in these North-West Territories. Some of the bravest of lives are being used in sowing the first seeds of our glorious Gospel.

It has been a great refreshment to hear that the work and the workers at the Home of Industry, old and new, have been so graciously sustained. Two more of our band are off to North Africa, and two into college for preparation for the foreign field. ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Y.M.C.A., BURLINGTON HALL, W.—The opening services of the autumn session, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, have proved successful. The address on "The Stage to the Cross" was attended by a large number of young people, the greater part of the audience being young men. On Friday, at the after-meeting, several gave evidence of the blessing they had received.

OPENINGS IN CAPE COLONY.

IN his valuable paper on Missionary Economics, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of Aug. 3, Mr. George Pearse suggests a Missionary Union being formed, to help out into the Mission field those who have consecrated themselves to it. If some mode of united action could be brought about, as Mr. Pearse indicates, I see no reason why we should not have agents in different parts of Cape Colony to supply information with regard to trade as well as missionary openings.

Permit me again to urge that missionary mechanics should come to this Colony. Skilled workmen are in great demand, and can obtain high wages. In England there are numbers of young men wanting to be missionaries. Fifteen guineas would bring them, and no Society would be burdened. A mechanic in Scotland noticed a letter of mine in THE CHRISTIAN, and decided to come and preach the Gospel and support himself. He was a valued worker in his own town. Arrived in Cape Town, he found employment at once in a Government department, with good pay. His evenings are given to the Lord's work, and on Sundays his strong ringing voice may be heard in the open air, inviting sinners, black and white, to the Saviour.

From Sunderland two mechanics have arrived, the outcome of the Missionary Conference there in February. One of them, a Norwegian, has taken charge of our Sailors' Rest, and the first meeting ever held for Scandinavian sailors in South Africa took place a week ago. The other is working also, and both are being used by the Master. There is no employment here for penmen, or men without trades.

Mr. Spencer Walton is travelling through the Colony. At Stellenbosch a remarkable work has taken place. Numbers have been brought to Christ. Consecration meetings were held for the theological students at the Dutch University, when there was much to rejoice over. Like blessing has been given at the Paarl, another Dutch town. M. S. OSBORN.

SEAMEN AT DUNKIRK.

SIR,—I have recently spent ten days in Dunkirk, and was gratified in finding a good work carried on by Rev. A. Rust, in the Sailors' Institute. He visits the ships daily, but there is undoubtedly great need for the ministrations of a lady who has been accustomed to work amongst sailors. The Civil Hospital is a cheerless place, badly ventilated, and, as many of our seamen unhappily have to be sent there, a woman's ministry would be invaluable.

I heard many complaints of the crews of English ships working on the Lord's day, and thus to a great extent prevented from availing themselves of the religious services in the chapel and Institute. I understood this was by direct orders from home. It is indeed very sad that owners, for the paltry profit they may gain, make shipwreck of many souls and profane the Lord's name in foreign lands.

Another great danger to which seamen are exposed, is that Dunkirk is being made the resort of crimps, who are being rooted out of this country by the Board of Trade. I understand their proceedings could be very much curtailed if the Consul were allowed to transmit their wages free, and not, as at present at a charge, of 3d. in the £.

Yours faithfully, HENRY D. GRANT.
54, Redcliffe-square, S.W.

CHICAGO.—It is marvellous how the work of Mr. D. L. Moody has prospered in Chicago. He scattered the seed wisely, generously, cared for the young society tenderly, faithfully, and, when the work was transferred to other hands and other hearts, he still watched over it fondly and thought of it prayerfully as it developed and became strong and vigorous. Chicago will always claim Mr. Moody as one of the sons of her best, purest, noblest life. His work in Chicago is being constantly perpetuated, and in its many ramifications calls to its support and development many men and women of marked heroism and devotion.—Zion's Herald.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.

wo decades have passed since Dr. Thain Davidson, with a few Christian friends, commenced the holding of weekly evangelistic services in the Agricultural Hall, at Islington. The services have been held every Lord's day, fternoon and evening, since; tens of thousands have listened to the Gospel preached there, and hundreds have believed to the saving of the oul. Letters are received almost every week rom persons in all parts of the world, testifying o spiritual profit gained at the meetings in past years. The addresses at the afternoon gatherings are given by ministers of various denominations, the evening services being usually conducted by agents of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelistic Association.

The twentieth anniversary of this movement was celebrated on Sunday afternoon, which was also the occasion of the annual young people's meeting in the Agricultural Hall. Dr. Thain Davidson gave an address to the children on the words in James iii. 5: "The tongue is a little member." The hall was crowded from end to end, a very large proportion of the audience being composed of young people, who listened with rapt attention to the address, which was rendered the more bright and interesting by the introduction of simple illustrations, from which many practical lessons were drawn. Dr. Davidson concluded by saying that happiness is only to be found in Jesus, and earnestly exhorted all to put their trust in Him. As they entered the building, each child was presented, by the Religious Tract Society, with a pretty illuminated card, on each of which was depicted some scene in the life of the Son of God whilst on earth. At the usual Gospel meeting, in the evening, the preacher was Rev. J. T. Wigner, vice-president of the Baptist Union.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY has received, among other exhibitors at the Brussels Exhibition, the highest distinction—a diplôme d'honneur—for its Bible-stand, with the Scriptures in 270 languages.

THE STORY OF THE CARRUBBER'S-CLOSE MISSION, EDINBURGH, is told by Mr. J. Gordon in the October Sunday at Home. Since its commencement it has held over 10,000 consecutive meetings, to say nothing of out-door meetings at least equal in number. Its staff consists of 400 unpaid workers.

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—The report of the late Conference on the Centenary of Foreign Missions is being prepared by the secretary of the Conference, Rev. James Johnstone. It will consist of two large volumes, and will be supplied to subscribers at 5s. for the complete work. Applications should be made to Mr. Johnstone, at Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE WEST-END WESLEYAN MISSION.—In a leading article, "Wanted, £2000," The Methodist Times explains that such a sum is required to cover the deficiency in the income of the West-Central Mission on the completion of its first year of work. "There are grave and urgent reasons," it adds, "for paying this off at once." The Methodist Times concludes by asking if the friends of the Forward Movement have sufficient faith to send the money at once.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Eight meetings have lately been held in the locality of the East-end murders, with the best results. Some thirty women have been drawn from a life of sin. A very deep impression has been made on many poor outcasts. One of the murdered women attended the first series of meetings, and was conversed with by Mr. Christien, organising superintendent, who identified the body in St. George's Mortuary. Another woman, who saved her life by placing her arm, which is terribly wounded, before her neck, was also present at several meetings. Prayer is desired for a way of escape for women of middle age, there being no institutions open to receive such, they being too old for the Homes and Penitentiaries, and not old enough for the workhouse. The greater number of the fallen are of this character.

Personalia.

The late Mr. P. P. Bliss's orphan sons, Paul and George, are now thirteen and fifteen years of age, and are both church members.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have, by latest accounts, been evangelising at Cohoes, N.Y. There were crowded meetings, and much interest was awakened.

Mr. George C. Needham will hold a week's mission in Manchester, in connection with the Strangeways Conference Hall, on his arrival from America, which is expected to be on or about October 21.

Rev. T. J. Leslie, Congregational minister, who for about thirty years has laboured in Mexborough, with much appreciation and blessing, is leaving the district; at a meeting last week to bid him farewell, he was presented with a handsome testimonial.

Rev. E. H. Sugden, according to The Melbourne Telegraph, has much of the power of Joseph Cook of treating Christianity from the philosophical standpoint. With this power he combines much of the earnestness of a Spurgeon or Moody, and it is believed will yet rank as one of the leaders of religion and thought in Melbourne.

Rev. John Black, General Secretary of the English Presbyterian Church, has been laid aside from active duty through serious illness. Dr. Dykes has issued a circular to the ministers of the Church intimating this, and bespeaking for Mr. Black, in his enfeebled and suffering condition, the sympathy and prayers of the Church.

Bishop Smythies has determined, in consequence of the state of affairs in the East African Territory, to return to Zanzibar from Marseilles on October 12. The Bishop hopes to be able, on account of his personal friendship with many in those parts, to pass through to the mission stations now cut off from communication with the coast.

Mr. J. S. Harrison, who has been successfully labouring in Australia both as pastor and evangelist, was ordered by his doctor to take a voyage to Europe. He purposes to remain in England for about three years, and during that period hopes to devote himself again to evangelistic work. His wife accompanies him, and sings the Gospel.

Dr. Strachan, Episcopal Bishop of Rangoon, is working with vigour in his diocese. "Being an educated 'medical,' he sees the advantage of medical missions in a new country like Burmah, and is giving much attention to this agency; so that in the next decade we may confidently look for greater development of English missionary work in Burmah."

Mr. William F. Davis, recently liberated from durance vile in Boston, U.S., "is looking well, and says, if he could only have had enough good air, it would have been the most restful vaca- he had had for many years. He is a fine-looking man physically, with a large well-shaped head, with just enough of the Puritanical height to it to give him firmness and fortitude."

"Staff-Captain" Heathcote, in command of the South Hampshire and Isle of Wight Division of the Salvation Army, is a scion of the aristocratic family of the Heathcotes of Hursley Park, and Mrs. Heathcote is the daughter of a Presbyterian minister. A cousin of Mr. Heathcote, whose father is a Major in the Queen's army, is also connected with the Salvation Army, and was turned out of doors for joining in the work.

Mr. F. W. Cornish treats in Macmillan of freedom as a state of mind, not as a political or social condition. "We are, perhaps, growing to be too tolerant of evil. Nowadays bishops hobnob with atheists, and hope for their salvation without attempting to convert them; and all degrees of immorality are winked at if the sinner is a sufficiently eminent artist, actor, or author, or a foreigner. If everything is not an open question, politeness demands that we should behave as if it were so."

Mr. Alex. M. Mackay, of the C.M.S. African Mission, appeals for more men. "We must pursue a bold policy in East Africa, and send men in by the score to take possession of the land in our Master's name." At least twelve new men are required this season. "In asking for new men by a dozen or score at once, I ask no more than I see the Romanists regularly send at once. They have no quarter of a million of income, like the C.M.S., yet they seem to be able to send hosts of men yearly into the country."

Bishop Billing appeals for the means to found a Rescue Home for fallen women, in the East-end of London, of an advanced age, as the ordinary Homes are not available for these. He asks for £2000.

Archdeacon Farrar, writing to The Times of Tuesday, says his views on future retribution have been extraordinarily misrepresented, and opinions have been attributed to him which he has again and again emphatically repudiated.

The Duchess of Rutland, in a letter to The Times, highly commends the Leicester Coffee-houses. Her ladyship says they are public-houses without alcoholic stimulants. They are conducted on business principles, and are appreciated by all classes in the town.

Rev. F. B. Tinling, of East Finchley, in an address at the Congregational Union, stated, that while there were only 40,000 ministers in the country, there were no fewer than 200,000 public-houses. There was only one way of dealing with this evil, and that was by a national prohibition of the drink traffic. That was the only policy which was worthy of intelligent, earnest, and practical men.

The late Lord Shaftesbury.—The statue of the late Lord Shaftesbury in Westminster Abbey was unveiled on Monday week by Lady Burdett-Coutts. The statue, which in face and posture is a striking likeness of the late Earl, is in peer's robes and of full length, and, after the date of his birth and death, bears the inscription, "Endeared to his countrymen by a long life spent in the cause of the helpless and suffering. Love—Serve."

Mr. Hyde and Mr. Stevenson, who have been for some years studying in Mr. Moody's school at Mount Hermon, are now on a visit to this country. They desire, before their return to America, to conduct Gospel services for a time. Mr. Hyde is an effective speaker, and Mr. Stevenson sings the Gospel admirably with heart and voice. Mr. Moody commends them to English friends, and any who secure their services may reckon on getting true and faithful workmen in the evangelistic field. They may be addressed care of Y.M.C.A., Dublin.

Cardinal Lavigerie states that his crusade is progressing very favourably—more than one thousand volunteers having applied to be employed in any capacity for the suppression of the slave trade, while many hundreds of thousands of francs have been promised. How best to employ this vast amount of moral and material aid is probably not yet determined, but he has no intention of instituting a war against the Arabs. Probably, by placing an armed steamer on each of the great lakes, the transit of slaves now so largely carried on across these inland seas would be prevented, while actual hostilities would be confined to the disarming of Arab or negro slave raiders wherever practicable.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, in reviewing Mr. Pike's book on open-air preaching, says:—"For the sake of the people to be reached, open-air preaching should be kept up; and even in our wretched climate it should be carried on for the health of the preacher himself. Far better would it be to speak in the street outside than in the horribly stuffy sepulchres which are now built to be used as chapels, where not a window will open, and fresh air is diligently shut out. More souls would be saved in a week by brethren being heard by passers-by than they will reach in seven years if they keep on droning to the handful of old people and the great number of empty seats which are now to be found inside the Gothic shams of the present day."

The late F. W. Chesson is the subject of a brief sketch, with portrait, in the current Leisure Hour. "The list of subscribers to his memorial fund includes the names of Ministers and leaders of the Opposition, of Liberal, Conservative, and Home Rule members, of officers in the fighting and civil services, of colonial administrators, of Indians, Africans, Americans, Frenchmen, Germans, Greeks, Bulgarians, and Armenians; of Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Quakers, Nonconformists, and Agnostics; of authors, journalists, artists, and lawyers; of eminent women as well as men; of peers and commoners; of philanthropists, men of the world, men of commerce, men of study and seclusion. Rarely has a more comprehensive list been put together, and it is a wreath of honour to lay on the dead man's tomb. Even such a wreath is not much to give in return for a noble example of unselfish and life-long work."

The Book World.

⁂ Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.

The Clerical Library.

THE latest volume of this library seems to us to be one of the best. The list of preachers is large, and, while eminently representative, does not appear to embrace any whose pulpit utterances are of a doubtful order. The sermons are sufficiently full to be of service to the general reader as well as the student, and the subjects are all of special value. It is seldom that one meets with such a galaxy of preaching talent within the covers of a single volume. (6s. Hodder & Stougthon.)

Tempted London.

The valuable papers recently printed in The British Weekly on the temptations to which young men are exposed in this great city, are now published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton in book form (3s. 6d.). We could sincerely wish that a copy might be placed in the hands of, and read by, every country youth who arrives in the metropolis. They would then be fully armed with knowledge as to the snares that are set for the feet of the unwary, and surely there would be far fewer wrecks of early manhood than now.

Mr. Cust and Missions.

In his pamphlet, NOTES ON MISSIONARY SUBJECTS, Part I. (Elliot Stock), Mr. R. N. Cust plays the part of the candid critic. He has strong views on all questions relating to missions, and these views are based on ample personal knowledge, though tinged, of course, by his personal predilections. But, with the sharpness of the critic, there is the honesty and the sympathy of the true Christian, while there is the impartiality of the independent observer. No missionary or society can afford to pass lightly by the warnings and the counsel of such a man, and we doubt not his words will have due attention. The second part of the pamphlet deals with "Language illustrated by Bible translation."

Dr. Pierson on Evangelism.

Our recent American visitor is a many-sided man. He is perhaps par excellence a Bible student; he is an enthusiast on the subject of foreign missions; he is at home in dealing with the evidential side of Christian truth; and he is also an ardent evangelist. His book on this last topic, EVANGELISTIC WORK IN PRINCIPLE AND PRACTICE (3s. R. D. Dickinson) is an eminently readable and helpful one. In the first part of the work he enlarges experimentally and eloquently on principles and methods. Then he gives typical examples of successful evangelists, past and present, from Whitefield to Moody and McAll. Those who were interested in Dr. Pierson's recent addresses on missions should also acquaint themselves with his living utterances on a kindred topic.

Christianity and Freethought.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS AND THE DARK RIVER: an Essay on Christianity and Freethought. By William M. Ferrar. Elliot Stock. The writer is evidently a man of wide reading and deep thought. He writes in an earnest, sympathetic spirit, and colours everything he touches by the play of a rich imagination. It is seldom, indeed, that an argumentative essay is thrown into such a highly ornate and pictorial form; but the subject is one which well admitted of this kind of treatment, and is enriched thereby. There is no reason why an apologetic work should be a dry or abstract disquisition. Mr. Ferrar's essay certainly is not that. While disclaiming originality so far as view or truth is concerned, his semi-poetic method is doubtless his own. The beauty in it, if not the strength, is original. Mr. Ferrar's book was written in the Antipodes, and has more special bearing on the blatant forms of Freethought which abound there. The enemy in our colonies has come in like a flood, and for this raising up of the standard of the Lord against him we are thankful. The only part of this valuable book which strikes us as singular, indeed, almost grotesque, is the panegyric on Swedenborg, extending from page 188 to 197. We are the more surprised at it, because the author himself is not infected by Swedenborgian views, but is distinctly Calvinistic in his leanings. On the whole, however, both in point of tone and matter, the Essay is excellent, and well calculated to counteract the poison of Scepticism and Freethought.

Sermons to Young Men.

A fourth volume of Dr. Thain Davidson's monthly sermons to young men is issued under the title, SURE TO SUCCEED. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The discourses are eminently readable, practical, sympathetic, and high-toned. The Doctor is one of the true benefactors of his generation, and we sincerely wish that his sermons may have not only crowds of hearers, but hosts of readers.

The Family.

The latest issue of the "Present Day Tracts" is THE FAMILY: ITS SCRIPTURAL IDEAL AND ITS MODERN ASSAILANTS, by Professor W. G. Blaikie. We need scarcely say that the Professor handles the subject with much wisdom and judgment. He thus concludes: "When our Lord came into the world He sanctified the institution of the family by becoming Himself a woman's son, and a member of a human family. The most sublime and inscrutable of all relations, that of the first and second persons in the Godhead, to each other, is denoted by words which have their origin in family life. Such an institution surely deserves to be cherished with peculiar care. Its love is the deepest that earth supplies; its joys the purest; and its influence the best, the strongest, and the most abiding." (4d. R. T. S.)

Irish Pictures.

This latest addition to the admirable "Pen and Pencil" series of The Religious Tract Society is compiled by Rev. Richard Lovett, and is worthy to rank with those which preceded it. With commendable skill, he has steered wide of debatable topics, both political and ecclesiastical, and gives the reader a capital and comprehensive bird's-eye view of the country, its antiquities, its rich, natural scenery, and the peculiar characteristics of the inhabitants. We doubt not it will serve, as the author desires, to make outsiders better acquainted with the land and the people, and thus combine, with other causes, in smoothing away some of the unhappy asperities of the existing situation. It need not be said that the illustrations are both profuse and marked by the same artistic finish as those in the previous volumes of this justly popular series.

A Novelist on the Bible.

BIBLE CHARACTERS. By the late Charles Reade. Chatto & Windus. We are, on the whole, highly pleased with this work, and thoroughly go with the author in his main contention that "the characters in Scripture are a literary marvel." Mr. Reade's treatment of his theme is fresh and suggestive. It is not often that a novelist of reputation turns on the full disc of literary appreciation to the sketches of character preserved in the pages of the Inspired Word. It is well, however, that Bible lovers should have the advantage of being shown the perfection of literary beauty in Scriptural biography. Mr. Reade had only dipped into a great subject, when his pen dropped from his hand. There is one sentence to which we strongly object in this work. It occurs in page 79: "The truculent writers of Joshua, Judges, and Samuel, have surely now and then coloured the unchangeable God from their own minds and their own state of civilisation." We are sorry that such words should have dropped from a writer otherwise so able and so devout.

The "S.P.C.K."

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge have published some new books for the young, well-written, very attractively got up, and well suited for gift or reward books. ONLY A FISHER BOY (9d.) is the story of a lad's experiences in the North Sea fishing fleet. The writer takes occasion to mention, and highly to recommend, the work of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. MARGORY'S HUSBAND (1s.) is a narrative of life and work among the East-end poor. One of the leading characters is a deserter from a Scotch regiment, whose offence was discovered after the lapse of years, but happily he was included in the royal freedom extended by Her Majesty to such defaulters on the eve of her Jubilee. A BLACK JEWEL (1s. 6d.) tells the chequered experiences of an African boy, who was seized and sold as a slave, but released and taken into the service of an English "Pasha." The main incidents are laid in Cairo in the time of the outbreak under Arabi, so that some insight is given into modern Egyptian life. DODO (2s. 6d.) is a youthful hero who has a strong individuality, and gets into numerous scrapes. He finds friends, however, and learns that "handsome is that handsome does." The tale throws too much of a glamour over the military profession.

Advice to Boys.

NOTES FOR BOYS, ON MORALS, MIND, AND MANNERS. By an Old Boy. Elliot Stock. These notes deal with almost every conceivable feature of character and all the varied relations of life. They may be described on the whole as the quintessence of sanctified common sense. The boy who seeks to frame his life in the spirit of the advice here given will assuredly, with God's blessing, grow up a prosperous, happy, and useful man. A great many of the elder boys, we should think, will reflect rather ruefully on this sentence: "The lowest income on which a man, brought up even as plainly and simply as you have been, can afford to marry in London, is £300; even then the strictest economy will be necessary. In the country you may manage with from £30 to £40 a year less." This is about the only doubtful piece of counsel we have noticed in the whole book.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have commenced the serial issue of "The Pilgrim's Progress and the Holy War," with concurrent instalments of Dr. J. Brown's Life of John Bunyan. The issue will be completed in twenty-four sixpenny parts.

Another choice memorial of the late Frances Ridley Havergal has been furnished by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., in THREEFOLD PRAISE AND OTHER POEMS. The verses are beautifully set in framework of flowers and other artistic designs, and the whole is a most elegant souvenir of the gifted and sweet singer, whose voice is now silent in the earthly choir. (6s.)

ANOTHER WORLD; or, The Fourth Dimension. By A. T. Schofield, M.D. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. The author of this treatise has undertaken an exceedingly difficult and practically impossible task, namely, to elucidate by analogy, and by the aid of mathematical formulas, the spirit-land, or, as he calls it, the land of the Fourth Dimension. Whatever may be thought of the author's theory and line of treatment, there can be no doubt he has produced a work of much ability.

We welcome a new and very neat edition of Dr. Landels' book on THE TRUE GLORY OF WOMAN (Cassell & Co.) Though conservative in some respects, Dr. Landels is chivalrous to a degree in his estimate of the high position that women ought to occupy, and is fitted to hold, in the social economy. It is a crowning glory of the Christian faith that it has to a large extent elevated woman to her primeval place of equality with the other sex. Those of both sexes will do well to accept the author of this volume as a monitor on such an important theme.

THE RECORD OF A HUMAN SOUL. By H. G. Hutchinson. 3s. 6d. Longmans & Co. This is a somewhat fragmentary glimpse into the biography of "a human soul"—the soul of one who in some way, not very adequately explained, found himself a sceptic in early life. By and by the experience of maturer years brought him to see that whatever might be said of the intellect, the emotional part of the man can only find its satisfaction in communion with the Divine. The whole "record" is marked by vagueness, but it may prove helpful to some.

With a view of providing "a thoroughly attractive publication, both in text and illustrations, and at the same time of an elevating character," Messrs. Cassell & Co. have projected a new serial, entitled The World of Adventure. The first issue (7d.) will certainly be attractive to all who are fascinated by the adventurous and the romantic, but we have doubts as to the "elevating character" of the recitals. Dash and physical courage may be fostered, but we do not expect anything higher than that. A very striking picture, "On the brink of the Precipice," is given with this part.

Y.W.C.A., Park Mission Branch.—Will any of your readers send materials for our work-party, which meets two evenings in the week? Pieces of calico, print, wool for knitting stockings, stuffs, flannel—all can be utilised. Left-off clothing, too, that can be renovated will be very acceptable. The parcels should be directed to me at 16A, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.; and we should be grateful if the carriage were prepaid.

K. NORRIS, Park Visitor.

Boots and Clothing.—During the early months of this year it was my joy to distribute, through the Board School teachers of this poor locality, upwards of 600 pairs of serviceable boots, besides a large quantity of warm clothing, to the most needy and deserving of the boys and girls. Now that the cold and inclement season is beginning to tell afresh upon the poor and delicate children, I would ask your readers to furnish me with the means of considerably increasing this blessing.

MUSIC-HALLS.

SIR,—It is quite time that the attention of the ublic should be drawn to that class of entertainment known as music-halls, which at the present ay afford amusement to so many of our countrymen, especially the young. Music-halls are a isgrace to a civilised country. The result, as at resent conducted, of visiting these places is that housands of our young men are wasting their ives in sensuality. It is in many cases the first tep to a life of licentiousness. It is here the spendhrift, the gambler, the card-sharper, the atheist, he betting man, and "gay" women, can find an ntertainment suited to their tastes.

Songs form the chief element of these places, nd the majority of these are of a very lewd chaacter. The more disgusting the song the more nthusiastic the audience are in their applause.

From recent statistics we find there are between 50 and 600 places of amusement in London. Out of these about fifty are theatres, thirty concert-halls and palaces, and the enormous number of 50 are music-halls; yet, in the provinces, with upwards of 1300 places of amusement, about 200 are heatres, about 1000 concert-halls and palaces, and only 160 are music-halls; so that in comparison we see that 75 per cent. of the places of amusement in London are music-halls, whereas in the provinces only 12 per cent. are music-halls.

How long is this going to continue? Where are our Christian reformers? Can nothing be done to counteract this growing evil? The time has come when Christians should unite together and publicly protest against these places of iniquity.

INDECENT LITERATURE.

SIR,—We are anxious to call attention to a matter of very grave importance, affecting the social and moral well-being of the community at large. One Department of our work is exclusively devoted to the prosecution of those people who circulate indecent and obscene literature and photographs.

The question of the circulation of indecent literature is a matter of much graver importance than the majority of law-abiding citizens are apt to think. The vigorous mental growth of both young men and women is far more affected by it than the ordinary superficial observer believes. Just at a time when the mind and heart of the young man is at its most impressionable point, he is insidiously moulded by the unholy hands of a Zola, or a Boccaccio, and, as a sequence of keeping such company, something worse than the corruption of good manners ensues. After a course of reading under these masters of indecent inuendo, he is easily led through the dark passages of obscenity to those ghastly indecent books and photographs which are to be had for the asking.

The mental appetites of young men and women once whetted with these so-called translations of classical works and novels, the descent is accomplished by easy but sure stages. Such a process weakens those possessed of robust mental constitutions, but to those who are predisposed to drink at such impure fountains, it stunts the manhood, and deprives of womanly safeguards. The optimistic view of the matter has held the field so long, and with such disastrous results to the community at large, that it is a matter of congratulation that both the House of Lords, and the House of Commons, have lately called public attention to the growing taste for, and dissemination of, indecent literature and photographs, and it now rests with the general public to back up the work of the Legislature by assisting in every way to punish those who try to debauch the men and women of the future.

It is by calling public attention to the existing evil that we may hope to awaken and arouse a righteous indignation on the part of Christian people that will cause them to take united and concentrated action to contend against this hydra-headed monster. We have already had a number of prosecutions, and many more are contemplated. On these matters the law is decidedly a schoolmaster, both to the public and the delinquents.

Funds for this purpose are much needed, and any friends willing to help should send their contributions addressed to Mr. Francis Peck, Hon. Treas., or to yours truly, WM. ALEX. COOTE, Sec.

EDUCATIONAL TEXT-BOOKS.

DEAR SIR,—With much thankfulness I see you refer to the French text-books appointed for the University Local Examinations. I was on the point of asking you to admit into your columns an appeal to Christian parents on this very subject. We have felt so strongly about it that we decided this year not to put the books for "prepared translation" into the hands of our pupils, but of course we were aware that such a decision would leave them at a disadvantage in the examinations. Other Christian teachers feel as we do, but say that they must take the books.

In the editions of the Comedy (French and German) published for the candidates with the Cambridge Syndicate's sanction, I do not remember to have seen expressions so bad as those to which the correspondent refers in The Times, but I did not read either book through. I do, however, emphatically protest against both the French and German book, and especially the latter, as in no way deserving of a place in an educational course. The contents are on the whole what the writer to The Times describes as to the morale, and the style and language are not in the least fitted to serve young girls as models of French and German composition or speech. I have never been able to understand on what grounds the books generally for "prepared translation" were chosen by the Syndicate. All our foreign teachers, cultivated ladies holding superior diplomas, have been astonished at the selection, and their opinion has been confirmed by professors abroad who were applied to.

But if teachers are to do anything in the matter they must be upheld by parents, and parents, as a rule, take a great deal too much for granted, and do not inquire into the nature of books used by their children at school, nor into the various effects of examination requirements. In a general way they desire Christian education for their children, especially for their daughters; but too often, I fear, they are satisfied to place them at a "Christian school," and there relinquish their responsibility. It is vain to "hope that the objectionable books will be expunged from the list" until heads of schools require it, and they will hardly do so without the practical co-operation of the parents.

I hope the matter will not be allowed to drop, but that Christian parents will be awakened to look into the whole subject of "Christian education" and their responsibility with regard to it.—Yours faithfully, H. M. ARMSTRONG, Hon. Supt.

Kingsholme School, Weston-super-Mare.

MISSIONARY & EVANGELISTIC BUREAU.—The Secretary of this Bureau, to which reference was made in a recent issue, writes to say that he is anxious to find correspondents throughout the country who would disseminate literature on the subject. Correspondents are also desired who would supply the central office with local information concerning missionary work and workers. There is now a call from India for two colporteur evangelists. Particulars can be had from the Secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

PRAYER FOR THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.—Some evangelical members of the Established Church of England have been anxious to form a Prayer Union, having for its object definite and frequent prayer to God that He may save that Church from the evils of Ritualism and Romanising doctrine and practice. It has therefore been determined to give all who may wish to do so the opportunity of banding themselves together for this purpose by forming a Prayer Union, with a few simple rules, to which each member of the Union will be asked to give consent. All who wish to join this Prayer Union are invited to send their names to Rev. G. English, Combe Hay Rectory, near Bath, or to Rev. H. H. Streeten, High Littleton, near Bristol, hon. secs.

AN ALL-DAY PRAYER-MEETING was recently held in the Congregational Church, East Finchley. The arrangements made by the pastor, Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, proved eminently successful. The meeting was attended by believers representing many churches, and the proceedings proved exceedingly profitable. The prayers were short and definite, offered by women as well as men, and covered a wide range of Christian aspiration and desire. Every half-hour there was a change in the presidency, the several chairmen delivering brief introductory addresses. There was a general sense of God's presence and blessing. This East Finchley example is one worthy of extensive imitation.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

THE WORKER'S HIRE.

Is it right for a person with no private means to accept, as a Christian worker, about half the salary which the same work would command to a secular worker; and so not be able to provide for sickness or old age? Is it right for societies or heads of missions to offer such salaries? W. B.

COLLECTIONS.

Is it pleasing to the Lord that those who do not know Him as their Saviour should bring to Him an offering of money? It says, "Bring an offering and come before the Lord," but I take that to refer to his believing people. How can any, who are saying in their hearts, "We will not have this Man to reign over us," bring Him an offering, and how can the Lord's blessing follow it? E. J. T.

IMMERSION.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, "E. B. Moncrieff, Clk.," whom I take to be a clergyman, asks a question on the subject of baptism, in such a form that it is impossible to tell whether he has some difficulty in his own mind which he desires others to remove, or some idea on the subject by which he hopes to remove the difficulty of others. In either case, had he not better be more definite, and declare himself, that those who write on the subject may know what to reply to? Would he say what he means by "the old use, as well as the new, of baptizo"; and what are the "four principal meanings" of the word? W.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the letter on this subject in a recent issue, may I point out that in several passages in the New Testament details are given bearing upon the mode of baptism as practised in the time of our Lord and his Apostles. In Matt. iii. 6, we learn that the people who went out to John the Baptist from Jerusalem and all Judea "were baptized of him in Jordan." In Mark i. 5, that they "were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan." In Matt. iii. 13, it is recorded that "Jesus went from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him," and in ver. 16 that "Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." Also in Mark i. 9, 10, it is recorded that Jesus "was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, He saw the heavens opened."

In Acts viii. 36—39, we learn that as Philip and the eunuch went on their way, "they came to a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?…And he commanded the chariot to stand still, and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip."

In John iii. 23, it is recorded that "John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there." It thus appears evident that "much water" was required for baptism, which would not have been the case had any other mode been employed than that of immersion.

It should also be noted that, in the cases in which the fullest details are given in Scripture bearing upon the mode of baptism, we find that those who were baptized went down into, or came up out of, the water. However, as a well-known writer * observes: "If there were no other argument to prove that this (immersion) was the ancient Scriptural mode, the question would be settled by an appeal to Rom. vi. The whole point of the argument there is this: the waters of baptism are a grave; baptism is a burial; the baptized one is buried into the likeness of Christ's death. If a few drops of water were sprinkled on the face, it is impossible to trace any resemblance to that eventful moment when Joseph and Nicodemus bore the lifeless body of the Lord to burial…And what likeness is there to the resurrection of Christ, unless the whole body can be lifted from the grave-like waters into the upper air and light? It is for these reasons, no doubt, that the Prayer Book of the Church of England in its rubric prescribes immersion as its usual mode of baptism."

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, October 21.

THE UNJUST JUDGE—UNSCRUPULOUS BUT PRUDENT.—LUKE xviii. 1—8.

"THE key of this parable," says Matthew Henry, "hangs at the door." It illustrates and enforces the duty of perseverance in prayer (ver. 1). Another key may be found in the portal. We read in chapter xviii. of the return of the Lord; and, as this was to be long delayed, there was a reason for encouraging believers to persevere in prayer for his coming (comp. ver. 8). The widow had to battle with circumstances quite unfavourable to success, yet she succeeded. Those who pray to God have none of these circumstances to contend with, and there is therefore much more reason to believe that they will be successful.

The widow prevailed with the judge:—

(1) THOUGH HE WAS UNJUST (ver. 16).—See account of bad judges—1 Sam. viii. 1; Isa. i. 23; Hos. iv. 18. In this case there was no disposition to do right. Not so with God ("Just and right is He," Deut. xxxii. 4). Some may regard this as a reason why He will not answer prayer. (See "just, yet the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus," Rom. iii. 26).

(2) THOUGH HE WAS UNMERCIFUL ("would not," &c., ver. 4).—Though a widow in distress, he had no disposition to help her. Comp. "He delighteth in mercy" (Micah vii. 18), and "rich in mercy" (Eph. ii. 4).

(3) THOUGH SHE HAD NONE TO PLEAD FOR HER.—She came herself, a poor weak woman. No advocate. Comp. "He ever liveth" (Heb. vii. 25).

(4) THOUGH SHE WAS REGARDED AS A NUISANCE ("troubleth me," ver. 5). God loves to hear prayer. Comp. Acts ix. 11; Ps. lxv. 2; Prov. xv. 8.

(5) THOUGH SHE HAD BEEN DENIED.—("Would not for a while," ver. 4). When has God ever denied a true supplicant? Comp. "I said not... seek ye Me in vain" (Isa. xlv. 19, and Ps. lxv. 2).

(6) THOUGH SHE HAD NO PROMISE OF HELP.—We have promises great and precious (comp. 2 Peter i. 4, and ver. 7). Surely these considerations prove that there is good reason for perseverance in prayer. "Men ought to pray"; so prayer is a duty; "ought always to pray"; so prayer should be continuous. We are not required always to be using the words of prayer (comp. "when thou prayest," Matt. vi. 5), but we are to cultivate the spirit of prayer, so that we shall make it a constant habit of our lives. All our actions should be according to our prayers, and thus a part of them. We should turn all things to account in the exercise of prayer, and we should go on praying for the same blessings again and again (comp. Matt. vi. 11, and 2 Thess. iii. 12, also Phil. iv. 6, and 2 Cor. xii. 8). "Nevertheless" (ver. 8). Though God cares for his people, and though He answers prayer, there is but little faith exercised. "Son of Man cometh." This is surely a coming to the earth. "Shall He find?" He will look for faith. He looks for it now (Matt. viii. 10).

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE (58, St. George's-road, S.W.).—A special meeting for prayer to inaugurate the present session was held at the College on Wednesday, Oct. 3. Rev. Julius Griffith presided. Rev. J. G. Rainsford delivered an impressive address to the students on the importance of the rich and abundant indwelling of the Word of God.

CRIME IN LONDON.—In the course of an address on the work of the Christian Instruction Society, at the noonday prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday last Rev. Dr. Tyler, of Mile-end, referred to the recent murders in the East of London. He expressed the conviction that twenty or thirty years ago things were worse than they now are, the moral condition of the people having been favourably affected by the many social improvements of recent times. The common lodging-houses may be centres of evil, but at the same they are almost all, if not all, open for the preaching of the Gospel by anyone desirous of benefiting the inhabitants. Rev. Dr. Owen Evans attributed much of the prevalent sin to the faithlessness of Christians in general; and, having denounced drunkenness as the great murderer, called upon his hearers to do their utmost to rid the land of this terrible curse.

THE STONES OF MEMORIAL.

JOSH. iv. 10—24; GOLDEN TEXT, JOSH. iv. 22.

EXPLANATORY.—THE PEOPLE HASTED.—Not so much from fear, probably, though there was no time to be lost, as from eagerness to enter the sacred land. How they would rival one another as to who should enter first! It would be well for us had we half as much emulation in respect of Gospel blessings. THE CHILDREN OF REUBEN, &c.—The two tribes and a half sent a corps of forty thousand warriors; but their entire force amounted to more than one hundred thousand men. They seem to have left more than half their number to guard their families and dwellings in their newly gained possession on the east of Jordan. THE PLAINS OF JORDAN.—"These plains are almost seven miles broad. The mountains of Judæa here recede somewhat from the river, and leave a level and somewhat fertile space, which, at the time of Joshua's invasion, was principally occupied by a forest of palms. Hence the name, 'City of Palms' Deut. xxxiv. 3)."—Speaker's Com. GILGAL.—"The name Jiljulich, which is the same as Gilgal, still clings to a mound about three miles south-east from the spot where, apparently, the city of Jericho must have stood; near the beautiful fountain known as the Sultan's spring, and close to the steep background of the limestone hills of Judah. The host of the Hebrews, at the camp thus chosen for them, were about 500 feet above the bed of the Jordan... which lay about 4½ miles to the east. The name Gilgal was given in direct allusion to the rolling away of the last trace of the degradation and 'reproach' of their Egyptian slavery (Josh. v. 9)."—Geikie.

LESSONS.

(1) See what true independence is.—"On that day the Lord magnified Joshua in the sight of all Israel; and they feared him, as they feared Moses, all the days of his life (ver. 14). To lead and rule a people so turbulent and wayward, and composed of so many different tribes, was a gigantic task for anyone; but, unless the leader had had the deep confidence and respect of the people, it would have been impossible. What a temptation, then, to Joshua to humour and flatter the people in order to gain or retain his hold upon them. How was it possible to avoid sacrificing his noble independence of character, at least to some extent? It was possible through faith. God had taught Joshua to fear no one but Him only—to study his law and keep it; and He had promised to give him good speed (i. 6—8). He had specially promised him that He would care for his reputation and influence, that He would "magnify" him (iii. 7), and now He begins to fulfil his promise. How strong and independent this must have made Joshua! He need have no concern whatever about what men said or thought. God would magnify him, if only he obeyed. This is the only way to be truly independent. Keep right with God, and fear nobody. "Them that honour Me I will honour." "The wise shall inherit glory." Notice, too, how secure and lasting was this honour that came from God. When we do wrong to get or retain men's good opinion, we soon lose it again. But God's honours last: "they feared Him all the days of his life."

Fear Him, ye saints, and ye will then
  Have nothing else to fear;
Make you his service your delight:
  Your wants shall be his care.

See also 1 Chron. xxix. 25, and 2 Chron. i. 1.

We should be prompt to take what God offers.—The people hasted. Teachers should picture the wild haste of that vast host, wildly excited, probably racing one another in their eagerness to enter upon their glorious inheritance. Yet God's offered gifts to us—e.g., the pardon of sin, a new heart, a place in his family, his friendship, and the hope of heaven—are more valuable even than Canaan was to Israel. Oh, if only we were as eager as they were! This point may also be applied to the swiftly passing privileges of life—e.g., school and home teaching, various opportunities of doing good, or gaining knowledge or wisdom.

Perhaps some hasted because the way would be open for a short time only. It was God's tim salvation; they knew this and delayed not.

Gather the rosebuds while ye may,
  Old Time is still a-flying;
And these same flowers that bloom to-day,
  To-morrow may be dying.
    He that will not when he may,
    When he will, he shall have nay.

"He who has opened the way for sinners, and w keeps the way open for all who make haste to p over, will not return and open it again to accom date those who would not pass through when th might" (Luke xiii. 25).—Pentecost.

(3) We should take great pains to remember mercies and deliverances.—A double memorial this even was made. In the river-bed itself twe stones were piled up, to testify for ages to come h the ark, borne by the priests, kept back the wat of the river. (May we not see here a p figuring of Christ, by his death and mediati opening the kingdom of heaven to all believers Then, upon the further bank, twelve stones tak from the river-bed are set up on the site of Isra first resting-place in Canaan. (Here, again, o Lord's resurrection appears to be symbolise Why all this care? (a) Because gratitude is Go due. To withhold thanks is to rob God. If are grieved when our gifts are received witho gratitude, and soon forgotten, how great cause h God to be angry! (b) Grateful remembrance necessary to God's people. (1) Delay.—A certain captain, while crossing t Atlantic on a dark and windy night, heard gu firing as signals of distress; and bearing down the direction of the sounds he found a large steam with her flag at half-mast. "What's the matter he shouted through the trumpet. "We are sinkin was the answer returned. "Then, send all yo passengers on board my ship." "No," said t other, "lie by me till the morning." The capta urged that he should make sure, and send them once; but all in vain. "Lie by me till the mor ing," was the only answer he could get. Th captain then told him to set his lights, and this w done. For one hour and a half the would-rescuers watched those lights, and then, they lo them. The Central America, for that was th steamer's name, had gone down in the darkne By and by the morning dawned; but it was no too late.

(2) Gratefulness. — A gentleman in Bomba seeing an anchorite sitting under a tree, asked interest in his prayers. "I will remember yo with pleasure; only I scarcely know what to a for you. You seem to have good health, and ever thing you need for comfort and enjoyment: pe haps the best thing I can ask for you will be grateful heart."

(3) Ungrateful Forgetfulness.—The writer on visited an old man near Dundee, who had be bedridden for more than thirty years. He foun him extremely thin and worn, but happy beyon description. His talk overflowed with thankfu ness and praise. "Oh, why don't we praise Go more!" he said. "It seems to me that we a like graves which swallow up all that is given them, and return nothing; whereas, we should like gardens that give back what is put into the in fruit and flowers.

EXTINGUISHING PETROLEUM FIRE.—It h been discovered, by accident, that milk poured ov the flame puts out the fire immediately. As th method has been successfully tried several times, may be well to make it known.

CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.—A circula signed by the Duke of Westminster, the Earl Meath, and Sir Robert N. Fowler, M.P., has bee addressed from the Central Vigilance Society f the Repression of Immorality, to various perso who are interested in the forthcoming "elections municipal offices," with the view of enlisting the co-operation and authority in the prosecution immorality, and those who foster and encourage in any form. The present desire is to direct atte tion to the serious nature of the evil which prevail and to express a hope that, in seeking election positions of local power, candidates will bring th matter prominently to the notice of electors, and so doing receive their mandate that it shall n continue.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Several colonial and missionary bishops attended a Conference on missions at Leeds last week. Dr. Barry, Bishop of Sydney, was the principal speaker.

The Bishop of Lichfield, at the Diocesan Synod condemned bazaars and fancy fairs for religious purposes, as producing a very demoralising effect on the minds and consciences of the people. They were, he considered, calculated to make Christians forget their duty to give according to their means for religious purposes.

The Council of the Church Association have made arrangements for a series of special prayer-meetings on behalf of the Church of England in the present time of trouble. Prayer-meetings, commencing on Tuesday next, are to be held each Tuesday, from 3 to 4, until Dec. 11, in Burlington Hall, Savile-row, W.; and each Friday, from 1 to 2, until Dec. 14, in the Cannon-street Hotel, City.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt, of Camberwell, has declined the call from Ipswich.

At a meeting of the Darlington Presbytery last week, arrangements were made for the holding of special evangelistic services at Grimsby, Holderness-road (Hull), and Towlaw.

The foundation-stone of a new Presbyterian Church, was laid at Workington last week by Mr. H. Curwen, of Workington Hall, lord of the manor, an Episcopalian, who gave £50 towards the building fund.

The Presbyterian Mission at Newcastle has awakened great local interest and has already been a means of much blessing. Well-known Presbyterian ministers have been conducting daily services in the various churches and halls.

Sixteen ministers of the United Presbyterian Church, under a deep sense of their own need, and conscious of a desire on the part of many of their brother ministers to spend a short season in prayer and spiritual communion, last year invited each a few friends to meet in Perth. The conference was so much blessed that there was a general desire that a similar conference on a larger scale should be held this year. One hundred and seventy ministers assembled this year. The subjects of conference were entirely spiritual, and this new movement in the Church, with which the older and younger ministers alike are in general and thorough sympathy, is expected to exercise a great influence for good over the length and breadth of the Church.

BAPTIST.

Rev. George Grenfell, writing from Stanley Pool, says he will be no party to a retreat from the work on the Congo. He appeals for immediate reinforcements.

Rev. W. Brown has resigned the pastorate of the united churches of Uffculme and Prescott, Devon, having accepted an invitation to labour at the Forest Gate branch of the Evangelistic Mission, London, in connection with the church at Bignold Hall.

A remarkable movement is reported from Cuba. Rev. A. J. Diaz, "the Cuban Paul," was converted by a Christian nurse reading the Bible to him in a New York hospital. Ordained in Florida in 1885, he became pastor in the following month of the first Baptist Church in Cuba. Two years' work has resulted in the formation of six churches, and the establishment of twelve preaching stations, each with a Sunday-school. The communicants number 1100, the Sunday scholars 2000, and the congregations 5000. All the churches are crowded, people standing at the doors and windows.

At the annual meeting of the Pastors' College Missionary Association, on Friday week, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, it was stated that there are fourteen students in the college training for missionary work, and about forty former students are at present in the mission field. Rev. J. Reid Howatt, Presbyterian minister, urged that all denominations should work in unison abroad, as sectarianism would not do in foreign parts, whatever might be its advantages at home. Dr. J. L. Maxwell, late of Formosa, referring to the recent rout of the Thibetans, said that, whether it be by political complications or by the sword, the time is certainly coming when the sealed gates of the Thibetan stronghold will be opened.

METHODIST.

It is proposed that the Wesleyan Methodists, following the example of the Salvation Army, should have a week of self-denial, the money thus saved being devoted towards the extinction of the debt on foreign missions.

The new departure to reach the masses, in connection with the Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, is a success. Last Sunday there were the largest congregations since its transfer to the Manchester and Salford Mission.

Rev. T. Waugh has held a very successful twelve days' mission in Ebenezer Chapel, Sheffield. The holiness meetings were well attended, and were seasons of great power and blessing. The power of God was manifested at every service, and over 300 adults—a large number being men—professed to find Christ.

The ship in which Miss Waller and Miss Stephens, the two lady missionaries of the Methodist New Connexion, lately left England for China, was wrecked on the rocks near Marseilles. In the panic and excitement the captain died. Pilot boats come to the rescue, and the passengers were saved, Miss Waller and Miss Stephens returning to London. The latter has become so ill that the doctor has forbidden her going abroad for the present. Miss Waller is now on her voyage to China again.

The Methodist Times of last week contains a painfully interesting sketch, by a special commissioner, of the rescue work in connection with Rev. Peter Thompson's mission in the East-end. Mr. Thompson and his helpers prosecute this branch of Christian work with much energy, and the blessing of God rests upon their labour.

An important convention of the London churches of the Methodist New Connexion was held in Great Dover-street Chapel, on Thursday week. At the afternoon session, Rev. W. H. Lockley read a paper on "The Church in Relation to the Old and the New," in which he pleaded for a bold recognition of new forms of truth, and new methods of work along with reverence for the old. The evening meeting was devoted to the subject of "Holiness: its Nature, the Means to it, and its Practical Results" in daily life and the work of the Church. A number of ministers and laymen took part in the discussions, which were all characterised by spiritual power and earnestness.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frank and Phœbe Hall, ministers of Ohio, last year evangelised in the Southern States with a tent, and report 2000 conversions as the result. A band in Minnesota, composed of Friends and others, report a similar ingathering.

Isabella Young, of York, one of the Home Mission staff, has been holding meetings in Wilts and Somerset, and also in Hull; while John H. Williams, on furlough from India, is about to undertake deputational work on behalf of the Foreign Missionary Association.

At the Iowa yearly meeting a delegation from the Methodist Episcopal Conference paid the Friends a welcome visit, and recounted the history and work of their body. John Henry Douglass, in response, gave "the most powerful exposition and history of our faith and people, that Iowa yearly meeting ever heard." One hundred and eleven series of meetings and 1500 sessions have been held during the year.

Iowa yearly meeting has been a remarkable time. There are 100 ministers actively engaged in work. Last year there were four pastors set apart and sustained; this year there are sixteen, while twenty devote their time largely to evangelistic or pastoral service. Meetings thus served are all doing well. At a consecration meeting one young woman gave herself entirely to Christ, while twelve more souls "were blessedly saved and fitted for his work."

SALVATION ARMY.

Fifty officers are to be commissioned from the Central Division on November 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Halbridge have thrown open their home to the sick slum officers.

The Woolwich Slum Corps is doing good work; they have recently rescued thirty girls.

Blackpool has also had some wonderful meetings on the sands, and many visitors have been blessed.

The Indian Government has decided to allow all Salvation Army officers to travel at reduced fare.

There are now seventy commissioned offices in Norway. A headquarters new building is being erected in Christiania.

The Army's special meetings in various parts of South Africa are crowded, the people have to bring their own chairs or stools.

During the comparatively short time the Bedford Barracks have been opened, there has been much definite blessing, the professed converts numbering 310.

In the United Kingdom, during the twelve months ending September 31, over 2500 persons applied as candidates for the work; of these over 1000 were passed into training.

In Ceylon, four years ago, two English officers were brought before the resident magistrate for holding an open-air service. The Government, however, have learnt their value, and now give £50 a year towards the work. They allow services in the jails, and afford much valuable assistance.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At East Cliff Church, Bournemouth, Rev. Mathias Lansdown is carrying on a good work. The organisations of the place are in active operation, and the services well attended,

The ordination of Rev. Henry Lester as missionary to Bellary, South India, took place on Friday week at the church in the Grove, Sydenham. The charge, full of affection, and resting on the difficulty and glory of the work, was delivered by Rev. R. F. Horton.

On Sunday week Rev. John Knox conducted an impressive service at Clifton-road Church, Brighton, prior to his departure for India in connection with the London Missionary Society. After the service a very large prayer-meeting was held. Mr. Knox is one of seven young men, members of Rev. W. Crosbie's church, who have given themselves either to the ministry at home or to mission work abroad.

The report read at the annual meeting of Mansfield College, Oxford, stated that throughout the session the college had aimed at being at once a school for the ministry and a home of religious activity and influence within the University. The energy and activity of the students had not been confined to their class work. The men have shown themselves earnest in ordinary Christian work in the villages near Oxford and elsewhere. Dr. Fairbairn testified that on the whole he had never known a more zealous or a more active body of men, or one that gave more promise of self-denying work.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. R. C. Johnson, Methodist Conference evangelist, has held a successful series of Gospel meetings in Donegall-square Church, Belfast. Several persons professed to have been led to decision for Christ. A similar series of meetings was held last week in Sandymount Presbyterian Church, Dublin, by Rev. Samuel McComb.

Successful Gospel meetings have been held during the last five or six weeks by Messrs. Peet and Crozier, in the movable wooden hall of the Irish Evangelisation Society, at Seapatrick, near Banbridge. The hall, which holds about 600 persons, has been frequently crowded. Many have remained to be spoken to at the after-meetings, and several persons have professed to have received spiritual good.

Mrs. Jacob, foreign corresponding secretary of the Presbyterian General Assembly's Zenana Mission Executive, has proposed to go out as an agent of the association at her own expense, and the committee have passed a resolution welcoming her in this new relation. Two other candidates have been accepted, and the mission party is to sail with Rev. R. Gillespie and Mrs. Gillespie, who return to India next month.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Murch, London evangelist, is conducting Gospel meetings at Young-street Free Church, Glasgow, with blessed results.

Special services have been held to celebrate the centenary of Chalmers-street United Presbyterian Church, Dunfermline.

A Gospel mission is being carried on at New Cathcart, near Glasgow, in connection with the Free Church Mission; much good has been done.

By the death of Rev. William Fish, chaplain, Merryflats, Govan has lost a well-known and justly esteemed citizen and Christian worker. Mr. Fish was in his 67th year.

The evangelistic meetings at Rutherglen, conducted by Mr. W. Hall, evangelist, have proved a time of refreshment and blessing. Christians have been stirred up, and a goodly number have been brought to decision for Christ. Short open-air services were held in the street previous to the meetings inside. These were well attended, large crowds listening to a short, but pointed, Gospel message.

On Saturday week Rev. John McNeill delivered an address in Carrubber's Close Mission-hall, Edinburgh, in the course of which he appealed to the large audiences of worshipping and sermon-hearing people to demonstrate by their efforts for the rescue of the lost that the Gospel had reached their hearts, for without such a proof of the genuineness of their faith, however they might contend for orthodoxy, their religion was a sham, neither benefiting themselves, nor influencing others.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Lockwood, for many years a Congregational minister.—Rev. James Holding, Baptist pastor of Ashton-under-Lyne.—Rev. David Williamson, minister of the parish church, Tain, N.B.—Rev. Dr. John Kay, minister of Argyle-place, United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh.—Rev. William Anwyl Roberts, for twenty years rector of Llanddyffnan-cum-Llanfairmathafarneithaf, Anglesea.—Rev. H. J. Allen, a former active and well-known minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. —Rev. H. Moore Mosse, for thirty-three years rector of Heage, Derbyshire.—At Aughnahoo, Castlederg, Robert Harper, an earnest Methodist class leader and local preacher, in his 81st year.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

FRENCH MISSIONS.—Four students from the new mission house have finished their studies. Two are about to go to the Congo, one to Senegal, and one to Lessonto or the Zambesi.

SMYRNA.—The Bible depôt attracts many Israelites. The Saturday after the opening of the hall it was filled with Jews, to whom the colporteur read many passages from the Bible concerning Christ.

COREA.—The work of missions, which was so promising in Corea, has received a sad check in the notification of the Corean Government that all Christian teaching in schools there must stop, on penalty of withdrawal of Government patronage.

THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH AID SOCIETY is gaining ground daily in the German provinces, and already at different places associations have been formed to support that work, and to help to overcome the great spiritual wants of our larger cities.

NATIVE CHRISTIAN MEDICALS.—There are now five young native Christians engaged in the upper ranks of the Punjab Medical Department. One is a professor in the Lahore College, one a civil surgeon, and three are sub-assistant surgeons.—Punjab Mission News.

HINDOOISM.—An American missionary states that the Hindoos, who have up till lately laughed to scorn all efforts made by Christians to attack their ancient immovable religion, are now very uneasy, and are waking up to consciousness that, as they say, "these foreigners have gained thousands of Hindoos to Christianity." They are setting about an organised resistance to the new religion. Societies are formed, and agents employed to spread abroad their sacred writings, and preach a revived devotion to the old traditions. What a powerful refutation of those who say Christian missions in pagan lands are a fiasco!—Chrétien Belge.

MISSIONARY FAREWELLS.

There were also a number of others returning to their fields of service, including Bishop Crowther, who goes back to his native land after fifty-eight years of missionary service, Bishop Sargent to India after fifty-two, and Bishop Stuart after forty years in the work.

On the same evening a meeting was held in St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church, to take leave of, and to commend to the grace and blessing of the Almighty, the following English Presbyterian missionaries leaving for China:—Rev. P. J. Maclagan, for Swatow; Dr. Gavin Russell, and Miss Barnett, for Formosa; Dr. James Howie, for Chang-pû; and Rev. Murdo Mackenzie, and Mrs. MacIver, for the Hak-ka country. The occasion was one of great interest, and the service was solemn and impressive.

On the previous afternoon, at a gathering in the Mildmay Conference Hall, the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society bade "God-speed" to nineteen ladies who will shortly be aiding in the noble work of the Society among the women of India and China.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers th their first infants, who are really the most peful class of the fallen, and are generally eatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception such young women, before they become others, as are unfitted, from their previous od character and position, to mix with ners.

The Committee are obliged to make an gent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and gent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent eed of £250.

The recent atrocities at the East End have brought painfully to light the fearfully degraded condition into which vice leads; and if by any means young women can be prevented from sinking so low in the social scale, such an end is worthy of the prayerful Christian consideration and labours especially of their own sex.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN

At the first meeting of the Committee of the Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge in 1888, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, after prayer:—

> "That reviewing God's gracious Providence in sustaining the work of this Institution on behalf of friendless and fallen girls during the 30 years completed, it is hereby unanimously resolved to renew the authorization for the admission of all suitable applicants seeking the protection of the Homes, day or night, during the year 1888; believing THAT HE WHO HAS UPHELD in the past will also sustain in the future, and that such a course will be approved by all those kind friends of poor outcast women and girls who from time to time contribute of their substance to maintain the Homes."

Since the establishment of this Institution in 1857 to the close of 1887, there were admitted:—

The instructions as above have been carried out to the utmost capacity of the Homes, and many wanderers have been restored to their friends in the Provinces.

Sad as the recent atrocities at the East End of London are, the terror has induced some of the unfortunates to seek a way of escape, and they have been welcomed into Homes. God grant that it may lead to "true repentance!"

Donations from the readers of "The Christian" are now earnestly solicited.

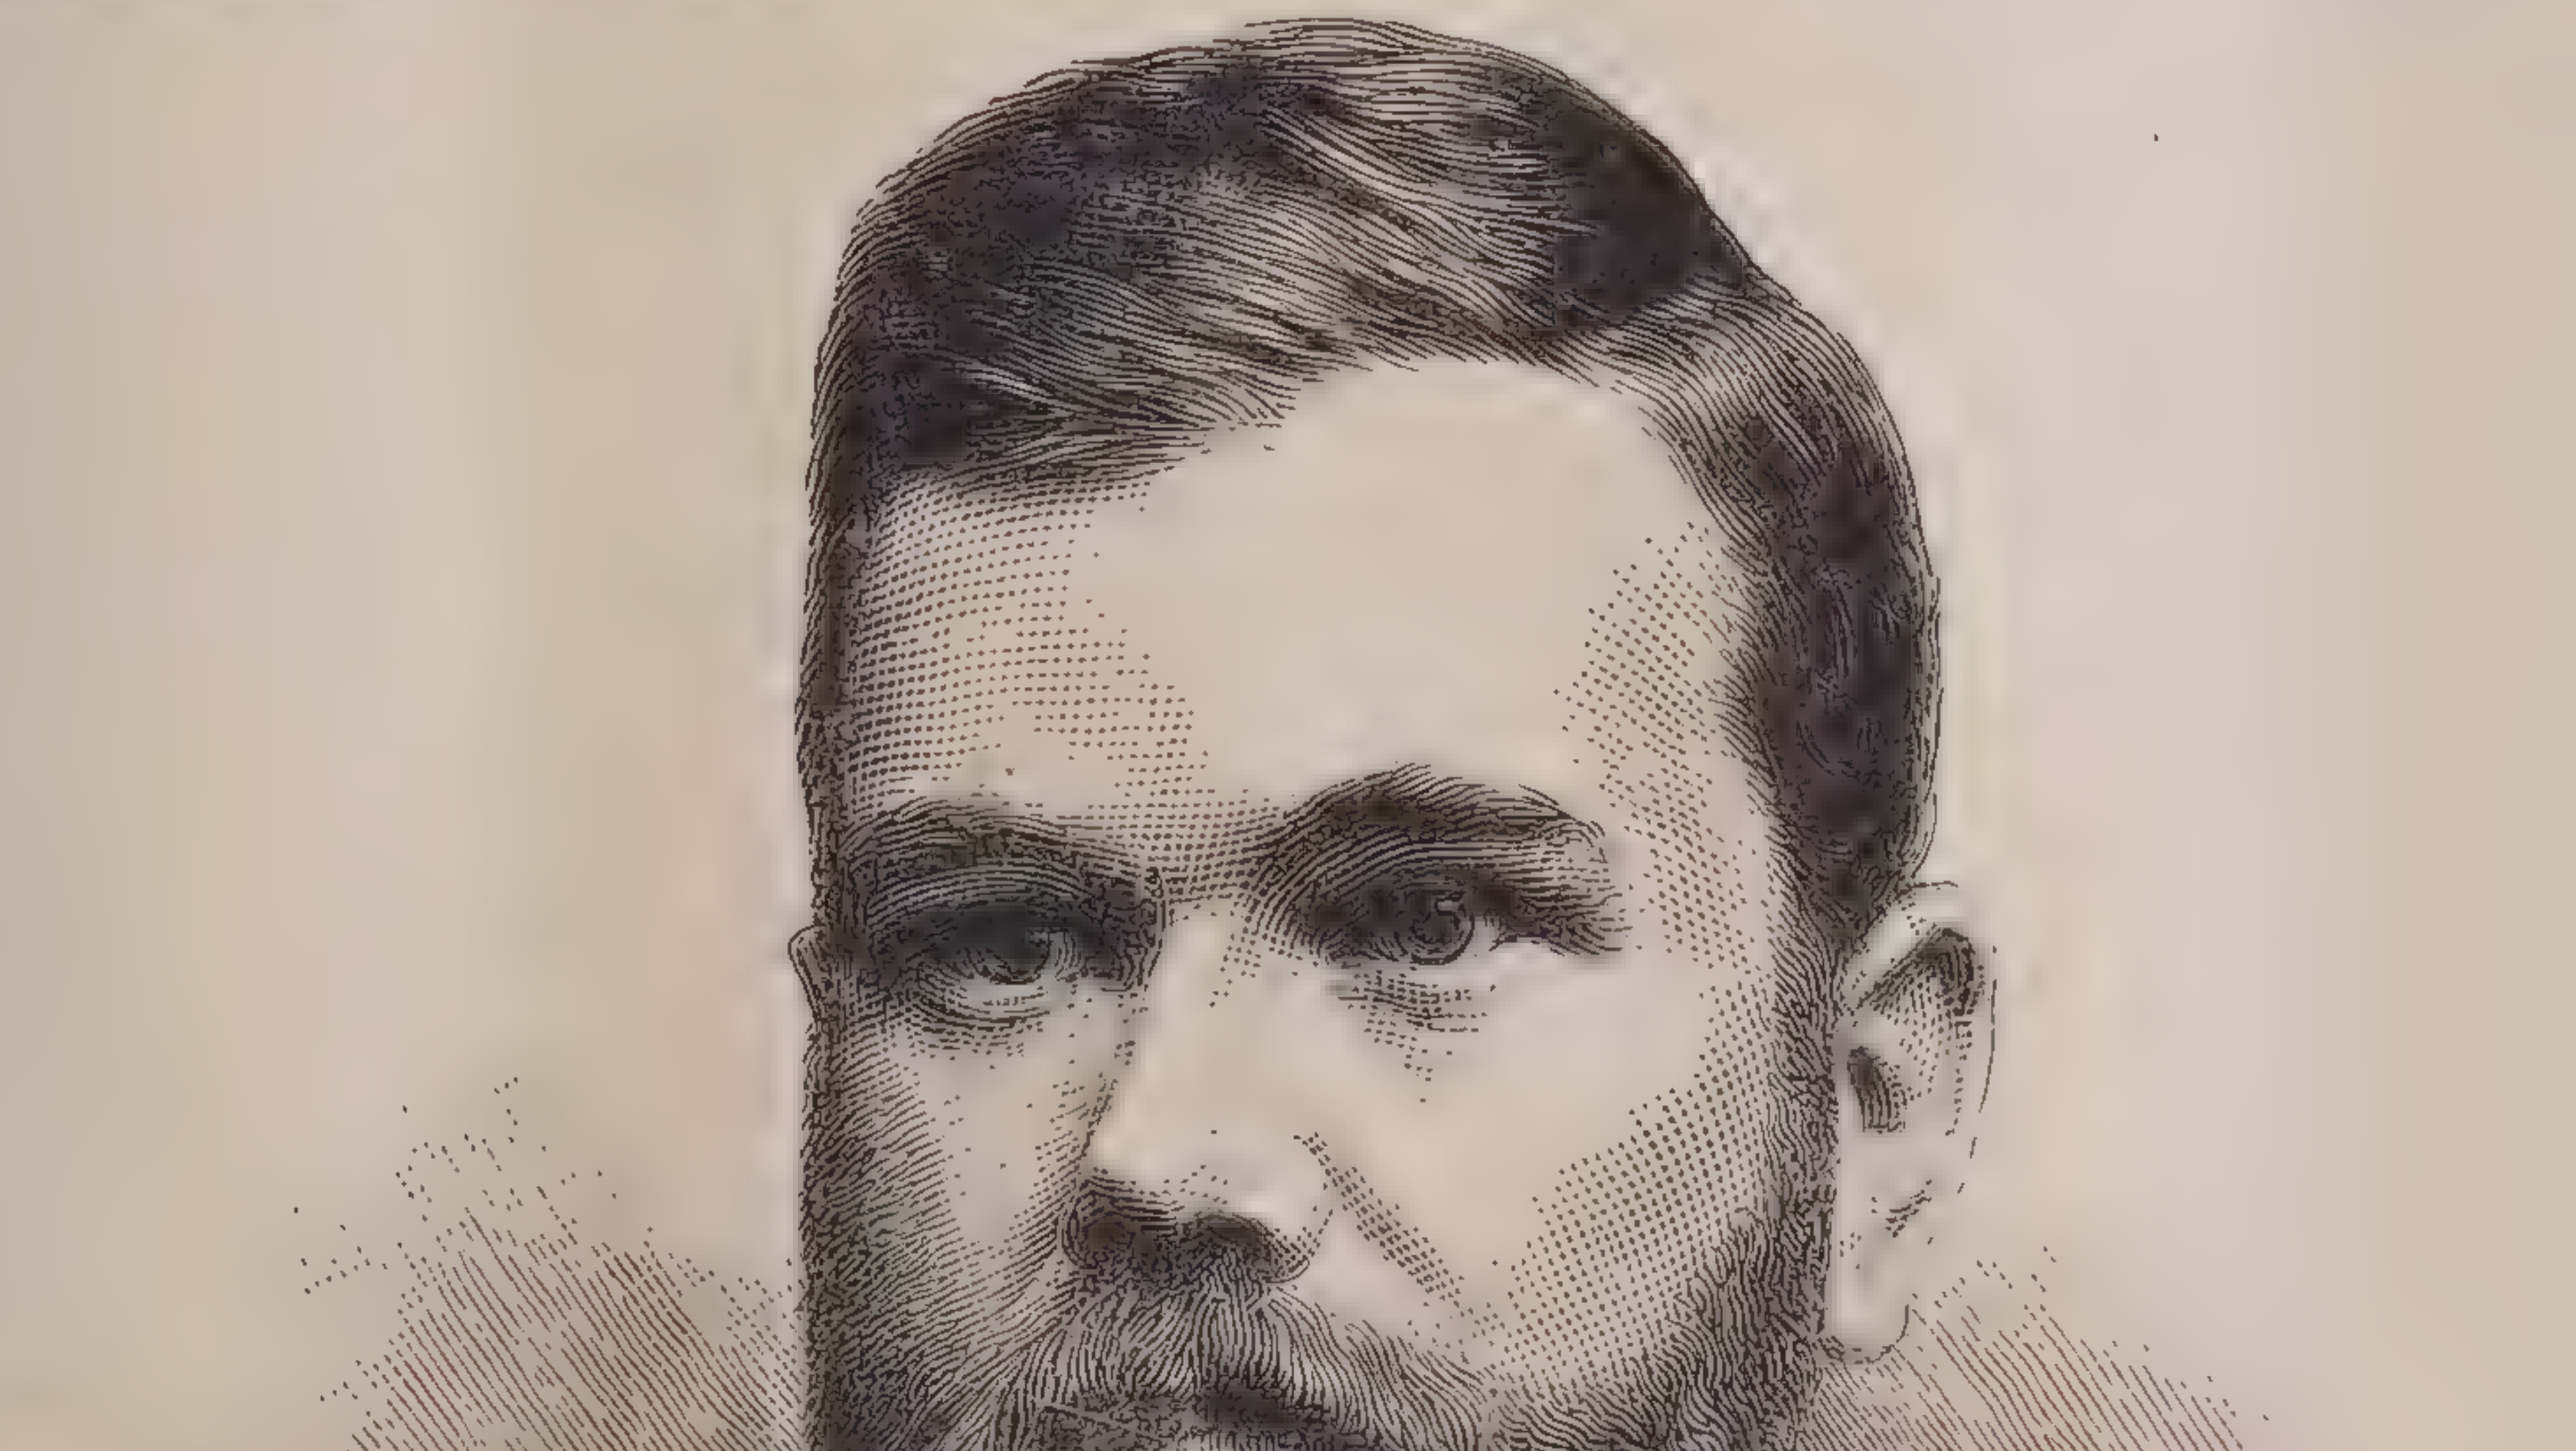
REV. JOHN M^cNEILL,

McCrie-Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh.

IT is the summer of the year 1872, and we are speeding by rail along the eastern hore of the Firth of Clyde. We have just eft behind us the busy port of Greenock, nd our eyes are feasting on a magnificent panorama of mountain and sea, wood and glen, when the train draws up at a little station, and a strong and cheery voice cries, "Inverkip! Tickets ready." Presently the carriage door is opened, and a burly youth of eighteen, n official corduroy and buttons, and with a frank and smiling countenance, relieves us of our passport to Wemyss Bay. As the wheels move again we get another glance at that happy boy; then we ook down the hillside at a few cottages embosomed among trees, and there is mirrored in our mind the humble and uneventful career of a village railway porter.

Fifteen years pass away It is a Sabbath evening in the city of Edinburgh, in the tropical summer of 1887. We are in the midst of an immense throng in a circus, one of the city's largest public buildings. The crowded passages and expectant looks plainly tell that the gathering is unusual. Very quietly there steps on the platform a powerfully built man in the prime of life, with a face speaking of health and good nature. The clerical collar that surmounts the tightly buttoned surtout proclaims his calling, and the open Bible his purpose. As he surveys the vast audience he strokes his beard, his brow furrows, and overspreading his countenance is a look not free from pain. Does he hear the hum of bees and see the blue smoke curl among village woods? Does his heart tremble as he thinks of the plough to which he has put his hand? For the railway porter of Inverkip and the Edinburgh preacher are one and the same.

It was at Houston, a village of Renfrewshire, on July 7, 1854, that JOHN MCNEILL first saw the light. His father, who is now spending the evening of his life in Glasgow, is a native of county Antrim, but comes of a Scottish stock. Crossing the Channel forty years ago, he settled in Houston, where he married, and in whose quarries he gained his livelihood. A hearty and manly man this father, uniting in him the strong religious conviction of the Covenanter with a humour that smacks of both Scotia and Erin. It is not difficult to discover where the preacher got his faculty of uttering "snell" sayings. The mother, whose maiden name was McTaggart, died a few years ago, leaving to her large family the precious memory of a noble Christian life. The home was teetotal; hence the "Scottish Spurgeon's" war with the bottle. There appears to be a poetic strain in the blood, as evinced by the touching verses occasionally published by Miss Kate McNeill, who, if lacking her brother's humour, has all his pathos. Another member of the family is about to study for the ministry.



J. HORSBURGH. PHOTO.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Horsburgh, Edinburgh.)

When Mr. McNeill was twelve years old the family removed to Inverkip, the father becoming foreman in a quarry there. At the village schools the boy received an education consisting of the ordinary English branches, together with the rudiments of Latin and French. The Free Church minister at Houston remembers being struck by John's habit of sitting alone on the doorstep for long spells of meditation—so unusual in a boy. On leaving school the lad entered the employment of the Caledonian Railway Company as gate-boy at Inverkip Station. By-and-by he became porter, and he had a narrow escape one day when engaged in coupling waggons. He can never forget having been a "railway man"; the finger the buffers nipped is ever before him. After three years in this humble occupation he was promoted to the booking-office at Greenock. Spending every Sabbath under the parental roof, he worshipped with the family in the Free Church of Inverkip; and, under the ministry of Rev. Peter Douglas, he became conscious of a great change in his attitude towards God. His conversion, however, had not been preceded by a course of open sin. He lately remarked that he was a "converted decent man—a kind hard to convert." He was about nineteen when this occurred; and, with the courage that is so marked a feature of his character, he at once stood up and testified to being on the Lord's side. Ever giving satisfaction to his employers, he was sent in the year 1875 to take charge of the company's town office at the east end of Princes-street. In a few weeks he saw reason to give up his post, but at once got a clerkship in the North British Railway Offices across the street.

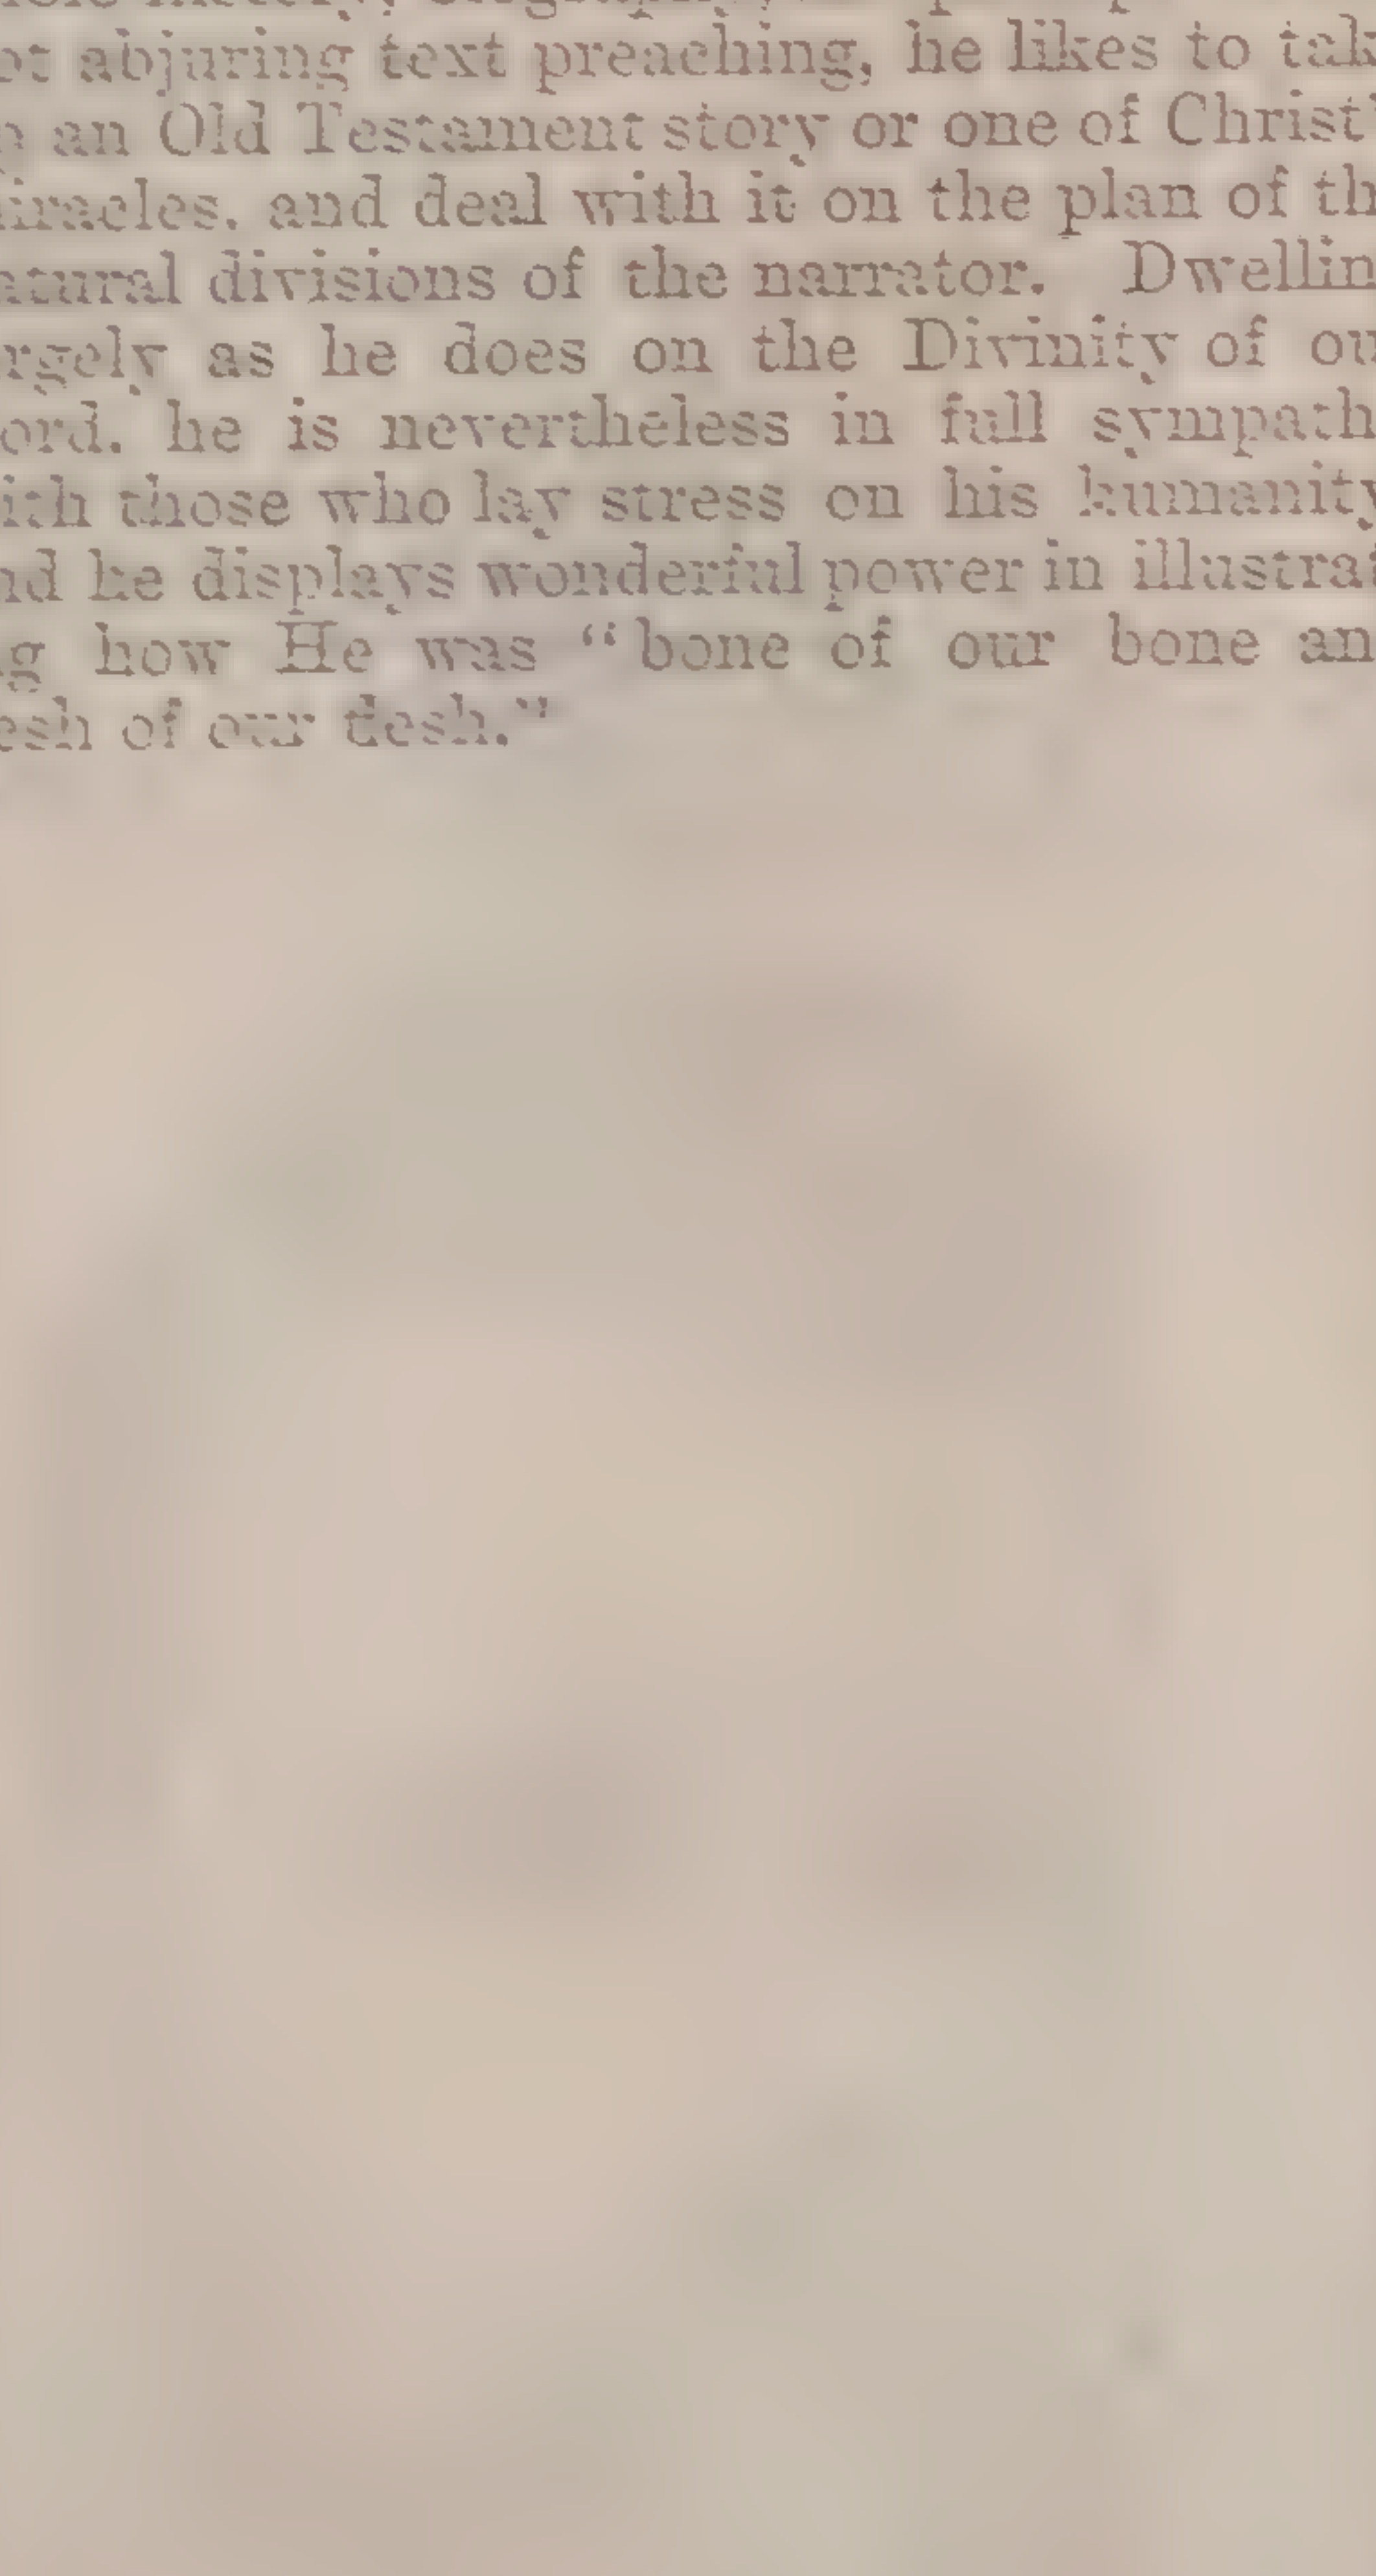
Since his conversion he had been in the habit of addressing religious meetings, and now he threw himself heartily into the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. His capacity for public speaking soon became apparent, and many friends in the city urged him to study for the ministry. Following their advice, he relinquished railway clerking, and in the autumn of 1877 entered the University. It was a bold step, but if he had any doubts of its propriety they were dispelled by a conversation with his mother. When he told her what he had done, her lips quivered, and her countenance betrayed unusual emotion. Then came words he can never forget. "I have never told you, but I meant you for that before I saw your face." There are many Hannahs; but how few can let their sons await the Lord's call! With marked emphasis Mr. McNeill is wont to say that his mother and he were always "great friends."

Three years were spent at the Arts classes; and during all that time he supported himself by mission work in connection with Free St. Bernard's Church—work which, of course, precluded all endeavour after academic distinction. Ever courageous, he entered into matrimony during the last year of his curriculum in Edinburgh. His next step was to remove to Glasgow, where he attended the University for one year and the Free Church College for four years, all the time supporting himself and his family by mission work. On receiving Presbyterial licence to preach the Gospel, he was at once invited to become the minister of the Barony Free Church, Glasgow, a church with a thousand members. Thinking the charge too great for a young minister, he declined it, notwithstanding a tempting stipend. Soon afterwards he was called by the McCrie-Roxburgh congregation in Edinburgh. It was a small body made up of two [illegible] Free Church congregations in a poor district of the city. Accepting the call, he was inducted in the summer of [illegible].

His success has been phenomenal. Scotsmen dearly love a sermon, and when it was announced that a second Spurgeon had appeared in an Edinburgh pulpit there was a rush to hear him. Grave people, hearing of the odd sayings that made his audiences smile and of his extraordinary unconventionality in the pulpit, shook their heads, and wrote him anonymous letters. Others went to hear him for themselves, and came under the spell of an earnest preacher who believed he had a Divine message to men, and was not particular about the way of delivering it, provided he got it into their heads and hearts.

The church, which is seated for six hundred, soon became [illegible] for the crowds that resorted to it; so the evening service has, during the past [illegible] months, been held in a large hall or circus, the audiences numbering from three to five thousand. The Wednesday evening congregations fill the church. Opinions differ as to the constitution of the circus audiences, but we think the non-church-going element is very considerable. All classes in the city are represented, but the majority are well-dressed people of its middle class, who attend the service pretty regularly. All that seems wanting to form a great congregation is a permanent building capable of holding about four thousand people. Some influential gentlemen, including two medical professors in the University, are at last about to issue an appeal to the Scottish public for subscriptions with which to erect a tabernacle. Many think the Free Church has been rather dilatory in the matter, and it is whispered that the United Presbyterians would soon roof him in if he would only join them.

Of what theological school is Mr. McNeill? Well, if the distinction may be allowed, he does not preach a system of theology, but the Gospel. Nevertheless, he holds a definite system; and if you were to ask him what it was he would probably hand you the Shorter Catechism. But his sermons are not "Shorter Catechism and water"; he deals with the whole length and breadth of Bible history, biography, and precept. While not abjuring text preaching, he likes to take up an Old Testament story or one of Christ's miracles, and deal with it on the plan of the natural divisions of the narrator. Dwelling largely as he does on the Divinity of our Lord, he is nevertheless in full sympathy with those who lay stress on his humanity, and he displays wonderful power in illustrating how He was "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh."



A man of splendid physique, he used to indulge in all manly sports, such as swimming (he once swam three miles at a stretch), throwing the hammer, and tossing the caber. Even yet he could give you a valuable hint as to putting the stone, and might name the Australian cricketers as easily as the twelve Apostles. To alcohol and tobacco he has always been a stranger. He possesses that mysterious magnetism which gives a man power over his fellows, and he unites in his character the shrewdness and humour of the Scot with the emotionalism and generous impulse of the Irishman.

Edinburgh is to be congratulated on possessing such a preacher. Manly men like him are greatly needed by the Church in these days. Determined as he is to draw a clear line between the Church and the world, and fierce as are his denunciations of sin and hypocrisy, there is yet no one more tender in dealing with the erring and doubting. Nor does his influence end at the pew. His brethren in the ministry are flocking to hear him, and are learning how to get at the hearts and lives of the people.

London has coveted Mr. McNeill, Highgate Presbyterian congregation having given him a call which he declined, though not without hesitation. Soon afterwards the Free Church offered him the post of their evangelist for Scotland at a large salary. This, too, he declined, partly for domestic reasons, and partly because of his opinion that Scotland can be evangelised to a great extent in Edinburgh, whither the flower of Scottish youth resort for education and professional training.

Mr. McNeill has a happy home, and three little rogues exercise him in the joys and sorrows of fatherhood.

THE McALL MISSION.

MEDICAL WORK.

A MEETING was recently held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Drysdale, Princes'-park, Liverpool, on behalf of the McAll Medical Mission, Paris. Dr. Anderson, who is at the head of the Mission, delivered a descriptive address, which was highly appreciated.

When Mr. McAll first began his work, these of his helpers who had a knowledge of medicine did their best to heal the bodies of those for whose souls they laboured. This excited the jealousy of the French doctors, and an old law was brought to light, by which it was enacted that only persons holding French diplomas should practise medicine. The dispensaries were therefore closed, and remained so until two and a half years ago, when, as he held a French medical diploma, Dr. Anderson felt impelled to set about mission work in Paris. The dispensaries were then re-opened, and have ever since remained so, and been owned of God and blessed to many souls.

Dr. Anderson told with joy of the blessed meetings which are held in connection with the Mission, and described the delight which many have evinced at hearing the Gospel in the Mission buildings. He also related some touching cases of light dawning upon darkened souls. Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, followed with some words in cordial commendation of the Mission, the operations of which he had had the opportunity of studying during a visit to the French capital this summer.

A NEW BRANCH OF EFFORT.

Sir,—Your readers may like to hear of a new branch of the McAll Mission, which has been developed by the energy of one of the workers, a Scotch lady. It is a Home for poor little girls, fatherless, or motherless, or worse, sad cases often coming under notice in a mission like this.

There were three little ones already there when I visited the cosy nest encircled by its trees and garden. "Victorine's" mother is dead, sickly father in the hospital. "Clara's" mother, an abandoned woman, had been in the habit of locking her up in a cupboard, and leaving her without food for forty-eight hours at a time. "Hortense," a tiny thing, was rescued from her father in a public-house. The man never entered his home, except to steal any bit of furniture which he could turn into money and drink. Lastly, he stole the child, to amuse himself with, he said. Two more little ones are to be received when discharged from the hospital, and two others are offered and will be accepted, though faith alone sees the means of support.

Three hundred francs, or £12 a year, will board a child. Help in money or clothes will be gladly received by Miss Christie, The Home, 54, Rue Violet, à Greville, Paris; or by any of the friends mentioned in the preface to "The Lost Children," published by Mr. A. Stevenson, Edinburgh.

A McALL WORKER.

HOMES FOR CHRISTIAN BLIND.—The North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women, situate in Hanley-road, N., have for some years proved a great blessing to many. Recent additions have so enlarged the accommodation that the committee propose to consider applications from blind women under fifty years of age, which has hitherto been the limit. There is a small debt remaining on the Jubilee Hall just completed.

CHRIST FOR ENGLAND.

By Rev. W. CROSBIE, Brighton.*

What England wants is Christ: not our theories about Him; and not our Church systems; not our emphasised and narrow denominationalisms; not our priestisms and mechanical rites and ceremonies; not our cold intellectualisms and learned and brilliant philosophisings; not our hard dogmas and traditional and technical theologies; but Christ Himself—the Divine, human, personal Christ—once crucified for the sins of the world, but now risen and glorified.

Christ for England! Yes: that must be the watchword. It was the watchword of the Reformation, though not always clearly apprehended and distinctly uttered by the Reformers. It was the watchword of Whitfield and Wesley and their coadjutors in the evangelical revival of the eighteenth century. It has been the watchword of other spiritual movements since that have advanced the cause of Scriptural religion and of true progress in the nation. And it will be the watchword—the one Shibboleth—of yet grander movements, that will sweep like waves of blessing over England and over all the countries and continents of the earth. From the conflicts and controversies of the times through which we are passing, from the attacks of enemies, from the searching fires of criticism, to which all things sacred and Divine are being subjected, the Christ will emerge more wonderful, more potent, more attractive, more beautiful—"the desire of all nations." Everything is preparing for Him, and for new and mightier manifestations of Him. Everything is subserving the fulfilment of his eternal purposes of mercy and love for mankind. Whatever we lose we cannot lose Him, and all seeming loss will be but augmentation and enhancement of Him. Whatever perishes and vanishes away, amid the shakings of the heavens and the earth, He will abide; his immutability revealed more and more, and Himself, by the complete removal of all obscurations and accretions, brought into larger and clearer view, and presented as the one object of the sinner's trust, as the one centre of Christian union, as the one foundation of the city of God, as the residuary and all-perfect and all-sufficing creed. And in that day of his exaltation the Spirit of God will glorify Him, working mightily with the Church, honouring her testimony, extending her triumphs, multiplying her converts as the morning dew, or as the sand by the seashore. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."

Are the Congregational Churches of England true to Christ? In that question lies the test of orthodoxy, and the criterion of efficiency. Various answers have been given to the question. Charges have been made against these churches. The smoke of the battle is not yet cleared away; the echoes of the strife are still heard. What is the real truth of the matter? Is there more defection in these churches than in others? I do not think there is. The defection is general; and if it is not of one sort it is of another, extending to, and including, even those who have been posing as critics and censors. Their very criticisms and censures are proofs of defection—evidences that, in spirit, at least, and in gracious and noble charity, they have not yet "learned Christ." And may there not be defects in their own theology? need for some recasting and readjustment? It cannot represent the last stage in the progress of religious thought and knowledge. In formulated human creeds there is neither infallibility nor finality. The fact is that all round the level is low—much lower than it should be; the spiritual tone depressed; the intuition and sense of spiritual things dim; the passion for souls a smouldering flame; the doctrinal conceptions inadequate and partial and transitional—requiring to be touched and widened and reset by some God-sent constructive theologian; the practical Christian life and righteousness a too languid energy; the distance between the actual and the ideal—between what is and what ought to be—markedly and reprehensibly great.

Room for throwing stones one at another there is not. "The accuser of the brethren" is not the most exalted personage, nor he who "thanks God that he is not as other men are." It is a poor thing to compare ourselves with others; and the judgment of the self-righteous is invariably unrighteous judgment. When comparison is made it should be honestly and severely with the eternal standard, and with the magnificent possibilities of the Christian life. And, applying these tests, bringing ourselves alongside these measures, the place for all of us is in the dust of humiliation and penitence; "for there is no difference; for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

The beginning, then, of Christ for England, and consequently of England for Christ, is Christ, in a new and fuller sense, for the individual—for the individual Christians. The initial stage of the requisite reformation and improvement is personal. We must be better Christians, humbler, purer, gentler, nobler, more loving, more merciful, more self-sacrificing; in a word, more like Him whose name we bear, and whose witnesses we are—breathing his spirit—reproducing his life—entering into, and passing through, in our thought, and feeling, and sympathy, and appropriating faith, and spiritual experience, what Christ passed through when achieving the world's redemption—retransacting in our measure, and in the processes of our moral development and interior growth, the facts of his death, resurrection, ascension, and holy anointing—there being in us and in our spiritual unfolding and history the counterparts of these; until it is permitted us, in lowliness of heart, yet with all truth, to say, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

From Christ for the individual the passage is to Christ for the family, for the Church, for the community, and for the nation—for every form of associated and organised life. The basis is a regenerated individualism. And upon that basis what superstructures rise! From that root what beautiful things grow! The family realises its Divine idea; the Church is "the body of Christ, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all"; the community and the nation are the kingdom of God. "The Sermon on the Mount" gets translated into all human intercourse and doings, in trade, in commerce, in politics—in everything. The golden rule, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so unto them," governs the relations between man and man, and between class and class. Duties and obligations are infinitely more thought of than rights. The will of God is done in earth as it is in heaven.

But is not that a fancy picture? Utopian? visionary? a beautiful dream simply? The sad thing is that after an experiment extending over nearly nineteen centuries, it is no more a reality. But it will be a reality one day. It is the sure promise of the future, and is all contained in Christ—the legitimate outcome and fruit of his teaching, and principles, and influence. It is the standard He has set up, and the goal toward which the evolutions of history are moving. Christianity will not turn out a discredited system. Jesus will not "fail nor be discouraged till He hath set judgment in the earth." The fault is not his that the progress is so slow, and that the end has not been reached. Let Him be unhindered; let Him have but his way—working out all the possibilities—let there be only enough of Christ in men's dispositions, and characters, and lives—and there will be attainment and exhibition of the supreme law of moral being, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself"; and earth will be transformed into the very image of heaven.

Someone speaking the other day of South London said, "Christ was not in possession!" And what is true, alas! of London, is true of England. And Christ will not be "in possession" until He is more completely "in possession" in his own. Were He only lived out fully in the life and character and doings of those who profess Him, the face of the world would speedily be changed. Great and beneficent revolutions would be accomplished. Difficult social, and economic, and political problems would be solved. Many strained relations would be harmonised and sweetened—relations of capital and labour, of employer and employed, of rich and poor, of ruler and subject. The merciless selfishnesses and wrongs of business competitions would be counteracted and expelled. The Christianity of Christ contains all reforms and salvations. What is wanted is that it become more and more applied Christianity—applied, without abatement or compromise, to everything—covering the whole sphere of man's being and activities—inspiring, changing, purifying, ennobling, perfecting the life of humanity through all its range.

Christ, therefore, is the Gospel for the age, and for all the ages to come. The world has not outgrown Christ. He leads, and is far ahead of, all the civilisations still. And the first grand necessity of the times is a Christlike Church—a Church that shall be a sort of revised—a new and living Imitatio Christi. Such a Church would itself be a concrete Gospel, divinely eloquent, and charged with virtue for the healing of the nations; and what converting, soul-winning, triumphant power in the glad tidings of salvation proclaimed by its lips!

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—Dear Sir,—I desire to thank those of your readers who send their copies of The Christian to soldiers; many of them have written us grateful letters. I have about thirty other soldiers who would be thankful to receive a copy. Mr. James Dykes has recently conducted a very blessed mission in this Institute. As a result, not a few have been led to the Saviour, and are showing by their lives that God has wrought a change in them. One pleasant thing in the converts is that they are all possessing themselves of a "Bagster Bible," and a good copy of "Songs and Solos." We very much need our new hall, for which we yet require £100. Surgeon-Major Alston, M.D., is the hon. treasurer. —Yours respectfully, Henry Hull.

THE LAND OF LUTHER.—1.

Now that the eyes of Europe are turned upon the great nation which has lost two Emperors within a few months, it may be interesting to take a glance at one of the many existent efforts to spread the Gospel in that country.

To any English person who had resided in Berlin during the events which have so recently convulsed it with sorrow, the German character would probably acquire a deeper interest. To a mind accustomed to the rather materialistic Radicalism of East London, the earnest, enthusiastic devotion of the German nation to its Emperor, which overflowed last spring in the passion of tears that Europe wondered at—the persistent, pathetic tenderness with which it watched and wept at Kaiser Frederick's bedside, would appear ideal and romantic in its intensity.

To the Christian mind it would also be hopeful and significant. A people that could abandon itself to a grief so unselfish and profound at a loss so little personal—that for so long could forget absolutely all, to mourn beside the bier of its dead monarch—would seem peculiarly fitted for that ideal and self-forgetful allegiance which Christ requires of his disciples. Perhaps, no less a sorrow could have revealed this capacity for devotion, almost limitless in degree and certainly spiritual in kind, which undoubtedly underlies the German character, often on the surface pleasure-loving and self-seeking. Oh, if this capacity could be used for Christ; if the great heart of the nation could be touched on His behalf; if these springs of deep, tender, uncalculating devotion could be reached—waked for Him; who could estimate the blessedness of the result?

But alas! Germany's heart is not on fire with love to Christ! Far, far from it. It is deadened by form without faith; blinded by philosophic presumption; corrupted by materialistic poison.

Emerson once said that Germany was the brain of Europe. That is probably in measure true. It is also, perhaps, partly true that Germany is the heart of Europe, not only as regards geographical position, but in other ways. Not alone what Germany thinks, but how she loves and what she worships is of immense importance to Europe, and the importance is increasing, not diminishing, every year.

English Christians, if your sister land loved Christ, thought for Christ, worshipped Christ, poured out its whole devotion at His feet, what do you think would be the result? What was the result long ago, when one deep-hearted, clear headed German—his whole being given to God—stood up in his name, and delivered his message? What does England—what do you—owe to Him? Do you wish to cancel that obligation? Can you cancel it if you would? Has any country in Europe a deeper, holier claim upon your love and sympathy than Luther's land?

"An old story," you say, "that about Luther. Germany has long ago balanced the blessing she conferred on us then by the flood of scepticism and rationalism with which she has inundated us for years."

A great writer tells us that "to any noble mind the nature of an obligation is infinite." That is at least true of a spiritual obligation, the conferring of a spiritual gift, whose results will remain for ever. And it seems peculiarly true of the debt we owe to Germany—a spiritual debt, which no Christian, surely, can ever wish to cancel.

Besides, just in her need, her doubt, her darkness, her unbelief, lies her claim to any help we can give; our chance, gratefully, humbly, rememberingly to serve her "as far as in us lies." How could it be aught else than this to any loving Christian soul? Least of all, how could it be an excuse to talk of "cancelled obligation"? Oh, for the grateful, earnest spirit that will never cease to say—never wish to cease to say—"I am a debtor;" a debtor in this case to our absent Lord; to claim this rich soil, this magnificent material, in such sadly large measure running waste, for Him; a debtor to the land that brought us light, to do all we can, all we possibly can, to lessen her darkness now. Edyth E. Fooks.

Points for Preachers.

A PASSION FOR SOULS.

Francis Xavier, "the Apostle of the Indies," misguided as he was, flamed with a consuming passion for souls. He washed the sores, and cleansed the clothes of a crew sick with scurvy; rang a bell through the streets of Goa to call pupils to his school; and, after a fearful vision of perils and privations before him as the price of winning isles and empires to Christ, he could only cry: "Yet more, O my God, yet more!" No marvel if during ten years he visited fifty kingdoms, preached over nine thousand miles of territory, and baptized a million persons.

STURDY HONESTY.

Some years ago I heard of a man (who occupied a position of great responsibility and influence as manager of one of the largest companies in England), as sturdy a bit of honesty as ever God made. A merchant called upon him one day, anxious to sell some steel, and quietly set down before him a roll of notes amounting to £500. "What are these?" asked the manager, taking them up. "Oh," explained the merchant in an undertone, "if you will be good enough to accept them with the compliments of the firm." Then it flashed upon the good man that it was a bribe. Crumpling the notes together as so much waste paper, he flung them out of the office door, and said indignantly, "Sir, if you are not gone after them in one minute, I will kick you there!" That is the Christianity for the nineteenth century—that resoluteness in the soul, in the hand, ay, and in the foot too, if need be!—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

THE GOSPEL = THE WHOLE COUNSEL OF GOD.

The milk of the Word as contrasted with solid food does not refer to any real and inherent difference between the Gospel first preached and afterwards taught. From first to last we present the same circle of truths, the whole truth. The Apostles preached the first and second advent, the person and work of Christ, the gift and indwelling of the Holy Ghost; they preached the whole counsel of God to all men. They preached Jesus as the centre; but in their preaching they presented the whole circumference of truth. Do not allow modern practice to cramp your ideas of what is meant by "preaching the Gospel" even to unbelievers. Experience will decide whether the Apostolic method is not the safer and the better.—Dr. Adolph Saphir.

"STEP INSIDE"—"STAND AWAY."

The most ordinary incidents will furnish us with instruction if we keep our minds and hearts open, as well as our eyes and ears. Let me tell you, for instance, of a very simple scene, of which I was the witness at a railway station. A train (not the one I was waiting for) was at the moment of starting, when a lady ran to and fro, looking for a second-class carriage; the guard pointed her to an open door as he shouted, "Step inside!" Not twenty seconds later another lady ran to the door. "Stand away!" cried the guard, and she was left behind. How slight the difference between those two persons, and yet how great the difference in the consequences. The one was carried whither she desired to go, the other was left behind. The one was barely in time—"Step inside!" the other barely too late—"Stand away!" The application is obvious, and quite adapted to a popular address. We shall meet with such helps frequently, if our minds are occupied with the Master's work and our hearts in fellowship with Him.—Pastor Theodore Monod.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE CITY.

The work conducted by Mrs. Fisher and her helpers is being vigorously carried on. In August upwards of four hundred young women were taken for a brief change to Crohamhurst. The weather was delightful, and everything contributed to the enjoyment of the party. It will be a memorable time to at least a few of the number, inasmuch as, amidst the roar of the train on its homeward journey, there was music in the Father's house, because four girls had sought and found the Saviour during those moments.

Several of the weak and destitute sisters have also been sent to the sea-side for a week or two, wholly or partially free of expense, thanks to kind friends who sent contributions for that purpose. They will be glad to know that in every case, great benefit has been received for body and soul.

Two women who received the word with gladness have suddenly been taken to their rest. One, a new convert, was allowed to testify for two or three weeks to the new life in Christ, when she succumbed to typhoid fever. Another, whose smile always cheered the visitor on entering the room for the weekly reading, was taken on her way home from work one evening to the Master's service above.

The need is great for helpers to give short addresses in work-rooms in dinner and tea hours. Also for evening classes, in teaching sewing, cutting-out, or any interesting and useful branch of instruction. Mrs. Fisher, 186, Aldersgate-street, will be glad to communicate with any ladies who would like to render assistance in this or any other way.

The Novel in the Home.

"EDNA LYALL'S" BOOKS.

I wish to direct the attention of parents to the writings of "Edna Lyall," some of which are, to my mind, most dangerous, especially to young people in their teens, who are beginning to "think for themselves."

They are not "yellow-backs," but, being bound in sober cloth, with good paper and large type, present a most respectable appearance. You find them in Christian homes where only "select reading" is allowed, and they are freely perused by young Christians, because, though honestly bearing the designation of "A Novel" on cover and title-page, "they are not like ordinary novels; they are written with an object." So one is often told.

And therein lies the danger. An "ordinary novel" is read and laid aside, occasioning no afterthought, at any rate upon religious matters. But there is much in these books calculated to unsettle young minds, by instilling ideas which, though plausible, are contrary to the teaching of the Bible.

A very strong feature is the glorification of atheists as men of model life—self-denying, upright, strictly honourable, and generous to a degree; in fact, as close imitators of Christ, while yet denying Him! The "conversion" of two of these characters seems to produce little effect in their lives; it merely amounts to an acceptance of the historical facts of our Lord's life on earth. There is no sorrow for sin; no forgiveness sought, nor the need of it suggested; we find in their subsequent careers no increased love for Christ, no desire to feed upon his Word, or to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." They were so pure in heart before that there seemed little room for improvement! Indeed, what better were they for being converted at all, if, as we are carefully assured, the atheist leader and his wife, who both died impenitent, will see their mistake in the next world, when the scales are removed from their eyes, and will accept the truth? How does this accord with Luke xvi. 26? Dives "saw his mistake," but too late to be of avail for his salvation.

Another strong feature is to represent Christians generally as selfish, hypocritical, narrow-minded, and bigoted, and quite deficient in the excellent moral qualities in which the atheists so especially excel! The "pious" characters introduced are mostly "ill to live with"; district visitors, Sunday-school teachers, temperance workers, church and chapel goers, "truly pious young men," and Salvationists, all in turn have a wipe from the brush of "Edna Lyall's" contempt, while an actor or an atheist is represented as "a truer saint" than any of them!

But, unfortunately, "Edna Lyall" is taken in her own net; for, while denouncing the bigotry and narrow-mindedness which she sees in all evangelical Christians, she herself tolerates none (in her writings) who do not coincide with her views. For instance, she condemns, and rightly, those Christians who refuse to credit a sceptic with sincerity in his difficulties; but she does not exercise towards those who differ from her the charity which she claims for her protégés. And, again, while exposing in scathing terms the failure of Christians to follow the practice of Christ's life, she very widely wanders from his teaching as to worldliness and even the way of salvation itself. A life of "self-renunciation" she declares to be "the only road to the Father," and salvation is made dependent upon taking the life of Christ as our pattern, and living "the life of the Crucified" as nearly as we can, adhering strictly to truth, honour, and integrity at all costs, even though it involve most painful sacrifice. Of course, these qualities are essential to a consistent Christian life; but a man does not drill and go to war to become a soldier, but because he is one, if he has taken the Queen's shilling (and, until he has taken it, he is not a soldier); and morality cannot make a man a Christian, though it is an essential characteristic of his life after he has accepted "the gift of God." "Edna Lyall" makes her Christians live to the cross, instead of from the cross; living the life of the Crucified without being crucified with Him.

As a writer "Edna Lyall" is most clever and interesting, and there is much in her works that is good; but she is unfair in many of her representations, and incorrect in many of her surmises. While crediting her with a perfectly sincere desire to turn her talents to good account, one cannot help feeling that if parents allow their children to read these books at all, they should point out the dangerous errors which they contain, as was suggested by "M. A. St. John" in this paper on September 28. G. E. M.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, "M. A. St. John," strikes at the root of the matter in the two words, "join partnership"; for, if parents would only do that, there would be very little danger of our children's minds being poisoned—at least, in Christian homes. As an instance, during the recent holiday, a young friend of my boys, on coming to spend a week with us, brought a book which they intended to enjoy together. As usual, it was handed to me with the question, "Have you read it?" With a silent prayer for the influence of the Holy Spirit to rest on us, I told them that it was not a bad book, and I should not forbid their reading it; but I warned them that if they once allowed that class of light reading to gain a hold on their mind, they would soon lose all relish for the stories of travel and true adventure of which they had previously been so fond, and also for the Bible, as I am quite convinced that it is impossible for a real love for the Bible and the novel to exist in one's heart at the same time. Nothing more was said, but I found that the book lay in my boys' room untouched, and at the close of the holidays I was able to rejoice with them over the victory God had given them.—I am, yours truly,

A Happy Mother.

Dear Sir,—I was much gratified by reading "M. A. St. John's" timely admonitions on this subject. It is very necessary that someone in authority should scrutinise the books which young people read, and teach them to discriminate between the wheat and the tares.

Besides actually bad ones, a great number of books are brought out in which there is a mixture of good and evil—excellent advice as to conduct, but unscriptural teaching on religion, and often misrepresentation and caricature of evangelical Christians. It will not do to condemn or banish such books wholesale; what is needed is to go into them thoroughly, pointing out to the reader wherein they may be helpful, and where harmful.

I have often wished that some of the periodicals published by Christian promoters had more space devoted to the censorship of the press in this direction. Most of them, indeed, do a little reviewing, but tales of the kind I allude to are either ignored utterly, condemned altogether, or passed over with a short general notice which would apply equally well to half a dozen other books. As a rule, the stories which are most widely read, even in Christian families, are only reviewed by the secular press. We need someone to point out their fallacies and at the same time to enforce the really valuable lessons they often contain.—Yours faithfully,

Critic.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Principal MacVicar, of Montreal.

In our next issue we hope to commence a series of papers on the Epistle to the Hebrews, by Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Rev. Arnold Foster, missionary of the London Missionary Society, at Hankow, China, writes to us, calling attention to a book which supplies an antidote to objections brought against the Bible—Canon Mozley's "Lectures on the Old Testament," published by Messrs. Rivington. He says:—

> It is not a book to put into the hands of young people generally. The lectures were delivered originally to graduates at Oxford, and they presuppose in those to whom they are addressed a certain amount of intelligence and the ability to follow an argument which is sometimes rather elaborate. But for ministers and others who are called to be teachers of young men, the book is simply invaluable, as supplying them with thoughts which they can reproduce in their own language, diluting them when necessary to meet the mental capacity of their hearers.

Mr. Nelson Jones, writing from Stamford-hill, N., with reference to the appeal of the Salvation Army for self-denying help, urges Christians to put into practice the principle of ruling-love—to show love by works of kindness. He sets forth a plan whereby much of the inevitable distress of the coming winter may be met. He says:—

> Suppose 1200 families are willing to economise for the four winter months, in order to feed their starving brothers and sisters and their children. Take the low average of five shillings as the weekly saving per household, and the result is £300 per week, which, in sixteen weeks, will yield £4800, or, shall we say, 1,152,000 penny dinners?

Mr. Jones adds that this estimate is, of course, absurdly below what might be done with very little effort, on lines similar to those suggested, but it is clear that a special fund to cope with distress might be easily raised among those who desire to be guided by the spirit of the Master.

It is to be hoped that the timely and much-needed appeal contained in the circular issued by the Central Vigilance Society (to which we drew attention last week) will not be made in vain. It is now more than ever necessary that men earnest in the cause of godliness, righteousness, and sobriety, should be returned to our town councils, local boards, and the House of Commons. Householders and the public have the remedy for our social evils largely in their own hands. Much may be done by prompt and determined exercise of the powers already provided by law.

We think, however, that the friends who issued the circular should have taken the opportunity of calling attention to the cause of these evils as well as to their effect. Those who may soon be in positions of some authority need to be reminded that it would be well to bring their influence to bear upon the feeders of the "terrible traffic" which is so sad a blot upon our Christianity. If the victims are a troublesome unit in our town life, those who make them ought to be dealt with at least with equal severity.

We hear from Dublin that the Agapemone heresy is spreading there rapidly. Meetings are being held in drawing-rooms, and very charming young ladies are speaking in them, evidently sent over for the express purpose of spreading these abominable delusions. At the first meetings nothing is said that can be objected to; but the teaching ends in the separation of husband and wife; of this our informant says he is acquainted with some sad instances.

It seems intolerable that these agents of the Evil One should have it all their own way. No one there seems able or willing to take the matter up. We think that if it were known that the introduction of this "new dispensation" leads to revolting immorality, some would hesitate ere they embraced the views held out to them.

Mr. G. F. Chambers, of Eastbourne, recently quoted the case of the Portsmouth tramway men who were working fourteen hours per day and ten hours on Sundays. He said:—

> They have no Sunday off except by paying for it. The Portsmouth hours are under the average, sixteen hours a day being nearer the ordinary time. A London omnibus conductor informed him that he worked fifteen hours a day seven days a week, and had only one Sunday off in five.

It is not difficult in the face of facts like these to find how the high dividends are arrived at; but it is not easy to understand how the Christian people who are shareholders in the companies concerned can silently acquiesce in this tyranny, which, taking advantage of competition, robs toiling people of their God-given day of rest.

In these days when so much prominence is given to "heredity," it is pleasant to come upon the sensible words of Dr. Elisa Dunbar. Speaking at the opening of the session of the London School of Medicine for Women, she pleaded for forbearance and charity towards those who are in the trammels of evil tendencies, and urged that such an attitude is "quite compatible with an insistence upon the duty and freedom of each human being to discipline their desires, and to attain to a nobler character." To bring the body into subjection is by no means the least important part of the Christian life; and it cannot too frequently be insisted upon that there is both duty and freedom in the endeavour.

The indictment against European civilisation anent its treatment of the native races of Africa is daily becoming more serious. Speaking at the Canterbury Diocesan Conference last week, Commander Cameron stated that on the West Coast gin was imported from Hamburg which was absolute poison, and that most of the inland villages were full of "shebeens." The Congo Free State, instead of being a benefit to the natives, was the centre of a trade in gin and gunpowder, wages being paid in gin, and the officials also conniving at slavery. At the Cape, where the Government has established free trade in drink, Germany imported vile spirits; on the East Coast the Portuguese sold the same commodity to the natives, and the Mohammedans, so far from doing any good in Africa, not only traded in spirits, but taught the natives to distil so-called brandy. In the Commander's opinion the difficulty of stopping the traffic is increased by the action of the French and Germans, who, having small pieces of land near the English stations, carry on a system of smuggling. But, it may be asked, is it beyond the power of international diplomacy, England taking the lead, to induce all the European Powers concerned to take united and early action for the suppression of this death-dealing trade?

It is not very encouraging to find the estate belonging to one of our City churches (St. Bride's, Fleet-street) set down as including a public-house and a number of dwelling houses, in what The Star terms "a nest of slums," part of which is characterised as "a perfect disgrace even to the civilisation of Spitalfields." "Not fit for pigs to live in," and "the dirtiest slum of the lot," surely are not terms which should be applicable to property in the possession of a church, and from which that church is deriving a large revenue. With such an example before them, perhaps it is hardly to be wondered at that there are owners of property in the East-end who seem to have no idea of their responsibilities, and that there are tenants who have but a poor idea of nineteenth century Christianity.

One of the subjects to which Paliament might with great advantage devote attention is that of excessive mortality of children in connection with the question of the insurance of child lives. Those who are old enough to remember the introduction of the Ten Hours Bill, and other Factory Acts, will readily call to mind the painful revelations which had been made as to the numberless deaths of children in consequence of the use of opiates, "quieters," and other mixtures, to lull them during the time when the young mothers were employed in the mills, and how the reduced hours of work resulted in a reduction of the death-rate. It would seem, however, that the temptation which child insurance has afforded is responsible for a dread increase in the death-rate of the young. The many cases that come before the coroners and magistrates would seem to point to the need for restrictive legislation so far as the age at which children may be insured is concerned. It cannot be denied that, in only too many cases, the rightly named Burial Clubs are the cause, and child murder the effect.

It is sometimes urged by the apologists of stage plays that they are useful as a school of morals, and that, inasmuch as vice is generally represented as being punished and virtue triumphant, they combine ethical instruction with innocent amusement. The kind of "morals," however, which is too often presented is illustrated by a play, written by a lady and recently produced at a London theatre, in which a woman is represented as marrying a second time, apparently with the full knowledge that her lawful husband, from whom she has not even been divorced, is still living, a clergyman being made the partner of her deliberate sin. The Times critic remarks:—

> This is of itself sufficient to alienate the sympathies of those who have not yet joined the revolt against matrimony as it exists in its present form, and if sympathy is not enlisted on behalf of the lady the evident intention of the play fails, and the play is robbed of its purpose.

When such "moral" spectacles as this are put before the public in the form of amusement, we cannot wonder at the present unhappy tendency to make light of the Divine institution of marriage, or at attempts to prove it "a failure."

It cannot be overlooked that in these days there is much spasmodic philanthropy. It frequently happens that a great burst of popular sympathy or indignation subsides without any practical result having been secured. All around us there are evils which might easily be remedied if only the efforts of Christian men were strenuously and persistently directed to their removal, and the tendency to act gregariously in such matters overcome. John Howard and other great philanthropists worked almost alone; and there is no reason why Christian men and women to-day should not be equally successful, if in the strength which is sent from above they set themselves individually to combat some grave wrong or shameful abuse.

Now that the cold weather has come upon us, with the biting hardships which it brings to the pŏor, it will be well for each of us to ponder over some noble words spoken by the Bishop of Manchester at the recent Congress.

> Another great fact of which the same may be said—that owing to its difficulty and urgency, it needs careful and repeated consideration—is the present increase of crippling poverty in civilised Europe, side by side with the growth of wealth and luxury. This is said to be a poor man's question, no doubt, and in one sense it is. The lowest stratum of the poor is the locus of most of the suffering and degradation which this grinding poverty produces. If, however, it be meant that it is exclusively a poor man's question, I must demur to such a statement. Not only does the spread of destitution create and intensify a discontent which threatens the very existence of civilised society, but its effects darken for every sensitive man the whole realm of social life. The more truly Christian a man is, the more he regards his fellow-men with the eternal love of Christ, the more will he suffer at the sight of the intolerable misery, and the more earnestly will he strive to find a remedy for it.

The italics are ours, and the words deserve very thoughtful consideration; for, after all, they do but emphasise the fact that he is most Christ-like who follows the Divine commands, not the least of which is that to "remember them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body."

The admitted faults of individuals ought not to be visited upon a whole class. It is too often taken for granted by those who are content with superficial estimates that British seamen are a reckless, thriftless class. But if this were always so, we should not find, as The Word in the Waters tells us, that during the year 1886 upwards of sixty thousand pounds were deposited in the seamen's savings banks, and that during 1886-7, which was not a prosperous period for this class, more than one hundred and seventy thousand pounds in wages of men paid off were received by the Board of Trade for transmission to their homes. From another quarter it is gathered that during the last nine years sixty-nine thousand total abstinence pledges have been taken by seamen, fishermen, and bargemen, through the instrumentality of one society alone—the Missions to Seamen. Sobriety and thrift thus go hand in hand, and the vast improvement which the last few years have witnessed in the habits of this class, as well as in that of the sister service, the army, is largely to be attributed to the work carried on, under God, by the various Christian agencies, and to the devoted labours of Miss Robinson, Miss Weston, and many other friends of our soldiers and sailors. Such results as these furnish a complete and practical answer to cavillers.

We question if the Apocryphal books have for a very long time had so much attention as they received on a recent Sunday, when it became necessary for many Romish priests to turn to them in the endeavour to find a peg to hang their doctrine of Purgatory upon. Unfortunately, however, the inspired books are, by myriads of Romanists as little known as are the uncanonical, and they would be quite unable to judge as to the comparative value of a text from one of the Gospels and the one which many of their priests quoted from Maccabees. When, however, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford can refer in his sermon to those who had died "in the grace of God," yet who had sins repented of, but "not fully atoned for," it is, perhaps, too much to expect Scriptural knowledge on the part of the simple hearers; and one cannot be surprised to find such a Sabbath service terminating with the singing of a hymn, "Oh, turn to Jesus' mother; turn!"

THE BLAENAVON MOUNTAINS.

The town of Blaenavon, with a population of 12,000 souls, composed principally of steelworkers and colliers, is located in one of the bleakest spots in northern Monmouthshire. The major portion of the town is built on the slopes of the barren hills, which environ it on either side. The adult portion of the inhabitants are chiefly poor people of the industrious class, their average earnings being about 2s. per day when working a full week. Most of them, having large families to provide for, find it no easy matter to make both ends meet.

To this district Pastor Owen Tidman was attracted to come and labour; in 1878 he commenced his pastoral and evangelistic work. He set about making personal visits from house to house, distributing tracts, and speaking a word to the inmates in the evenings, inviting them to come to the Gospel meetings and to send their children to the Sunday-school. This was attended at the outset with great opposition, but with marked results for good.

After some months the liquidation of the local Iron and Steel Company was followed with indescribable scenes of poverty and distress among the people. During the twelve months of its existence, many were compelled to go and seek employment elsewhere, traversing the mountains by day and by night, and often returning to their desolate and dreary homes, having failed in their quest. Houses were stripped of their furniture, which was disposed of in order that the families might have bread. In this crisis Mr. and Mrs. Tidman indefatigably laboured, cheering the poor with words of consolation and sympathy, and assisting by the help of kind friends in the vicinity who had heard of the distress.

Although the works were reopened, the neighbourhood has never fully recovered from the effects of the failure, and with the continued low standard of wages, the workpeople have not been able to do much to better themselves or their families. In the winter months many are greatly tried through the severe weather which prevails on these bleak mountain sides. Through the instrumentality of the pastor and his helpmate, various efforts have been put forth to reach the people. Gospel meetings, cottage services, children's meetings, Band of Hope meetings, and Bible-readings have been held, besides visitation of the sick, personal dealing from house to house, and a Sunday-school lending and circulating library. Addresses have also been given in the brickworks, and half hourly meetings in cottages and the open air have been blessed with marked and lasting results.

The Sunday-school numbers about four hundred scholars and twenty-six teachers. There are about one hundred and fifty in Christian fellowship, most of whom have been brought to Christ through the earnest and unwearied labours of Mr. Tidman. The majority of them were people who spent their earnings in the alehouse, and lived in utter ignorance of God and his salvation. Many cases could be cited of both men and women who have embraced Christ through the Gospel, and whose once wretched homes have been exchanged for comfort, cleanliness, and happiness.

Mr. Tidman has also been remarkably successful in healing the sick, many of whom had been given up as hopeless by medical practioners. Several thousands of patients, who have passed through suffering from various painful, and sometimes long-standing maladies, have had their cases most kindly and patiently considered, and been treated in a most skilful manner. He is frequently called up during the night to attend on sick ones far and near, and he may be found wading through deep snow, or plodding through heavy rain to administer healing, or speak a few comforting words to the dying. He keeps open house, to which the poor sick ones are invited for succour or advice. Invalids have been brought from a distance, several of whom have been restored to health and strength. Little children have been brought in blankets, perambulators, &c., to seek the advice and assistance of the good patsor, and have been greatly benefited by the means prescribed. The names of Mr. and Mrs. Tidman have become as household words among the poor people everywhere in the district.

In order to further the work and to meet the requirements of the constantly increasing number of Sunday-school pupils, it was deemed expedient to erect a new school-room. An appeal being made to the Blaenavon Company, who generously promised both the stone and lime for the building, Mr. Tidman and his helpers commenced preparations for erecting the same. It was got ready with every possible despatch, and was opened and set apart on Christmas last. Nearly every service has been greatly owned of the Lord. In this room Mrs. Tidman has a class of young girls, many of whom are employed at the works, and several of these have given every evidence of a change of heart. The friends are striving hard to pay for this greatly needed school-room. The cost amounted to £250.

In addition to the duties enumerated, Mr. Tidman holds evangelical services in the adjoining towns and villages. J. T.

BLACKGANG, ISLE OF WIGHT.—The harvest thanksgiving was celebrated on the 11th inst., when, after hearty addresses by Mr. J. Newman, Miss Hamilton, and Miss E. Reade, very cheering testimony was borne to blessing received during the season in connection with the Blackgang Mission.

HAMMERSMITH CONFERENCE.—For the second year a Christian Conference is to be held, next week, at Hammersmith. Meetings specially intended for pastors will be held in the mornings of Oct. 23 and 24. The subjects for prayer and intercourse are a richer personal experience of Divine things, and fuller manifestation of Divine power along with the preaching of the word. Three evening meetings will be held in Broadway Congregational Church with a view to the increased spiritual life of the churches. The Conference last year, it is stated, was followed by very much blessing. We ask the prayers of our readers for a similar blessing next week.

BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR MISSION.—During the summer months, for the last twenty-eight years, the Brighton Open-air and Christian Mission, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Thwaites, have held evangelistic services on the beach at Brighton. During the past summer large crowds have gathered on Sunday afternoons and evenings to listen to the Gospel preached, and many have believed, and passed from death into life. Some thousands of tracts, leaflets, &c., have been distributed, and evangelists of all denominations have taken part in the work. At the closing service for this season, held on Sunday last, earnest Gospel addresses were delivered by Messrs. R. Godley and W. Medlock, of the Salvation Army; Mr. J. Davidge, of the Hyde-park Mission, London, and Mr. Thwaites.

The Congregational Union.

Upwards of a thousand Congregational ministers and delegates assembled at Nottingham last week for the Autumnal meetings of the body. The lay delegates are deputed by the churches in the different counties to take part and to vote in the Assembly. The opening sermon was preached by Professor Elmslie, of the English Presbyterian College, and was a fitting introduction to the deliberations. In illustration of the kind of teachers and preachers England now wants, an able sketch was given from Isaiah vi. 1—8 of the spirit and influence of Isaiah in his time, and of the sin-cleansing love of God of which the live coal from the altar of sacrifice was the emblem, and without which no man could fittingly say to the Lord, "Here am I: send me." The greatest and mightest power on earth was the awful grasp of unfettered sin on a sinner's soul. Only God could control and cleanse it, and the world's history and progress were to be reckoned by the putting forth of this power.

The address of Dr. Bruce, of Huddersfield, from the chair had exclusive reference to the report of the Royal Commission on Education. At its close a touchingly beautiful letter was read from Rev. Griffith John, who had been elected chairman for 1889. Writing from Hankow, the missionary told how much it had been his endeavours to find out the will of God; how little he allowed himself to be swayed by the honour of the position; how strong had grown his conviction that God had given him a work to do in China which he must finish as far as in him lay; and how, in declining the chair, he was sustained by the consciousness of having tried to do the Master's will. The rest of the sitting was filled up by educational questions.

On the following morning (October 10) the subject of Dissenting churches in villages and the effect of agricultural depression upon them was introduced. In an interesting paper in Blackwood's Magazine for this month on "The English Peasantry," it is pointed out that it is not only the sluggish who migrate to cities, but the educated and aspiring young labourers. The withdrawal of these and others from rural congregations was telling most seriously upon them, and the suggestion was made and approved that churches should, after the Methodist plan, be linked together and served by the aid of "lay preachers."

Christian work among the people of cities appropriately followed. An earnest young minister from the East of London introduced the discussion, and, wearing his blue ribbon, spoke of the abounding temptations to drunkenness. In one thoroughfare every sixth house was a tavern, and he had himself counted on a Saturday night close upon two thousand persons entering a single gin-palace. A state of things had grown up which was a chronic danger to the land, was giving scope to the demagogue, and which demanded the prompt attention of the Christian Church. The speaker urged week-night services, where the people would come in their week-day clothes; the visits to poor churches of the most gifted expositors of Christianity; and especially house-to-house visitation of Christian women. "One lady," it was said, "would do more good than a host of curates." May we indicate why this is so? Mostly because Christian ladies have a more loving view of Christ, and a clearer view of the simplicities of the Gospel of grace. The Congregationalists may be congratulated that such gifted young ministers as the reader of the paper are coming to the front. And if, with their temperance advocacy and their self-denying zeal for the welfare of the masses, they should make manifest their love for the truth of Christ crucified, which is the truth the Spirit uses as a power unto salvation, there will be more hope of solving the problem of the terrible evils, miseries, and dangers of our cities. The rest of the sitting was very usefully occupied in discussions on planting churches in growing centres, and in efforts on behalf of special classes. Hopeful facts were brought out in relation to canal men, to navvies, and to adult schools. In West Bromwich, near Birmingham, five thousand adults were in Bible-classes. One such class of a thousand members had met in Nottingham on the previous Sunday. We confess to large expectations from meetings for this exclusive study of God's Word.

In the afternoon of the day there were sectional meetings on economics and social reforms, on the cultivation of a less secular and more useful fellowship in what are termed by Congregationalists "church meetings," and on Pentateuchal criticism. Scarcely justified, however, was the positiveness of assertion on the last subject.

The whole of Thursday morning was, according to the official programme, occupied on the following important subjects, upon which papers were consecutively read:—On the Importance of Preaching in Public Religious Services; on the Necessity of more strenuous Efforts to Prevent the Drifting Away of the Young from Christ; on the Present Causes which tend to Unsettle Faith among the Young; and on the Urgent Demand of the Times upon the Christian Service of Church Members. The three last topics were the expressions of pastoral solicitudes, and it was obvious that many influential members of the Conference felt that the brief papers ought to be followed by free discussion, in which the delegates might have taken part. But the meeting at this point was abruptly closed, to give opportunity for a meeting in the Albert Hall on the Irish Question.

Hospitality was extended to visitors from all branches of the Christian Church in Nottingham. The Vicar of St. Mary's had received into his house five Nonconformists, and other of the clergy vied with their chief vicar in this liberal-minded feeling.

YOUNG WOMEN IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—I see, by The Christian of September 21, a notice of the proposed Home for young Englishwomen and others in need of safe shelter in Rome. Those who have lived long in Italy can understand the great difficulties in which these young people are frequently involved, and their need of friends and home. We wish, if possible, to obtain a suitable villa, and open a Home of Rest, where those in need may come for a time, and find safety, rest, and a real home. It is believed that once started, the work would be self-supporting.

We are waiting now for guidance as to where we shall commence; and for means of taking a villa. The winter, the best working season, is drawing on; and, if we had the money in hand, a suitable villa could be now obtained. We are tarrying this month at Leghorn, to see what means Christian friends may send to us for this work, and shall be very glad to reply to any who may wish for information about it. Any help and letters of inquiry may be sent to Mrs. Braden, 44, Burlington-gardens, Acton, W.—Very truly yours, M. E. D.

MISS LEIGH'S HOMES IN PARIS, with their many associated agencies, are encumbered with a debt of £1500. Over seven hundred English people, mostly young women and children, benefit each week, in some way or another, by Miss Leigh's institutions, and those who sympathise with unwearying efforts to protect the weak from temporal wrong, as well as to reach them with the Gospel of Christ, will much regret that the Paris Mission Homes should be in such sad want of funds. Miss Leigh's address is 77, Avenue de Wagram, Paris.

DR. PENTECOST ON SERVICE.

The eighth annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A., Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, E.C., was held on Friday last, when an address to the members was delivered by Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost on "The Individuality and Responsibility of Christian Service." The chair was occupied by Mr. J. H. Tritton, who made some opening remarks on the gratifying success which has attended the year's operations, and commended to the attention of the members, for help in spiritual life, the words of David to Solomon, "Keep and seek...that ye may possess" (1 Chron. xxviii. 8).

At the outset, Dr. Pentecost emphasised the need for constant study of the great Model of service. As watches are adjusted to standard time, so Christians should be careful to see that their efforts are in the line of the example of the Lord and the first disciples. The tendency to-day is to do everything by organisation rather than by individual service; but the best organisation in the world must go to pieces unless the members retain their individuality and push on the work just against their own doors. The Master called one man here and another there, and we cannot work on better methods. The scattering abroad of the early disciples through persecution put a stop to the Church "huddling" about Jerusalem. Then it was discovered that at Antioch, which had not been visited by any of the Apostles, a Christian church had been organised, the truth having been conveyed to the city by merchant Jews who had found it while attending the feast at Jerusalem. These men were the commercial travellers of their time, and they well showed their individuality in religious as well as other matters. Life and death, sin and salvation, each and all are distinctly personal, and affect us individually; service also must be personal, and every man, in the calling in which he is found of God, must be a minister of the Gospel.

God has no sons who are not servants. In the life of the Lord Himself, the character of servant comes out very plainly, and his entire life was a ministry. Likewise, work is part of the credentials of the Christian as an adopted son of God. We are saved by faith, through grace; but nevertheless our standing in glory will be determined by our service now. There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, yet we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ with a view to receiving according as we have done in the body. "Every man's work will be tried what sort it is."

After some earnest words on 1 Cor. iii. 11—15, Dr. Pentecost said: We talk about the sacred ministry, the sacred desk, and the sacred calling; but we want sacred offices, sacred banks, sacred stores, and sacred shops, and every man in them who names the name of Christ to be an ordained minister of God—to do his work, bear his testimony, lift high the light of the divine life, and scatter the salt which saves the world from corruption, to be witnesses for godliness, righteousness, and brotherly kindness. Every calling is sacred, and every line of business for the Christian is one in which the Master may be served, and testimony for the truth may be borne. In conclusion, Dr. Pentecost urged his hearers to be enthusiastic in their work for Christ.

"THE DOWN-GRADE."—The Baptist learns on good authority that Mr. Spurgeon has in mind some arrangement under which his Down-Grade protests will probably develop into a distinct and separate organisation. This would embrace in its membership not only a numerous section of the ministers trained in his own college, but at least a strong contingent from the Surrey and Middlesex Baptist Association, in which body it is known Mr. Spurgeon has many sympathisers with his words about and withdrawal from both the Baptist Union and the London Baptist Association.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.,

XXIX.—"ENDORSE THE CHEQUE."

A WORLDLY gentleman was once awakened under a rousing sermon, and began to think about eternal realities, and about his soul's condition. The more he thought the more he was convinced that his life was most unsatisfactory.

He made up his mind that he would seek for salvation, and give up his past bad ways. Like many others, he fell into the common mistake of turning over a new leaf—that is to say, he determined to cover up the past by leading a better life in the future. He thought that by so doing he would succeed in his search after salvation.

In this new enterprise he was not altogether without encouragement. Being naturally a determined man, he went about his work with energy and earnestness. He made bold also to let everybody know what he had made up his mind to do and to be.

He put himself under rule, and kept to it. He rose early, read his Bible for so long, and made prayer until such an hour. Thus far, to outward appearance at least, he did well; but inwardly, before God, he was not doing well; for, inasmuch as he was doing all these things to save himself, he was denying that Christ had already done everything necessary for his salvation. In trying to obtain God's favour, he was practically denying that Christ had done that already.

However, he did not intend to make this mistake, nor was he wilfully sinning against light. Consequently, God not only bore with him, but encouraged him by many tokens of his favour and blessing. Passages of Scripture were sometimes applied to his mind, and, at others, prayers were suggested which he had never thought of.

Gradually his eyes were opened to see that if he had gone on in his former neglectful and wicked life, he would have been lost for ever. Nevertheless, his religious life and exercises, instead of satisfying him, made him feel more and more that something was still wanting.

He had heard of people who professed to be saved, but he could not say that he had arrived at that happy state. For this blessing he began to pray in right earnest, and not receiving the answer he desired, he became discouraged.

He went on in this way for three years, until he was nearly driven to despair, and humanly speaking would have gone into despair. He talked of giving up prayer, and letting himself go! But he could not do this. The enemy suggested to him that he was not one of the elect, and therefore God could not save him. This made him somewhat angry with God for inviting people, as he said, and then not receiving them.

Then the thought came to his mind that he was doomed to be damned—that there was no help for him. Sometimes he even ventured to say as much as this about himself, though he could not bear anyone else should say it of him.

At length he came to me, "by the merest chance," as he afterwards affirmed. "Indeed, it was quite an accident!"

However, he opened his mind freely, and told me in substance what I have already stated. I asked him whether he expected to be pardoned or saved, because he prayed.

"Yes, certainly," he answered, "I have been so expecting."

"If that is the case," I replied, "it may be the reason why you have not received pardon. God commands believers—that is, his own people—to pray to Him, and assures them of answers; but those who are not yet his, He requires them to come to Him, not as praying men, to recommend themselves as such, but as lost sinners, for whom Christ died. Christ died for sinners; you should come to Him in that character."

"Yes," he said, "I do pray as a sinner."

"But, my friend, did you not tell me just now that you had been expecting pardon because you prayed, not because you were a sinner?"

He could not quite see my meaning.

I continued, "Supposing that you were in distress, and you received a draft or order in your name for one hundred pounds to set you free from your trouble, what would you do?"

"I would go and get the order cashed, of course."

"But suppose, when you presented your order or cheque at the bank, the clerks refused to give you a single penny, what then?"

"I should be disappointed," he said, "and perhaps angry. I might inquire, 'Is not the signature genuine? Has the gentleman no money in your bank?'"

"And suppose the reply was, 'Yes, the signature is good, and there is plenty of money; but the cheque is not endorsed!' You observe, the cheque is made to your order, and you have not signed your name. That cheque is worthless until you acknowledge that you are the person to whom and for whom the draft was made."

"Oh," he said, as if waking up with a new thought, "I see now where you are. You mean that I must acknowledge myself a lost sinner, and come to God as such. I am obliged to you; this makes the matter quite clear to me. I see, God is not to blame after all, but my own self."

I said, "It is so. Let us, then, ask Him to forgive your past fault."

He was ready and willing to do this, and asked God's forgiveness for all the hard and unjust thoughts he had indulged towards Him. He came not only as a lost sinner, but as a sinner believing in Jesus's great sacrifice, and soon found peace with God.

For more than three years this dear man had been struggling and labouring in vain under a mistake; but now that his understanding was enlightened, and he was willing to accept the finished work of Christ, he soon entered into joy and rest. He came to me a despairing soul, and went out a pardoned sinner.

It is surprising how near some people are to salvation, and yet they do not reach it. They seek it earnestly, yet do not obtain it. Why is this? Because they seek amiss and not according to God's will. If salvation is provided and ready for the helpless, it is obvious that we should come to the Lord in that character, and that alone. Our helplessness is our qualification, so to speak, for receiving blessing, not for being debarred from it. The excuses people make for not being saved are the very reasons why they should be, if they only knew it."

SEAMEN IN ANTWERP.—Rev. E. Hanssen, missionary to Scandinavian sailors, agrees with a recent correspondent that there is great need for work among seamen of all nations in Antwerp. He has personally endeavoured to meet the want, and for over a year his little Home, Canal de Ancre, 72 and 74, has been a welcome place of resort to weary souls. His efforts have not, however, received the outside support which they deserve. Sailors in general are cordially invited to use the Home, of which further information may be obtained by addressing Mr. Hanssen, at 83, Rue Osy, Antwerp.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION.—The twenty-fourth annual meeting of this Association took place last week. During the past year many pulpits were supplied and several missions conducted in London. The lay preachers are more numerous than they have been for a long time past, and 112 members spoke at 3361 services held during the year. Mr. Spurgeon, who showed signs of great weakness, delivered a brief address, in which he urged his hearers to work for the Lord with all their might. Referring to funds, he said that God will always find money for good work, but yet there are times when the trustees will not hand it out.

DUNDEE Y.W.C.A.

THE inauguration of the new Y.W.C.A. premises in Dundee came off recently in circumstances giving promise of abundant success in effort. Visitors from various parts and ministers of all denominations were present to assist. The new home of the Association is 33, Tay-street, and it is hoped that therein the best desires of the friends of the cause will be more than realised.

After a devotional meeting, Mrs. W. J. Cox who presided, delivered an address on work done and future duty. In the afternoon, Mr. William Ogilvy Dalgleish spoke of the great need of such an institution in Dundee, and formally declared the building open, and also free from debt. Lord Kinnaird also made some remarks on the value and importance of the operations of the Association. After addresses by Sheriff Cheyne, and Rev. J. E. Somerville, several gifts were announced towards a library for the building.

A ladies' conference was afterwards held. Mrs. W. O. Dalgleish, who presided, spoke on the Association and its work, and a practical paper by Mrs. Gordon was read. Mrs. Gibbon, Miss Robarts, Miss Cavendish, the Hon. E. Kinnaird, and Miss E. Austin followed with some remarks. The proceedings were cordial and inspiring throughout.

RAILWAY MEN ACROSS THE SEA.

ON Thursday evening, last week, a number of Christian workers assembled at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., under the presidency of Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, to hear an address by Mr. D. Spencer, of the Railway Mission, on what he saw, heard, and did, on the occasion of his recent visit to Canada and the United States.

At Montreal and Toronto Mr. Spencer found that much had been done to benefit the railway men mentally, morally, and physically, but only a little towards meeting their spiritual needs. He addressed the men on what had been accomplished in Britain in the direction of evangelisation, and work of a similar kind will at once be commenced in the Dominion. In a small way Christian effort has for some time been in progress in some places. Socially and temporally the employés enjoy advantages, secured by reading-rooms and institutes, such as are unknown in Great Britain; but in evangelistic exertion the Old Country takes the lead by a long way.

At Detroit, Buffalo, Rochester, and New York, Mr. Spencer saw much that was very cheering. Still, evangelistic work has not there assumed the proportions it has in Britain. Actuated by merely financial considerations, the proprietors of railways in the States devote large sums of money towards securing the comfort of their workmen, but spiritual effort is not characterised by anything like vigour. Mr. Spencer addressed several meetings, and much sympathy with active mission work along the line was evoked.

It was gratifying to hear of one or two railroads employing none but teetotalers on their lines, and of the splendid institutes that have been erected in many large centres, but these provisions are material and social rather than distinctly religious and spiritual. It was also pleasing to hear that several men, whose acquaintance Mr. Spencer made, saw the need of greater effort in evangelistic work, and promised to set about supplying that need without delay.

THE GRAY'S-YARD RAGGED CHURCH, James-street, Oxford-street, will open their new premises on Monday afternoon next, at four o'clock. The chair will be taken by Lord Kinnaird, and an address by Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is announced.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

WE have again had the joy of visiting, in company with Mr. Harrison, and Mr. John Jones, of Shepherd's-bush, the hop-yards of Hereford and Worcestershire. As in former years, Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, was the prime mover: his pony and trap took us to the villages going and returning, a journey extending from Bucks to the borders of Shropshire. We were all more than ever impressed with the importance of the work, as so little is done for the crowds of pickers who come from the Black Country and other districts. One lady we found distributing books among her pickers, while a master did what he could to promote Christian services; but, with very few exceptions, the poor souls are left to their own devices, which, to their credit, often develop into spontaneous sacred concerts at their bins and around the night fires; "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Where is my Wandering Boy To-night?" "I'm Redeemed," make up the varied programme, while one waggon-load of pickers passed us singing "Why not to-night?"

By moving briskly we were able to reach nearly one hundred yards, and thus to publish the truth to several thousands who would otherwise have been neglected. By the aid of friends, who lodged us, this was made comparatively easy. Almost all the farmers received us gladly, and in many cases shook hands and thanked us, as did many of the poor pickers who recognised the preachers of former years. One old man, as we were leaving, stepped forward, saying, "Give us yer hand, and the Lord prosper you!"

Many told us they had kept the books given last year, one woman even telling the title, "Nothing but the Blood of Jesus," adding, "My little girl nigh worships that book, sir." The worst treatment of our literature was inflicted by two clerical gents in a trap to whom we gave a copy of Mr. Haslam's booklet, published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, "Planted, not in Silver but sand." This they tore into fragments before our eyes. We have kept the pieces.

The Salvation Army have evidently made a mark upon the class represented at hop-picking. In one garden, where many were singing "Oh, that will be joyful," we found a rough young fellow in his red guernsey blending music and work. "Better sing the praises of God than the praises of the devil, sir," said he. "And where did you learn that?" "At Peter's College, sir." "Where is that?" "At the feet of Christ, sir." One young Army fellow who last year led the singing in one of the largest yards is this year singing above. He went down his pit early, and was killed before breakfast. Many spoke of him and missed his voice. We give four sample scenes:—

(1) The picking was finished for the week, and the pickers were waiting for the measurer to come when two of our party appeared. The moment was opportune, as the speaker told of Christ taking our load. "When you women move your bins, you know what a burden is, and you know when you set it down. Christ bore your burden. More than this; it is as if one took all the bins in this field, and carried the mighty pile. But it crushed Jesus to death. Do you know what it is to see that Jesus bore your burden?" Many were the thanks as we left that Saturday evening.

(2) It was later, and around a fire we found a group washing their garments for Sunday. So we told them of the cleansing blood that prepares us for the eternal Sabbath. It was a weird picture, with only the blazing wood to illuminate the darkness.

(3) A beautiful moonlight night, a fire under the trees, a circle of singers in rural dress seated on logs and anything that came to hand. There they sat and sang from memory the blessed old hymn, "Sweet is the work, my God, my King." The blending and harmony of their voices was something never to be forgotten, as anyone can guess who knows what Black Country singing is like.

(4) Sunday morning. We approached an open wain-house. Seated around were thirty or forty women. It was their dining-room; but, as it was without table, each guest had her plate upon her knees. We apologised for intruding, and were soon on good terms with all, the feeding being supplemented by a little reading, with a song and a short sermon.

These are but samples of many other happy experiences. The seed has thus been sown broadcast, and the God of harvest will give the increase. On Sunday evening, after a return route, we arrived safely at headquarters, the home of Mr. T. S. Heley, Wing, Leighton Buzzard.

WORK IN NAPLES.

MADAME MEURICOFFRE, of Naples (sister of Mrs. Butler), has just been visiting England, and has tried to interest several Christian friends in the work done by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Burrowes, of the Sailors' Rest, Flavia Goija 15, Naples. That work, which is in great great need of help, being at present chiefly supported by Madame Meuricoffre's own generous gifts and those of a handful of friends there, it is easy to understand how, in a vast city such as Naples, where there is but a small Protestant community, the means of that small number of persons are very heavily taxed in keeping up the many good works set going for the benefit of the whole population, more or less.

The Sailors' Rest, which is managed by Mr. and Mrs. Burrowes, is for the good of seamen of all nationalities and sects who arrive in that great harbour, and who are subjected in Naples to temptations of an almost abnormally terrible kind. The Rest has done an especially good work since a fresh start it made in January last. The old Home did much good, but a fresh and more convenient building was much needed. Owing to the absence of Mr. Burrowes, Madame Meuricoffre and other Christian friends in other parts of Europe, the institution had fallen to a low ebb. The return, however, of Mr. and Mrs. Burrowes, with their cheery and hearty energy, brought back new life to the work, which from that time has been continued unconnected with any other agency, and entirely dependent on its own resources. It is entirely unsectarian. The sailors are free to go in and out at all times, and they find there books, journals, and social intercourse. Social meetings are held, at which singing is encouraged; all being used towards the spiritual benefit of the men.

A new and more convenient house was taken in the same busy and accessible locality. The ceremony of opening the new Rest was presided over by the Consul, Captain Hartmel, and there were present a large number of sailors from H.M.S. Cruiser, a training ship, most of them converted men. Sailors can be brought in at any hour, and can have beds there if they desire. Eleven shipwrecked sailors from a Greek vessel were brought in one night, and remained some days, owing their lives in some cases to the care bestowed on them. "It is impossible," writes a friend from Naples, "to estimate too highly the energy shown by Mr. Burrowes in the work, while the warmth of heart, kindness, and ability in resource developed by Mrs. Burrowes have done much to make the Rest a real and much valued home to the men. On one occasion she managed, in some marvellous way, to make up beds for thirty men clamouring for admission, out of an accommodation for ten. All were delighted and grateful for the comfort and kindness thus granted them." It seems that Mrs. Burrowes' previous life and sore trials have been providentially a training to fit her for this special service. Having lately lost several sons, most dear to her, and having one now a confirmed invalid, she now gives all the affection of her wounded heart to this work for the wandering sons of other mothers of many different lands. They return her affection, and she feels that God has now given her many sons in the place of those He took away.

Madame Meuricoffre states that having attended a meeting at the Rest one evening, she re-entered her carriage late, and ordered the coachman to draw into the shade on one side of the street while she waited for someone who was to join her. From her shaded corner she watched the crowd of men pouring out from the Rest. In close vicinity there are low theatres and places of evil character which she could see. Not one of the men turned to enter any of these, though they were open and self-advertising in an obtrusive fashion. It is unhappily so common for the sailors to enter these places, that Madame Meuricoffre was thankfully impressed by the fact that she did not see a hesitating step among the men, though they were quite unaware of her presence.

Mr. Folkes, of Naples, is a strong supporter of the Rest. By his influence and kindness it was kept from going down completely during the absence of Mr. Burrowes. Mrs. Butler is anxious to second her sister's noble efforts, and to join in her appeal. She has visited the Naples Rest, and knows that the soul-saving work done there is vital.

ABRAHAM, THE FRIEND OF GOD.

WE recently referred to a profound remark made by the late Charles Reade, the novelist and dramatist, as to the "literary marvel" of the record of Scripture characters. Another point which might be emphasised still more is the marvel which they present historically. Take, by way of contrast, the dramatis personæ mentioned by the so-called "father of history," Herodotus, B.C., or by Tacitus, A.D. Beyond the inner circle of the schoolmen, who knows anything of them, or who cares to know? Indeed, it is a matter of faith with some learned critics that the history of Herodotus is no history, but a melange of fact and fable.

On the other hand, the lives of the worthies who flourished in the patriarchal age are much more familiar to us, speakly broadly, than are the lives of the greatest Englishmen of the last century, or even of the last generation. Moreover, the recorded surroundings of these lives are every year being verified by discovery, instead of being relegated to fiction like the stories of the Greek historian. Are not these facts proofs of the undying lustre that surrounds the sacred records, and of their fitness to be our teachers for all time of every clime?

We have testimony to prove that nothing, perhaps, that has ever appeared in our pages within recent years, has been read with more sustained interest and greater profit than Rev. F. B. Meyer's chapters on "Abraham, the friend of God." The volume containing these chapters is now in preparation, and the book will contain specially prepared illustrative engravings. These pictures are also embodied in THE CHRISTIAN ALMANACK, a copy of which accompanies each number of this week's issue.

"FRIEDENHEIM."—The "Home of Peace," 133, Mildmay-road, London, N., is an institution which we should rejoice to see largely multiplied. It is intended for persons in the last stages of illness: those who have been rejected or dismissed as hopeless by ordinary hospitals, and either have no friends to nurse them, or are too poor to command the needful care. No definite charge is made, as in most cases utter penury constitutes the strongest plea for admission; but, where possible, contributions towards the support of patients are gladly received. An experiment of two years' standing, and distinctly Christian in character, this little Home deserves support, and the example of its founder, Miss Davidson, is worthy of imitation.

The "Pen and Pencil" volume for 1888. It has long been felt that Ireland should be included in this series of Illustrated Table-Books. The present volume leaves untouched the burning political questions of the day, but it seeks to describe and illustrate the scenery, life, art, and antiquities of Ireland. The aim has been to indicate the beauties of such regions as Donegal and Kerry, the chief features of towns like Dublin and Belfast, the characteristic traits of the people, their ancient learning, culture, and art, in a way that should combine accuracy of information with power to arouse the sympathy and interest of the reader, and lead to the conviction that present troubles tend too much to the forgetfulness of the noble past in Ireland.

This book contains biographical sketches of Queen Louisa of Prussia, her sister-in-law, Princess William of Prussia, Elizabeth, Princess Charles of Hesse, and Elizabeth, Queen of Roumania. The sketches have been written, not merely to give the details of their lives, but with special reference to their religious character and Christian usefulness. The first two played a conspicuous part in Prussian history, during the Napoleon period; the third is closely allied to the British Royal Family; and the last has done much to promote the elevation of her subjects, and has made her mark in literature.

CONVENTION AT EDINBURGH.

THE PREMILLENNIAL ADVENT.

Last week a three-days' Conference was held in Edinburgh on this subject. The meetings were held in the Free Assembly Hall, which can seat about 1500. The attendance on each occasion, except the last, was from six to eight hundred. At the closing meeting the hall was nearly filled. A few ministers were present at every meeting.

The Convention began on Tuesday, October 9. The regular meetings, however, were prefaced by a powerful sermon by Dr. Pentecost, preached on Sabbath evening to an overflowing congregation; and by a prayer-meeting next day, conducted by Rev. Dr. Macdonald, of North Leith Free Church.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9.

Mr. W. E. Malcolm took the chair this morning. He stated that the purpose of the Conference was to enable people to place more value on the Second Coming, to watch for it more, and be more ready to wait for it. While we ought to be prepared for it, we ought also to be prepared for what might come before it. We could hasten it by our efforts in drawing others to Christ.

"PERSONAL AND PREMILLENNIAL."

Rev. Canon Fausset, of York, who was the first speaker, rejoiced that on the first occasion of his addressing an audience in Edinburgh his topic should be one of all others calculated to enable them to realise unity in Christ and to overleap the barriers of denomination. Man is the creature of hope, and the object of the Conference was to give definiteness to the Christian hope. Dr. Mackay, of Hull, said in his hearing that when this Second Advent truth dawned upon him, it was like a second conversion. We wonder at the dulness of the Jews as to the First Advent? And yet are we not worse than they, as to the Second Advent, when our Lord shall set up his kingdom in Jerusalem?

The speaker proceeded to an examination of the Greek terms, referring to the Advent (parousia, epiphaneia, &c.); he contended that the Coming is literal, and that there will be a personal and visible presence of our Lord upon earth. He pointed to 2 John 7, where it is actually declared that those who do not believe that Christ cometh in the flesh are deceivers and Antichrists. Many passages in both the Old and the New Testaments were cited in support of the view that the Coming will be a literal one. How remarkable that the early Church with one consent looked for Christ's return! Will the Millennium be preceded or succeeded by the Coming? There are three alternatives: (1) The period of one thousand years has already begun, and Christ is reigning now; (2) it is future, and not past, but is to come before, and not after the Second Advent; (3) the Lord will come before the Millennium. To this last we are shut up by many proofs. Is it not contrary to Scripture to hold the second view, when we are told He may come any day or hour? This cannot be if we are to have one thousand years' notice. Rev. xix. and Ps. cxlix. 6, 7 were dwelt upon. The signs of the Coming mentioned in 2 Thess. ii. and 2 Pet. iii. were adverted to, among them being the prevailing infidelity and intense worldliness. The age before the Flood is a picture of the age that is to precede the Second Advent. Lastly, the failure in missions was noticed. The heathen cannot be evangelised before Christ comes. Our age began with the resurrection and translation of Jesus: it closes with the advent of the millennial age.

Rev. Dr. J. Elder Cumming, of Sandyford Established Church, Glasgow, followed with a paper. The doctrine of the Second Advent, he said, was no mere barren theory, but was of practical import, and he discussed it under five heads: (1) The Lord is to return. (2) There is to be a Millennium. (3) There has been none up till now. (4) The Lord will not return in the midst of one. (5) It is not possible to insert it between the present time and the Second Coming. In support of his first proposition he quoted various texts, including John xiv. 3; Matt. xxvi. 64; Acts i. 11; Psalm lxxii. 8; Micah iv. and Isaiah ii. 1—4. Under the second head, he remarked that there never had been a thousand years without war; the Jews were not yet restored to Palestine; the world was not of one faith or one worship, and the world was not yet holy. We have it on record that in the years 1000 and 1001 the Christians of that day expected the period had closed.

PROPHETIC INTERPRETATION.

In the afternoon the subject was, "Hints for Interpreting the prophecies of the Second Advent, gathered from the Fulfilment of those concerning the First." Mr. James Mudie, Montrose, presided, and Rev. G. Wilson, St. Michael's, Edinburgh, offered prayer.

Rev. Dr. Andrew A. Bonar addressed the meeting. A remarkable feature of Eastern society, he said, is continuity. Customs mentioned in Scripture are still to be seen in the East. There is analogy here in regard to the fulfilment of prophecy. Those fulfilled tell us how predictions as to the future will be fulfilled—leaving out, of course, symbolic prophecies such as are found in Revelation. As an example of minute literal fulfilment he cited Joshua vi. 26, and its exact fulfilment 550 years afterwards as mentioned in 1 Kings xvi. 34. Note: (1) That literality of fulfilment is exemplified in the history of the Jewish nation. (2) Literality is specially illustrated by the facts of the First Coming. (3) How all this bears on the predictions of the Second Coming. The Jew is in every country, and is acclimatised everywhere. After other illustrations of fulfilment, he passed on to consider how the Word of God was fulfilled to the letter at the First Advent. Predictions as to the birth, betrayal, sufferings, and death of Christ, were dealt with in like manner. Applying this principle of literality to the prophecies concerning the Second Advent, Dr. Bonar proceeded to deal with the various passages bearing on that event. The coming again of our Lord, he said, in conclusion, will be as sudden, but as gentle as on his leaving.

Mr. Finlay Gibson remarked that he had learned these truths from the Word of God alone, after conversion, twenty-five years ago. The Scriptures are studded with proofs of the premillennial Advent.

THE ADVENT AND THE JEWS.

In the evening the subject was: "The Second Coming in its relation to the Jews."

Prof. Alexander Simpson, M.D., Edinburgh, who presided, said that in the extension of the kingdom of Christ God had three witnesses—the Word, the Church, and the Jews. The Jews have no home and no land to-day; but they are a distinct nation. You never speak of Jewish Germans, but of German Jews. Think, too, of the power of their purse. They have a knack of getting a living, derived from sly, old Jacob. Then what a hold they have of the Press! What might not be done by Reuter with a touch of one of his telegraph clerk's fingers!

Rev. James Smith, Dufftown, delivered an address that stirred the meeting greatly. The Jews, he said, are (1) to return to their own land; (2) to be spiritually awakened and converted, and (3) to take their place in the millennial age in the forefront of the nations. These events are to be brought about by the Second Advent. There is a great principle of action in the purposes of God when the Jews are concerned. The glory of God and that of Jesus are associated terms. When God deals with the nations, He deals with them in connection with the Jews. Mr. Smith referred pointedly to Deut. xxxii. 7, 8, and deduced the elders' secret therein spoken of from Gen. x. At present, the Jew had no brightness; he was morose, reserved, and suspicious. But at the Coming, the nation will go through a process of contrition the most solemn that is described in the Bible. It is not God's purpose to convert the nations just now; He is only going to take out a people from among the Jews and Gentiles alike. Various passages of Scripture were handled in proof of this.

Rev. John Wilkinson's address made a deep impression. How, he asked, can the Jew stand against the truth concerning Jesus while admitting the inspiration of the prophets? The Jew does not object to Jesus on the ground of his not having fulfilled certain passages in Isaiah. These he admits are almost a history of Jesus. The fifty-third chapter of that prophet renders it difficult for the Jew to say Jesus was not the Messiah. What the Jew wants is a Messiah that will meet all demands of prophecy. Do not call him blind and stupid; he has a better case against Christians than they against him. He is but partially blind. The great majority of Christians are totally blind as to the Second Advent. We have gone in for spiritual Israel too much, instead of simply distinguishing between spiritual Israel and spiritual seed of Abraham. We give all the curses to Israel, and all the blessings are for us. Our principle is to be literal as to the past, and spiritual as to the future. Mr. Wilkinson showed in an interesting way the meaning of the two genealogies of Jesus, that of Matthew and that of Luke, and the necessity for both. If you do not let the Jew interpret these Second Advent passages as you interpret the First, you will destroy his faith in the inspiration of Scripture, which holds out the hope of a Messiah to sit on the throne of David. Jerusalem is God's geographical centre and fulcrum for blessing the whole world. He has chosen Palestine as the best place for reaching the nations, a fact that is kept in view by far-sighted statesmen. God is making the lives of the Jews bitter, that they may be ready to go anywhere. The Christian has half a Messiah, and the Jew the other half. Put them together, and you have the sufferings of Christ, and the glory to follow.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10.

Colonel Gerald A. Agnew, who presided at the morning meeting, remarked that he came to hold premillennial views through studying the Bible alone in India.

Dr. Elder Cumming maintained that the premillennial doctrine is "An Integral Part of Scripture Revelation." He was twenty-five years an evangelical minister before he saw this doctrine. In a time of great sorrow he was sent to his Bible to ask about it. After one little step he found not obscurity but marvellous fulness and clearness in Scripture. The return of Jesus Christ is the goal of all the dispensations. He has been the Prince of Peace; hereafter he will be King of kings. Where He is spoken of in either Testament as King, the Second Advent is implied. The speaker proceeded to point out how the future glory of Christ to be manifested at his Second Coming is spoken of in the Psalms and the prophets. The doctrine is found, too, in almost every book of the New Testament. The New Testament ends as the Old; only in Malachi it is a mourning, while in Revelation it is a promise.

Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod, St. Stephen's Established Church, Edinburgh, took the place of Dr. Sinclair Paterson, who was prevented from being present. He said there was no subject that had a greater power of illuminating Christians. There are two principles of interpretation. (1) The end of the age is to be distinguished from the end of the world. (2) The Advent may embrace many Comings. There may be successive steps or epochs, each separated from the other by dispensations as long, or longer, than the present dispensation.

The resurrection may have several successive steps, Christ being the firstfruits. The doctrine has suffered by the enthusiasm of those who, instead of interpreting the Word, have turned prophets themselves. The speaker's points were illustrated from Paul's Epistles. Paul looked for no metaphorical Coming. How striking the absence of reference to death as a motive to Christians! No countenance is given to the view of a gradual development up to a triumph. Dr. Macleod dropped a remark which seemed to indicate that he does not believe in a personal reign of Christ with his saints at Jerusalem, a view that he thinks raises prejudice against premillenarians.

SCRIPTURE TESTIMONY.

In the afternoon the subject was: "The Testimony of Christ and his Apostles." Major-General Hoggan, C.B., presided. Rev. John Riddell, Glasgow, delivered an address that was very well received. Many Christians, he said, are so filled with the idea of the suffering and atoning Redeemer, they cannot find room for the glorified One. His heart was opened to this doctrine by the parable of the kingdom in Luke xix. 11. (1) We are taught that the kingdom was not to appear immediately. The nobleman "went into a far country." (2) Between the going and returning He is to be rejected. The appearing of the kingdom is heralded by a personal return. (3) At the place where He left them his servants are again to meet Him. No part of Christ's work can receive its proper crown except in this Coming. This was shown by reference to Christ's offices of priest and prophet. The personal appearing is just at the door. But is not this just what was said eighteen hundred years ago? May there not be other eighteen hundred years before it? There is a moral nearness and an actual, and it is our Father's will that we should have a moral nearness. We do not know the day or hour of the actual coming, but from Daniel we know the epoch. Various signs of the Coming were referred to. If Christ were to come to-night, he asked in closing, would your heart bound with joy?

Rev. James Drummond, Clackmannan, gave an address, in which the evils that are to precede the Second Coming were enlarged upon.

The evening subject was "The Importance of the Doctrine in Relation to present Religious Scepticism." Mr. William Sloan, Helensburgh, presided, and spoke of the scepticism created both inside and outside of the Church by neglect of this doctrine. Doubting it leads to doubting other doctrines.

Mr. G. H. Pember was the first speaker. Many Christians, he said, are satisfied on comparing our day with the end of the eighteenth century. For some years, he admitted, there did seem to be progress, but it is now different. The great doctrine, or rather fact, of the Atonement is being denied. Such deniers separate themselves from God, and are thrown back on their own intellects—poetry, moral philosophy, and Biblical criticism being resorted to for succour to men dying in sin. Prophecy is intended by God as a great miraculous witness. The Church is another witness between the two Advents. But when her love grew cold the miraculous powers went out of her, and the miraculous books were misunderstood. History is another witness. The Church thinks she can do all without the return of her Lord. If we do not believe the whole of the Bible, God will not let us believe parts. That is history's verdict. A graphic sketch was given of the historical events prophesied in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar about the image 2500 years ago. He incidentally remarked that the woman of Revelation—the false Church—is more than the Church of Rome. Bad as Rome is, there is not in her all the wickedness of "Babylon." He concluded by saying that it is hypocrisy to say we love Christ if we do not want to see Him.

Mr. Finlay Gibson also spoke briefly and incisively.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11.

Dr. Maclagan, M.D., Berwick, presided this morning, and in the course of a few remarks advised no one to despise his pastor for non-belief in premillennial doctrine.

Rev. Dr. Andrew A. Bonar was the first speaker on the subject of the meeting: "The Importance of the Doctrine as a Motive and Help to Holiness." His belief in this doctrine extended over sixty years. The first time he felt a thrill was on the occasion of Edward Irving preaching in St. George's in Edinburgh. He was reading the first metrical version of the forty-fifth Psalm—

> My heart brings forth a goodly thing
> My words that I indite
> Concern the King: my tongue's a pen
> Of one that swift doth write.

At the words "Concern the King" the whole congregation gave a start. He then attended Irving's lectures, which were delivered at seven in the morning. It was the calm reading of Matt. xxiv., however that settled him. He consulted his divinity professor, the great Dr. Chalmers, who replied that he was at the subject himself. He advised the speaker and his fellow-students to go on with the study of it; and before he died he himself was ranged among the pre-millennialists. The study put politics out of our heads. We are not to think that holders of this doctrine have greater holiness than other Christians. Every believer has in him the germ of the doctrine, in personal love to the Saviour; and in a sense all are looking for Him. He then mentioned eighteen features of Christian life affected by cherishing this hope of the Coming. In alphabetic order they were: (1) Awakening; (2) boldness; (3) comfort; (4) contentment; (5) diligence; (6) holiness; (7) liberality and kindness; (8) moderation (yieldingness); (9) prayerfulness; (10) patience; (11) rest (at the appearing, not at death); (12) reproach wiped away; (13) reward; (14) salvation in its fulness; (15) self-denial; (16) separation from the world; (17) watchfulness; (18) worldliness counteracted. On each of these he enlarged.

Rev. Thomas Grant, Tain, said he regarded this Convention as one of the midnight cries of the Coming of the Lord.

In the afternoon the Lord's Supper was celebrated, about 600 partaking of the Sacrament. Rev. Dr. Black, Inverness, officiated.

In the evening the subject was: "The Doctrine: a Stimulus to Zeal for the Conversion of Jews and Gentiles." Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey took the chair. Rev. J. Wilkinson gave another address, in the course of which he gave a narrative of his great work among the Jews, that made a deep impression on the audience.

Rev. H. Grattan Guinness also delivered an able address, which we have not space to report. The Convention closed with a thanksgiving meeting on Friday, conducted by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and a sermon on Sunday evening by Mr. Henry Edwards, of Brighton. A full report of the Convention is to be published shortly by Messrs. Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh. Mr. Copplestone, Edinburgh, was associated with Mr. Mathieson in arranging for the Convention.

TORQUAY.—November will be a month of great religious activity in Torquay. The Episcopal churches are to have a mission on parochial lines, for which great preparations are being made. Among the missioners who are announced are Canon Body, Rev. W. H. Aitken, and Rev. Dr. Pigou, of Halifax. The united Nonconformist churches are equally busy, and are preparing for their crusade with enthusiasm. The committee are fortunate in securing three powerful Gospel preachers in Rev. Newman Hall, Rev. S. R. Macphail (Liverpool), and Rev. W. Denton Sargeant (London). The hon. sec. of the mission is Rev. C. Knibbs, minister of Abbey-road Chapel. He has successfully organised all the large united missions in Torquay for many years, Rev. D. Thomas, Wesleyan minister, is assisting him in the preparations. Great blessing is expected from these combined efforts.

SPITAFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

Mr. James Sharpless, the superintendent, continues to do a good and interesting work in connection with this Mission. The twenty-sixth annual report, just published under the title of "Gathered Sheaves," is full of information of a most cheering character as to the progress of the work. The poor dock-labourers are still looked after with much care by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, whilst Mr. W. C. Miles, who has for years been an active friend of the Mission, renders welcome assistance in various ways.

Remarkable stories are told of wayward sons returning to the parental roof completely changed in heart and mind, of the eyes of the spiritually blind being opened, and of those who had been lost being found. There is obviously a power behind Mr. Sharpless's simple effort, and that power is God's Spirit, which now, as ever, convicts men of sin, righteousness, and judgment. Christian kindness does much to commend the Gospel to the Spitalfields poor, and free teas have been greatly blessed as preliminaries to the endeavour to present the bread of life to perishing souls.

The young are also remembered, and it is gratifying to know that efforts among them are yielding encouraging results. A female visitor in the homes of the people is still badly required by the Mission. Mr. Sharpless's address is 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

A WHITECHAPEL FUND.

The Dowager Lady Kinnaird desires our readers to join in raising a fund to bring the Gospel to bear on that dark corner in Whitechapel which has been disgraced by such hideous crimes. If the Gospel sufficed to change the cannibal inhabitants of the Fiji Islands into a nation of Christian worshippers, it is sufficient, and alone sufficient, to turn the darkest spots in London into gardens of the Lord.

Lady Kinnaird desires to raise a fund to be expended in the following agencies:—

(1) To provide a colporteur to go from house to house with Christian literature for sale. £40 or £50 a year paid to the Christian Colportage Association would provide such an agent.

(2) A London City missionary, or an extra one, for which about £80 or £90 per annum would be needed to be sent to the London City Mission.

(3) A Bible-woman in connection with the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission at a cost of about £40 per annum.

(4) A Young Women's Christian Association with a few beds suitable for casual cases, and a resident superintendent.

A mission-room in connection with these agencies would form a powerful auxiliary to them all. Lady Kinnaird earnestly appeals to the Christians to aid in establishing a fund to be called "The Whitechapel Fund," which may be paid either to the office of this paper into this account, or to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

RETRIBUTIVE PROVIDENCE. — Melbourne Punch recently published a cartoon representing a European girl in the clutches of an opium monster. The opium monster wears the head of a Chinaman. We thought (says an Australian contemporary), as we looked upon the picture, "Verily there is a God that judgeth on the earth." It is not so many years since we forced opium on the Chinese people by fire and sword, despite the protest of their rulers. Now we have cause to complain that they are debauching our girls with the drug we forced upon them. Curses have come home to roost more quickly than anyone could have anticipated.

For the Young.

THREE STORIES OF BRIGANDS.

(Given by E. de Engelhardt in his "Reminiscences of Pastor J. M. Ludwig.")

In 1814 (said my pastor), I was about to return to Zurich, after visiting my brother at Aaran. Travelling was by no means safe, for the last war had brought many vagabonds into the country. My brother pointed out to me a way across the top of the mountain, and I decided at once to take this short but solitary path. On reaching the top of the wood, I saw very plainly the path indicated, which led precipitately into the valley.

Suddenly I noticed, in front of me, four men sitting together. I did not like their appearance, and felt sure they were not meditating any good; but I could not avoid passing them, for they had observed me at once. The Lord is with me, I thought, and I went boldly on. No sooner had I come up to where they were sitting than one of them asked me, in a rough voice, "Are you alone?"

"No, I am not alone," I answered, quietly, and seated myself beside them, to show that I had no fear. I knew that the Lord was with me to help me. Well, I stayed thus by their side for about half an hour, though I must acknowledge the time appeared very long to me. Evidently the men expected to see my companions arrive; but at last one of them suddenly exclaimed: "I do not believe there is anyone coming!" Then, springing upon me, he seized my knapsack. I cried to the Lord to help me in this time of need. All at once I remembered that my brother had given me a whistle for my sister's children at Zurich, and taking it quickly from my pocket, I sounded it loudly. The ruffians looked terror-stricken. At the same time two strong-looking men, armed with scythes, ran to my rescue, and at their approach my tormentors took flight. When I afterwards looked back on my wonderful escape, I was full of gratitude to God that He had given me rest and trust in his presence at a time of such danger.

Another time I had to cross a forest of bad fame, with a very large sum of money, amounting to one thousand francs in gold, which I carried in my belt. After going a short distance I saw some way off two men, whose appearance was suspicious. I suddenly remembered a fact I had read which might help me. Indeed, it seemed like direct guidance from God in this emergency, for I was able to put into practice what I had read. Passing quietly behind an eminence, which hid me from the bandits, I collected hastily a heap of little stones which were there, and I filled my belt with them, after having slipped the gold which it contained into my coat pockets. Then, wrapping up my belt in a handkerchief, I threw it over my shoulders, and, quietly leaving my hiding-place, I continued my way.

Soon after, I overtook the two men, who allowed me to pass in safety. However, I had not taken more than two or three steps when they seized my belt. I did not make much resistance, but, leaving it in their hands, I hurried on. You may imagine how glad I was to arrive at the end of my journey with my money, and when I pictured to myself the disappointment of the robbers upon discovering my ruse, I could not help laughing heartily. And the dear old pastor and I laughed once more as he related the story. Surely it was a joy that heaven could enter into!

You have heard two stories of brigands; I will now tell you a third (said my venerable friend). I was very poor when I was a student, so poor that for three days I almost starved myself, allowing myself daily a ration of potatoes, without salt or dripping, three for breakfast and supper, and five for dinner, until the sack was empty. When the holidays arrived I started on foot for the Canton of Grisons, where my father lived. I had scarcely a florin in my pocket, and there were yet thirty leagues before me to travel. I was obliged to cross the Forest of Senn, which is considered very dangerous. After proceeding for some distance I found myself suddenly confronted by a strong-looking man, armed with a loaded pistol. Pointing it at me, he shouted, "Your purse, or I will fire!" "I am a poor man," I replied; and, drawing out my money, I added, "Look! this is all I have to take me home. I have thirty leagues further to go." The robber seemed at once to perceive that this was the truth, and he allowed me to continue my way in possession of my little bit of money. With a heart full of joy and gratitude to God for his kind care of me, I walked to the next village.

On arriving at the post-office, I saw a policeman; the same moment the robber who had attacked me in the forest came up. He recognised me and lowered his eyes; then, raising them, he looked at me with an expression of shame. I smiled at him in a friendly way and gave him a reassuring nod. I then continued my way until I reached the next forest. Here I again met the same man! He was waiting for me in order to show me the shortest way. I had no reason to fear his pistol this time, for, gratefully offering me his hand, he said, "What a good fellow you are! I thank you heartily, and shall never forget you." He did not leave me until we were out of this dangerous wood. Then, again pressing my hand, he disappeared, while I said to myself, "The Lord can keep and guard his own, even from brigands!"

QUIET WAYS ARE BEST.

What's the use in worrying,
Of hurrying
And scurrying,
Everybody flurrying
And breaking up their rest?
When everyone is teaching us,
Preaching and beseeching us
To settle down and end the fuss;
For quiet ways are best.
The rain that trickles down in showers
A blessing brings to thirsty flowers;
And gentle zephyrs gather up
Sweet fragrance from each brimming cup.
There's ruin in the tempest's path,
There's ruin in a voice of wrath,
And they alone are blest,
Who early learn to dominate
Themselves, their violence abate,
And prove by their serene estate
That quiet ways are best.

Nothing's gained by worrying,
By hurrying
And scurrying.
With fretting and with flurrying
The temper's often lost;
And in pursuit of some small prize
We rush ahead, and are not wise,
And find the unwonted exercise
A fearful price has cost.
'Tis better far to join the throng
That do their duty right along;
Reluctant they to raise a fuss,
Or make themselves ridiculous.
Calm and serene in heart and nerve,
Their strength is always in reserve,
And nobly stands each test;
And every day and all about,
By scenes within, and scenes without,
We can discern, with ne'er a doubt,
That quiet ways are best.

THE GOSPEL HALL, WOOD GREEN.

For twenty-three years the Gospel of the grace of God has been urgently proclaimed in the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green, N., for the enlightenment of those sitting in darkness, and the edification of those who have believed unto salvation. The hall in which the meetings have been held during that period has just given place to a much larger building. The efforts put forth, in loving faith and hope, by many servants of God, have proved very fruitful, as was joyously testified on Tuesday evening last week at a public meeting in celebration of the opening of the new hall.

Mr. Wm. Robertson, who is co-trustee with Mr. R. C. Morgan, presided, and in the course of some opening remarks, specially referred to the encouraging success of the efforts put forth in the Sunday-school. Mr. James Botterell, another early worker in connection with the hall, mentioned with joy the fact that children who had received instruction in the school have gone to remote parts of the world to proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus. Messrs. Gawin Kirkham, R. J. Cope, R. Paton, and R. Burn, followed with some earnest words. Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered a brief address, in which "workers together with God" were asked to direct the eye of faith to the glorious structure, the Church of the First-born, which, with the co-operation of his children, God is slowly and silently rearing.

Messrs. J. Townley, J. W. C. Fegan, T. Kirtley, and R. C. Morgan, also spoke briefly, words of instruction being interspersed with cheering allusions, by way of testifying to God's goodness in blessing the endeavours of his servants who have told the story of his love in the Gospel Hall. T.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.

Pastor de Jonge writes:—"The work at the Brussels Exhibition goes on marvellously. Thousands of tracts and Gospels are already distributed, and we go on every day with the work. The Gospel tent is crowded every night."

Mr. Oatts, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Glasgow, states that many proofs of blessing from the tract distribution at Glasgow Exhibition have been received; 200,000 tracts have been given away.

We need £500 for immediate wants; and if we are to do work at the Paris Exhibition next year we must have guarantors for another £500 or £1000.

J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary.
Bridge House, Blackfriars, E.C.

THE GLASGOW EXHIBITION.—Mr. William M. Oatts, the general secretary of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., writes us as follows:—On Saturday (October 6) a census was taken of all those who entered the four drinking-bars of the Exhibition. The number of visits paid during that one day was 32,230. Of these, 18,246 were young men apparently under thirty years of age. This does not mean all the drinking that went on at the Exhibition last Saturday, for no account was taken of the two dining-rooms where liquor can be procured. And, further, one of the enumerators was ordered out of the court where he was standing, therefore his returns want the last two hours of the day, which were the busiest. I desire to call the attention of the Executive to this fact, that I observed many young men under the influence of drink entering the bars and getting further supplies. Surely this is contrary to the conditions under which the licence is granted?

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

(Communicated by R. Scott Moncrieff, one of their Descendants.)

II.

How little did James Nimmo dream that at this very time one was being specially trained, in a distant part of Scotland, through experiences precisely similar to his own, by "the law as a schoolmaster" to bring her to Christ; destined ere long to be his Christiana and a fellow-pilgrim almost from the commencement of his journey from the City of Destruction; his helpmeet and solace in the truest sense, through many long years of persecution at home and exile abroad.

This was Elizabeth, a daughter of Brodie of Lethen, a gentleman of old family and good estate near Elgin, in Morayshire. Her father, to judge from the references to him in her narrative, appears to have been a religious man, though without any sympathy for the Covenanters. As to her mother, the narrative is as silent as that of James Nimmo is concerning his mother, . Born about the year 1658, she had reached the age of eighteen before she was brought under any religious convictions. At this time her parents used to attend the Parish Church, where an Episcopal minister had taken the place of the outed Presbyterian minister; but she had found his preaching so profitless that she had ceased to attend on it. Roused to some anxiety for her soul,

HER EXPERIENCE IS THUS DESCRIBED.

"After this I began to make conscience of prayer and reading the Holy Scriptures. Then the Lord began to discover more clearly my lost state by nature, and I was made to walk heavily; and the first thing I fell to was diligence in duties and a multiplying of them; but this was a satisfaction of no value. Yet I stuck long in this mire, till at length the Lord did let me see, though darkly, that except I got into Christ I would never find mercy. Then the revelation of the Gospel was sweet to me; but oh! I felt great unwillingness in my heart to be beholden to Him alone for salvation. It is true I was made many times to say 'Lord, overcome me!' yet I was many months ere the stubbornness of the will was subdued; and many a time, if one reverent thought of the Lord would have saved me from hell, I could not reach it.

"I had many sad tossings with unbelief; for nearly a year I could never say once 'My God.' I was afraid I had sinned the sin unto death. I remember I was one day in great distress of mind, crying out, 'What shall I do?—what shall I do?' That word was powerfully borne in upon me, 'Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' I objected that these words were directed to persons pricked at the heart for sin, but I was hardened and obdurate, and therefore would not look at it. But that day, reading my ordinary in Rutherford's 'Christ Dying and Drawing,' the Lord made him speak to my case as if he had been conversing with me. 'Oh (says he), when the Lord begins to offer mercy the soul saith, Oh me, mercy! will the Lord show mercy to an unhumbled heart like mine? Oh pride—and pride in the highest degree!—thinkest thou to be first humble, and then come to Christ? No, no; you must come to Christ that He make you humble; one sight of Him will humble thee more than seven years looking on sin.' I thought this a strange providence. Then I began to see my pride in seeking that in myself which I should seek in Christ. I thought to have spun humiliation out of my own bowels; but glory to Him who delivered me from this hellish self!

"By the good providence of God I went to the west end of Moray, where the Gospel was faithfully preached by several godly ministers. I heard Mr. Thomas Hog preach on the woman with the bloody issue, and her coming to Christ. He clearly made out that Christ was always the last remedy to which the soul would betake itself. She spent all on physicians before she came to Christ. This was my case: I was in great distress that morning before I went to sermon. Satan was still saying I need never pray more, for no means would help me, nor was there any mercy for me. But I mind I fell, in my ordinary, to read the last chapter of Isaiah. I resolved I would read, and so read on. At last I read that verse, 'Will I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord.' On this I held up the Bible, and cried, 'Thy Word, Lord!' And He was pleased to pity me, and help me to believe in his power.
